Well, who can read this of Lord Lister without thinking of the Great Physician, and his passage through the hospital wards of the common life of men? With what infinite gentleness he ministered to bruised reeds and broken hearts! What tender names he gave them! "Son!" "Daughter!" He was never rough, never brusque, never impatient, never in a hurry! His tender approach was part of the cure. His very touch had healing power. He handled the burdens of men in such a way as to immediately make them lighter. Many a broken heart was strangely comforted by his presence even before the life had been made whole. Most surely the hospital work of our Savior was a school of gentleness!

Have we quite learned this way? "Teach me thy way, O Lord!" Do we know how to lift broken limbs? Do we know how to handle broken lives? Do we find more delight in denouncing sins than in helping sinners? Are we more expert in abstract anaylsis than in practical comfort? There is surely an almost crushing need of gentleness in days like these. Let us make no mistake about it, we are not less strong when we become gentle. Real gentleness is not weakened strength; it is strength disciplined, purified, refined. Gentleness is matured strength. It is the full corn in the ear. Roughness has never finished its training. It needs to go to school.

And what is the school? It is the school of the Spirit. We need the fellowship of the Holy Spirit. And in that academy school-time is never over. Every new grace unveils another yet to be won. "Glories upon glories hath our God prepared!" One of the treasures of the school is the grace of gentleness. Only we do not so much acquire it, we become it. It is not a work, it is a fruit. It becomes part of our nature as we become partakers of the Divine nature, in Jesus Christ our Lord. "The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth" (2 Tim. 2:24, 25).

A CHILD'S PRAYER

FATHER WHOM I cannot see,
Look down from heaven on little me;
Let angels through the darkness spread
Their holy watch above my bed;
And keep me safe because I am
The heavenly Shepherd's little lamb;
Teach me to do as I am told
And help me be as good as gold.

HUMBLENESS WITH FAITH BRINGS EXALTATION

1 Peter 5:6, 7

"HUMBLE YOURSELVES therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time: casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you."

ARE WE TOOL MAKERS?

THE INFLUENCE of anything good is lasting. Almost every day a man I know spends a few minutes looking at a steel engraving, which never has lost its powerful impressiveness. It is a famous old picture known as

"The Iron Worker and King Solomon"

When the temple of Jerusalem was completed the king gave a feast to the artizans employed in its construction. It had been announced that the craftsmen who had done most to complete the great structure should be seated next to the king. On unveiling the throne it was found that a blacksmith had usurped the seat of honor, not yet awarded, whereupon the people clamored and the guards rushed to cut him down. "Let him speak," commanded Solomon.

"O King, thou hast invited all craftsmen but me; yet how could these builders have raised the temple without the tools I have furnished?"

"True," decreed Solomon, "the seat is his of right; all honor to the iron workers."

This is the Jewish legend of record. The moral of this is, that we must never despise the man of small affairs, for it often is the foundation laid by him that enables the most powerful to succeed. Also, that no matter how big or great we may be, we must never refuse to receive instruction from whatever source presented, for often the person we deem less proficient is the best instructor.

OPPORTUNITY

MASTER OF human destinies am I!
Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait.
Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate
Deserts and seas remote, and passing by
Hovel and mart and palace soon or late
I knock unbidden once at every gate.

If sleeping, wake if feasting, rise before
I turn away. It is the hour of fate,
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore,
I answer not, and I return no more.

This refers to human opportunity. While life holds God, through the sacrifice of Jesus his Son, pleads with mankind to renounce the hidden things of this world and come unto him and live. God . . . would have all men to be saved, and to come unto a knowledge of the truth.

THE STORY OF DANIEL

Hazel B. Titus, 12 years old

DARIUS WAS king. He chose one hundred and twenty princes over the whole kingdom. He chose three presidents, and the first was Daniel. The people liked him better than the rest because of his good spirit.

After a while they tried to find fault with him, but they could not. The councillors, the captains, and the princes went to the king's palace and said, "Thou, O King, live forever." They built a statue and had the king sign a decree that no one should pray to any other god for thirty days. If they did, they would put them into a den of lions.

Daniel would always go to his room with his window open toward Jerusalem and pray three times a day.

One day some people caught him praying to his God. They put him into a den of lions.

Early the next morning Darius went to the den and found Daniel unharmed. Darius told him that he would put the people in the den of lions that caught him praying. They put the men, their wives and children into the den, and the lions devoured them, but Daniel was delivered from harm.

Moral

Daniel loved God more than all else, and he was willing to give up his life and worldly position. He had faith in his God and perfect confidence in his word.

THE WORLD AND THE SPIRIT

WE HAVE just returned from an afternoon walk that took us through a section of town thickly settled by Italians who were celebrating with brass bands, fireworks, colored lights and excitement in general what they are pleased to term St. Anthony's Day.

The section celebrating consisted of four blocks, two on the avenue and two on the street, crossing each other at right angles, all forming the sign of the cross. Every house was decorated with flags. The street was a fairy bower of colored electric lights supported by poles gaily decorated with bunting and flags. A shrine, in which was placed an image of the saint, also lighted candles had been erected and was the centre of festivities. The band consisting of twenty pieces, in its parading of the streets never passed the shrine without stopping and playing some special air. While viewing all this ceremony my mind reverted to the words of the prophet Samuel, "The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." "And to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." No, my dear readers, God is not worshipped with loud noises, flying flags, brass bands, colored lights nor fireworks, beautiful as all these things may be. The apostle Paul said, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man;" and again, "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and length, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." And the apostle Peter in addressing the woman said: "Let not your adorning be outward . . . nor the wearing of gold, or the putting on of apparel. But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord."

TEN PRIZES FOR COMPOSITION

EDITOR OF THE RESTITUTION:

AS I am really interested in the young people, I send this prize offer in hope you can insert it soon. I would have sent it through Brother Donaldson as it is within his department, but if I did it would make it too late for any benefit to the young folks.

Subject: "Temptations to be Avoided."

5 Prizes for complete character analysis and doctrinal guide.

2 Prizes of 50 cents, 2 prizes of $1.00, 1 prize of $2.00.

Rules: The subject to be treated from the Bible standpoint and applied to our daily lives. No help must be asked or received in preparation. The article must be written in ink, on one side only of paper and mailed to J S. Lyon, Citronelle, Ala., before Aug 1, fully prepaid.

In judging merit the following scale will be observed: subject matter 40 points; presentation 30 points; correctness 10 points; writing 10 points; general appearance 10 points.

Successful contestants in order may select either the money or analysis prizes. The character analysis will show each one what his good and bad qualities are, what talents he should develop and weakness seek to overcome. It will tell him accurately what line of occupation he would enjoy and be most successful in following. This analysis requires from the one analyzed two photographs, and other information, for which blanks to be filled out will be sent to those who are entitled to them. Such an analysis could not be secured for less than $15.00 anywhere, and none of our young folks can afford to not try for one of the fine prizes offered. The winning composition will be published.

"Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more" (Psa. 104:35).

FROM AN OLD COPY OF THE RESTITUTION

BE BRIEF, for it is with words as with sunbeams—the more they are condensed the deeper they burn.

If you get angry with a man or woman make up your mind what you are going to say and then don't say it.

If you bring a smile to the trembling lips of another you will soon discover that a smile is alighting on your own lips.

If you would have treasure in heaven you must lay it up: no other can do it for you.

Avoid brag; it will bring you down in the eyes of those whose good opinion you most desire. Cultivate simplicity in action and in conversation. Promise little, perform much.

MR. YOU

WE ALL ask so many questions of the other fellow and of his interests, when in reality we know so little of ourselves and our own affairs.

Our disposition to be critical with others gets ahead of our ambition to be confidential with ourselves.

The individual who should interest you more than any other inidividual is you, Mr. You.

It is you who makes peace with God. It is you who places your faith in Jesus. It is you who obeys or disobeys. Salvation is a matter between God and yourself through Jesus Christ our Lord. No one can take your place. Get acquainted with yourself; be confidential and take the whole matter to God.

TAKE IN ALL KINDS OF THINGS

"It ain't so hard to be contented with the things we have," said the old woman dolefully, "it's bein' contented with the things we haven't that's so tryin'."

"I don't know about that; I don't know," said Uncle Silas. "When we begin to look at things our neighbors have and we havn't, we always pick out just the things we want. They live in a nice house, we say, and we have only a little one. They have money, and we need to count every penny. They have an easy life, and we have to work. We never say they had the typhoid fever, but it never came to us. They have a son in the insane asylum, but our brains are sound. Staggering feet go into their grand door, but nothing worse than tired ones come home to us at night. Your see when you begin to call Providence to account for the things that don't come to us it's only fair to take in all kinds of things."—Presbyterian Messenger.

CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE

The Annual California Conference of the Church of God will be held this year in Pomona, from July 17th to July 25th inclusive. A good program is being arranged.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"—Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, O., JULY 13th, 1920. NUMBER 26

A Sermon to Preachers

I AM greatly disappointed with some preachers of today
With their logic and their ethics; their aristocratic way;
With their science and their theories and their new theology,
Full of everything but Jesus and his love for you and me.

There is plenty in the Bible for the preachers of today,
If they will but search its pages and for help divine would pray;
For God's Word is everlasting and it never will grow old,
'Tis indeed a priceless treasure, far more precious e'en than gold.

What we want is consecration in a good true man of God,
With a Bible education, and a love for God's dear word;
Who can lead us and direct us to the Truth, the Life, the Way,
Which brings peace to soul and body through the burdens of the day.

If the preachers in our churches would preach Jesus crucified,
How through love for us he suffered, and through love for us he died,
Then our pews would not be empty, as so many are today,
But be filled to overflowing in a pentecostal way.

What we need is just plain gospel, in the good old fashioned way,
Instead of Emerson or Shakespeare, or some topic of the day;
What care we for all their sayings, or their teachings true and tried?
We just want the dear old story of the Savior crucified.

That alone can make men better, that alone can make men free,
Just the precious dear old story of God's love for you and me;
That is what the people's wanting, there is where the saints will be;
Where they hear the same old story, which they learned at mother's knee. Selected by Brother Geo. Tabor.

O LORD, that lends me life, lend me a heart replete with thankfulness.—Shakespeare.

Prophetic Signs of the Times

Time Periods, Dates, "Times of the Gentiles," and the Final Consummation

THERE IS another principle to be taken into account if we are to unfold the time-periods: namely, that the days of these typical times stand for years in their application. Thus, days may be called factors as they are minatures of time standing for larger periods. To explain, let us read Num. 14:34: "After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise." The children of Israel, as a punishment, wandered in the wilderness a year for each day they had searched the land.

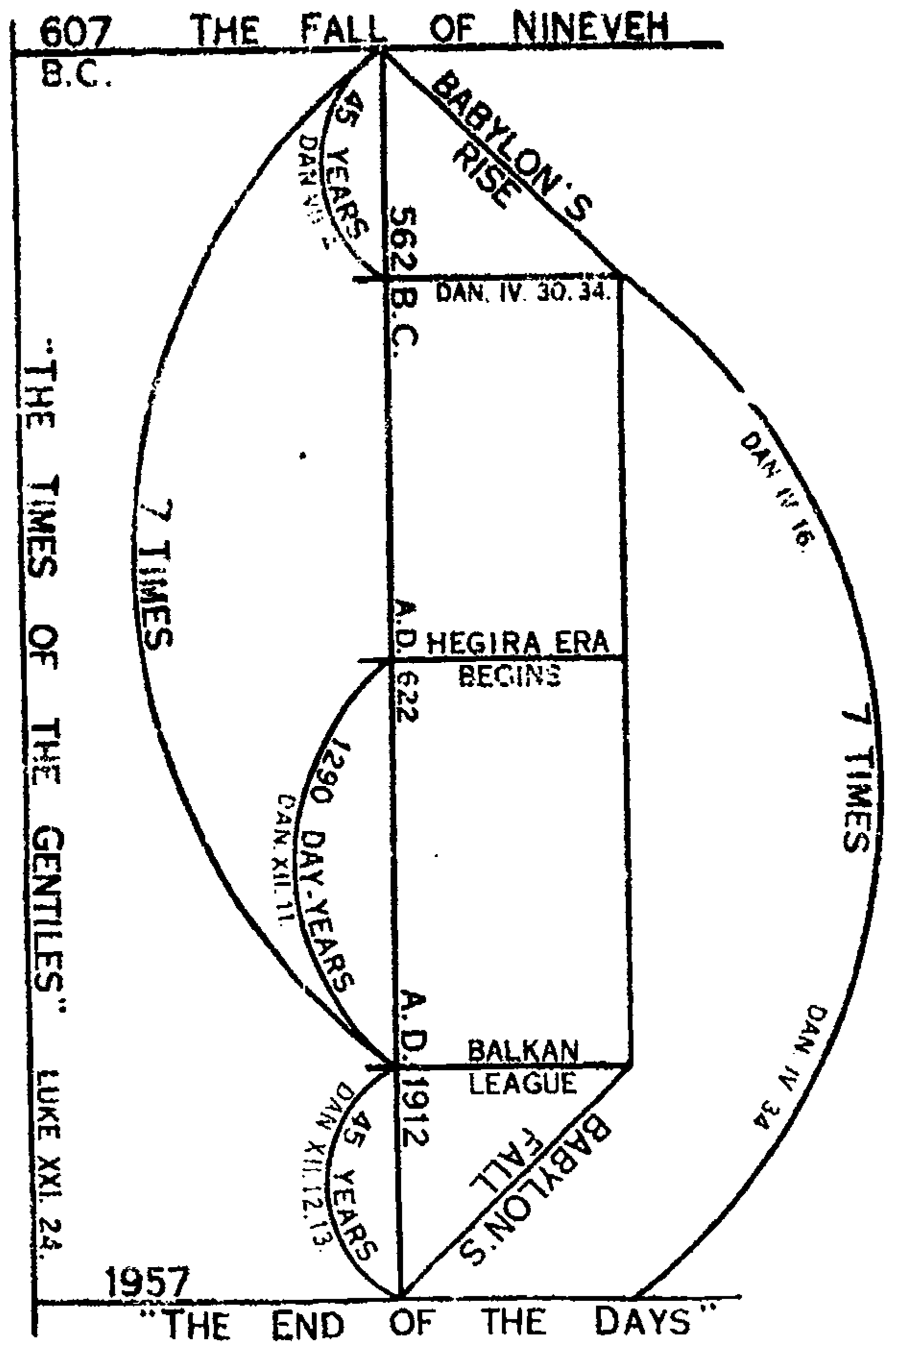
Again in Ezekiel, the 4th chapter, it is recorded that the prophet was told to lie on his right side, as a sign to the house of Israel, 390 days, figuratively, bearing the iniquity of Israel, and also forty days on his left side for the iniquity of Judah. He was told that each day represented a year; in all a period of 430 years. Just that period elapsed for the time, B. C. 592, when Ezekiel enacted the sign to the captives of Israel at Babylon, to B. C. 162, when the Jews under Judas Maccabaeus obtained a religious decree of freedom from their enemies, the Syrians. (Britannica Ency. vol. 27; p. 197.)

So it is readily seen that the principle of applying a year to each day of these prophetic period has scriptural authority and has been clearly demonstrated on at least two different occasions. Accordingly, the three and a half times, equaling 1260 days, stand for 1260 years.

The next step in order to properly place these Prophetic Times will be considered in B. C. dates.

HISTORICAL BASIC DATES MUST BE RIGHT

We cannot hope to properly estimate the culmination of these time-periods unless we find their proper commencements. This phase of the study of the times has been one of the main causes of much difficulty, as there has been such a wide variation among the best authorities in regard to the B C. dates, especially of those before the beginning of the Medo-Persian Empire, B. C. 538. Back to this time there is now common agreement, which is the result of the comparatively recent discoveries of ancient inscriptions: but going further back the best authorities still vary, and the variation amounts to more than a century by the time Abraham's day is reached.



In our former work, "The Time of the End in Relation to the Millenary Week," published in 1910, Rollin was followed in allowing Xerxes of Persia but a twelve year reign, which may now be amply verified to have been twenty. The recent edition in 1911 of the Ency Britannica, vol. 23 p 468, has the following to say about Rollins' works: "His once famous Ancient History (Paris 1730-38), and the generally read Roman History, which followed it, were so-called compilations, uncritical and somewhat inaccurate, but they instructed and interested generation after generation almsot to the present day."

A SATISFACTORY BASIC DATE

We will then take a date, the 2nd year of Darius, B. C. 520, upon which there is now agreement, and, by aid of the Scriptures, cover the periods upon which the chronologists still disagree.

It will be seen by consulting the references given at the top and bottom of the columns of figures on the table of the Dispersion to the Christian Era* that there are six interlocking and therefore unmoveable arches of time covering the period from B. C. 520 back to 627, the 13th year of Josiah's reign. Thus an arrangement of dates deduced from Scripture that may be depended upon is secured. This will take us back far enough for our consideration of the longer periods that reach to our own days.

*These will be published soon in The Restitution. Editor.

THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES

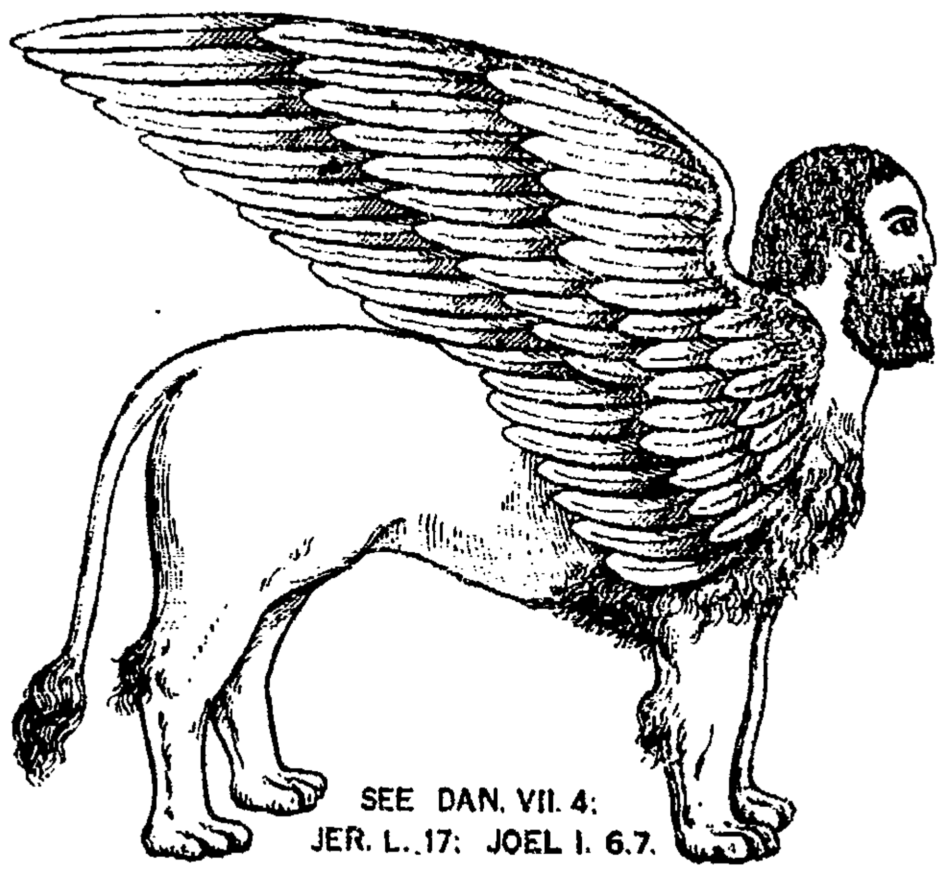
Now in considering the time-periods, it will first be our object to reduce to figures the phrase of Luke 21:24, "the times of the Gentiles."

The time of beginning commences with the first World Empire, which began with the fall of Nineveh, or the plucking of the wings of the Assyrian Lion.

WHEN GENTILE TIMES BEGAN

The Assyrian government at Nineveh was, as we have seen by Joel 1:6, 7 (see also Jer. 1:17), represented as a winged lion. The rivalry for world supremacy between these two branches of this Assyrian Lion-power, Nineveh and Babylon, came to an end with the overthrow of Nineveh in B. C. 607, which occurred fifty-four years before the 3rd of Nabonidus, B C. 533, according to an inscription now in evidence at Constantinople.

THE ASSYRIAN WINGED MAN-HEADED LION



SEE DAN. VII. 4: JER. L. 17: JOEL I. 6.7.

THE TIME OF THE BEGINNING

The duration of the time that Daniel "beheld," or from the time "the wings thereof were plucked" (B. C. 607) until "a man's heart was given it," that is, when Nebuchadnezzar's heart was changed from that of a beast's to a man's in B. C. 652, was a period of forty-five years (Dan. 4:16, 34; 7: 4). These forty-five years that Daniel "beheld" in vision, was a period for ancient Babylon's rise, or development. In the 30th verse of the 4th chapter, Nebuchadnezzer, who was a man of sign (Dan. 2:38), said, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?" It will be seen by this statement that he was boastful as well as proud of his world conquest and the making of Babylon the "Golden city," and the "Gory of kingdoms" (Isa. 13:19; 14: 4). Also, he made an idol as an object of worship (Dan. 3:1, 4, 5); and history tells us that it was of himself.

Nebuchadnezzar as a representative man had to be humbled and have a change of heart from that of a beast's, just as the attitude of the present-day powers must be changed by God's judgments. He was given a man's heart "at the end of the days," that is, of his life, for he died that same year, B. C. 562, also, "at the end of the days" of the minature, or typical seven years (times) of his exile.

WALTER L. CURTIS.

"O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times? A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign."

The Jewish and Arab Problems

LATE REPORTS from Palestine show there are now in that land over 100,000 Arabs; but on account of the bitter persecution and massacre of Jews in Russia and in all Catholic countries, thousands of Jews are disregarding all barriers, and are crowding into Constantinople, determined to live or die in Palestine. Over 400,000 poor, homeless Jews of the war torn countries of Europe are pleading for permission to settle in Palestine; but the Zionist commission feels incapable of providing work and supplies for more than 30,000 this year and for 100,000 next year.

Prince Feisal, the head of the Arabs, and Mr. Wiezman, the head of the British Zionists, favor the Jews and Arabs co-operating together in the development of Palestine; but Israel Zangwill says that Palestine is too small a country for the development of two nations, and that the millions of starving Jews of Europe need employment as badly as do the Arabs, and that the Arabs should sell out their possessions to the Jews and go back to Arabia and to Mesopotamia, and leave Palestine to its rightful owners, the house of Israel. He also says that if they will not peaceably vacate the country that they must be forcibly ejected.

The light shed on this question by the sure word of prophecy, written from 2500 to 3400 years ago, shows that Zangwill's plan is in harmony with with God's plan, and therefore must succeed.

It may be be that while the military rule of Great Britain continues over Jerusalem, that Mohammedans, Roman Catholics, and corrupt Protestantism will be protected in their superstitious worship; but when the Jews outnumber the other nations, or when Britain turns the city and the land over to the Jews' complete control, they must in loyalty to their covenant, their law and their God, drive out of the land all false prophets and false religions, when pure Jewish worship alone will be established until Christ returns, when they will accept him as their Messiah, and then Christianity will supercede Judaism (Zech. 12; Ezek. 36, Jer. 31).

In the first exodus of Israel from Egypt, God commanded them to make no league with the inhabitants of the land, but to destroy their idols, images and pictures, and to pull down their altars and places of worship, and to drive them all out of the land or destroy them; or if not, that these nations would be as thorns in their sides, and their idolatry a snare to their children (Num. 33; Judges 2).

And now in their second Exodus from the land of the north, and from all countries whither the Lord hath driven them, he declares: "And it shall come to pass in that day saith the Lord of hosts, that I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered; and I will also cause the prophet and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land" (Zech. 13; Jer. 32:8).

The race question will be settled in two ways during the millennium. First, the segregation of the nations, each to the land originally given to their fathers by God, when he divided to the nations their inheritances, and set the bounds of the people according to the number of the tribes of Israel, or on the plan of thirteen (Deut. 32:8; Gen. 43; Ezek. 45 etc.); and second, by love superceding selfishness in men's hearts.

The Turks, or descendants of Esau will have Idumea or Edom and Mount Seir, and the Arabs or descendants of Ishmael, will have Arabia and part of Mesopotamia, and the Negroes will have to migrate to Egypt and Africa, or to the land of Ham, while the house of Israel will have unmolested possession of their own land in which the fruitful branches of Joseph took root when they ran over the old boundry wall (Psa. 105:23; Gen. 49:22; Deut. 33:13-18; Obadiah).

"When thy sisters Sodom and her daughters shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate (Ezek. 16:55). Thus by segregation of races and by a change of heart from selfishness to love, peace on earth and good will to men will be established in all the earth.

This truth is also taught in Paul's allegory, in Gal. 4, for although in its spiritual application it means that Jews under the old covenant (represented by Hagar and Ishmael), will not be heirs of the high calling of Christians (represented by Sarah and Isaac), it also means in its primary sense or natural sense, that the Arabs (or descendants of Ishmael), will not be heirs with the Jews (the descendants of Isaac).

W. L. CROWE.

The Day of His Coming

NOW LIFT our thoughts on wings sublime
Rise from the trivial cares of time,
Draw back the parting veil and see
The glories of eternity.

Let thoughts of God and Christ and the worthy saints of the past and present, and the heavenly inheritance, and the blessedness of our future work in co-operation with Christ, and the magnitude and benevolence of the divine plan, and the glory and blessedness of our gathering together unto Christ when our work of the present life is finished fill our minds and inspire our hearts. And to these contemplations let us also receive the additional comfort and blessedness of personal communion and fellowship with God through prayer and study of the word and assembling of ourselves together for worship and praise (Psa. 17:15).

The Great Refiner is watching to see how the precious metal of your character reflects his image. In every little trial he watches to see what influences control our actions. Are they influenced by present advantage, worldly policy, personal friendship, earthly love of husband, wife, children, ease or peace at any cost, or on the other hand, are they controlled by the naked principles of truth and righteousness? Will we defend these principles with zeal and energy at any cost of labor or suffering, and so fight the good fight of faith to the end, even unto death (Mal. 3:2, 3).

BROTHER ROCKER.

Thoughts for the Thoughtful

SISTER KNAPP suggests the following queries, not criticisms:

1st. Is God a respecter of persons?

2nd. If God gives a man a chance to do these things which will bring to him "eternal life," and and the man gives no heed to it; then if God does give him a second chance, why not a third, and so on?

3rd. Are we doing a kindness to our fellowmen and is it reasonable to show them the truth in this age, where evil men are waxing worse and worse; where the cares of this age choke the seed; where the enemy of righteousness is allowed full power, when if we would but wait until rich and poor receive equal rights; when there is no anxiety as to food and raiment, and the things necessary to this life; when satan is bound, and will have a better chance to become heirs to eternal life in the age just at hand?

4th. Would any one give up the pleasure and honor of this world to become an outcast for the gospel's sake, when he may enjoy all of this world and not endanger his life, but be given a second chance in the world to come?

5th. Is not such a doctrine calculated to lull men to sleep, waking up to find the harvest past and they not saved?

6th. Will some teacher who advocates the doctrine of a better chance than that offered by the gospel to men and women of this age please give book, chapter and verse where it is so promised.

California Conference

THE FOURTH Annual Southern California Conference of the Church of God will be held in Pomona, July 17 to 25 inclusive.

You will be sure to enjoy yourself while you are in attendance. A fine program is being prepared including Bible study and sermons on Bible subjects. In addition to our Southern California men there will be present Brother J. W. Williams, of Iowa, and Brother James A. Patrick, of Minnesota, both preachers of ability. The music will be a great feature this year and in this we will have added to our local talent Brother and Sister Greenleaf Allard, of Fort Dodge, Iowa.

Pomona is a beautiful inland city in the heart of the best orange district in California with fine scenery, good parks and free camp grounds for auto parties. It is reached by three steam rail roads, the Pacific Electric Ry., and a fine auto buss system, the latter giving a half hourly service to and from Los Angeles.

The meeting will be held in William Street Chapel on Williams St., between White Ave. and Huntington. Any park car will take you within one block.

Had you better not make this your vacation and let us reserve rooms for you?

THREE KINDS OF GIVERS

SOME WITTY person once said: "There are three kinds of givers the flint, the sponge, and the honey-comb."

To get anything out of a flint you must hammer it, and then you get only chips and sparks.

To get water out of a sponge, you must squeeze it, and the more you squeeze, the more you will get.

But the honeycomb just overflows with its own sweetness.

Some people are stingy and hard; they give nothing away if they can help it.

Others are good natured; they yield to pressure, and the more they are pressed, the more they will give.

A few delight in giving, without being asked at all; and of these the Bible says, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—The Herald of Life.

Nebraska Conference

THE 35th Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska will be held at 36 and Jaynes St., Omaha, Aug. 25 to 29 inclusive. Further announcements will be made later. Begin your preparation now to attend.

Remember the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1)

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

Editorial

We regret to learn of the protracted illness of Sister Minnie Frier.

—o—

We have recently been encouraged by visits from Brother Franks and Sister Elsie Heacock, of Canton, and Brother Luther, of Geneva, Ohio.

—o—

"Prophetic Signs of the Times," and "Is Man an Immortal Being?" our leading articles appearing alternately, are worthy of close perusal. Copy is abundant again, and we can assure the readers of some very interesting and instructive reading in the future.

—o—

Last summer Brother Arthur Nicholls, while on a vacation, spoke the truth to a young man who is now Brother Heffner. It is an added item of interest that Brother Nicholls at the time was only a Sunday School boy in his teens, and was not obedient to the truth himself. He was interested in the truth, however, and "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." A few weeks since Arthur and Brother Heffner were baptized together—a very touching occasion. This little story tells you how we got Brother Heffner, and at the same time suggests how to be useful even on a vacation.

The Young People's Society met Friday evening, June 18th, at the church. There were 22 members present and 20 visitors. The business meeting was brief, and was followed by an interesting and instructive lesson by brother Eugene Miller. His subject was "The Spirits in Prison." He pointed out the fact that we are the spirits, death the prison, and Christ the keeper of the prison; and that he will some day open the prison and call the spirits forth to judgment. The meeting was concluded by a talk from Brother Sterling Groves in which he refuted the idea that Christ visited hell after his crucifixion.

A Friendly Word for Larger Hope

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

I HAVE read the propositions you have laid down for proof, which you say would establish the doctrine of future probation for all those ignorant of the true God and his plan of salvation.

I. "For thousands of years God has unjustly withheld from the masses of men an opportunity to be saved."

There is no proof for such a statement. There is proof, however, that God has not, in the past or present, granted the masses an opportunity to be saved. You agree to this in your answer to "Critique." Quoting from that article you say, "If it can be positively proved that all have had a chance;' then you say, "The very thing that nobody believes."

The proof is this: The gospel call to repentance is the only opportunity for salvation God furnishes. Acts 17:30 shows that before Paul's time God had not sent this call to the Gentile nations, for it says that God "winked at that time of ignorance;" ignored it, making no attempt to enlighten it. During Paul's time he issued the command to preach the gosepl to every creature regardless of nationality or class. Under this command the opportunity for salvation has been made known to many more people than was the case before Paul's time. Even at that no one can deny that many have died ignorant of the true God and his gospel call to repentance.

ALTA KING

Editorial Comment

WE CONGRATULATE the writer because she has made a serious attempt to construct a logical and biblical argument favorable to posthumous salvation. People committed to this dogma are not, as a rule, concerned about the evidence in the case. They generally have a deceased child, a dead mother or it may be a "good" friend who has died out of Christ. The secret, selfish motive working in the heart is the "chance" which Larger Hope offers to these. Such people are bond-slaves of selfishness; they are not interested in proof of a doctrine which just suits them. They have a theory that makes them "feel good," and like a Methodist, "that is good enough for them."

GOD'S JUSTICE VINDICATED

Under proposition I our sister scribe has kicked against the pricks (Acts 9:5). In a public proclamation intended to exhibit God's name before the sons of men for multiplied centuries we read: "Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me" (Exod. 34:6, 7; Deut. 5:8, 9). With the facts of centuries spread before us we admit, and the "king" of Larger Hope concedes, that "the masses" of mankind, reaching from the fathers to their children, and extending on to "the children's children," have not so much as had a "chance" at eternal life. The Bible says so. On this fact all are agreed.

Now the question is, Is God just? Does he always do right? The question relates to what he has done equally as to what he will do. If a witness appears before the court with a bad past, his testimony is rejected. Look, then, at the past and present: God has visited the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and he does so today. Temporary expedients have no place here. Temporal evils, in no way reaching to men's eternal interests, cannot vindicate God's righteousness. If resolved into the sovereignty of God it remains to be asked whether such an exercise of his sovereignty is consistent with those ideas of immutable justice which is implanted in the human heart. Viewed as a temporary expedient to supply a want which, if real, admits of a simple remedy, the question still waits for solution whether the expedient itself was in accordance with the just principles which should regulate every government, whether human or divine. When it is affirmed that the penalties denounced in the threatening were only temporal (the only shift Larger Hope can manoevre), the reply surely is obvious, Why might not God do in eternity what he does in time? If the principle on which the punishment proceeds be not in all respects justifiable, how could it be acted on by God temporarily, any more than eternally? Is it consistent with the notion of a God of perfect rectitude that he should do on a small scale what it would be impious to conceive him doing on a large one? If God has besmirched his character for thousands of years by withholding from "the masses" a chance how can he redeem himself from centuries of odium by ten centuries of love and righteousness.

A STUDY OF ACTS 17:30

The garbled quotation of Acts 17:30 only multiplies the problems of Larger Hope. Disputing with the Athenians Paul declared that God had "determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation" (vs. 26), designedly contradicting the Epicureans, who taught that the world was not created by God, but by a fortuitous concourse of atoms; also Aristotle, who taught that the world was eternal. The apostle's declaration also contradicted the Epicureans who attributed all events to "chance"; while the Stoics ascribed them to fate. Then the apostle proceeds: "That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as a certain of your own poets have said," quoting from Aratus, a poet of Cilicia, Paul's native country, "For we are also his offspring" (vss. 27, 28). That we find "times of ignorance" spread over centuries in the past (vs. 30), is admitted; but for this we must not scandalize the Almighty by saying "God had not sent this call to the Gentile nations," "making no attempt to enlighten" them. Who will dare to say this when the apostle affirms that they lived and moved in God, were the offspring of God, and to "feel after him was to find him"! Found with such ease, what must have been the culpability of those who remained in "times of ignorance"? Let the reader answer.

A CURIOSITY UNSURPASSED

Let us, however, study for a moment Acts 17:30: "The times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." As a curiosity unsurpassed we subjoin here a sample of Larger Hope exposition: "During Paul's time he issued the command to preach the gospel to every creature regardless of nationality or class. Under this command the opportunity for salvation has been made known to many more people than was the case before Paul's time." Here curiosty and absurdity are equally blended. Under proposition II the writer claims that "all men" comprehends every individual of the human race. Yet she thoughtlessly says that "during Paul's time," which was 54 A. D., about twenty centuries ago, God commanded "all men" to repent. "All men everywhere." "All men" is universal, she says, and to this universal term is added "everywhere," leaving not an inch of the globe to which the command does not apply. According to this God commands babies to repent—he commands them to do what they cannot perform. And when the connection of the verse is read it seems to us the blind should see: "But now commandeth all men everywhere to repent: because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness," etc. Two things are very clear from this reading.

I. God "NOW commandeth all men everywhere to repent." The command applies "now," not in the future.

II. The motive for repentance assigned is, "BECAUSE he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness." The judgment, instead of being a time in the future in which men may have a "chance" to repent, is precisely the reason why men are urged to repent "now."

To show what havoc Larger Hope makes of the word of God, what an insult it gives to the most elementary meaning of words and ordinary intelligence we will translate Acts 17:30-32 the way it should be written to express the idea of future probation for the dead. We ask the reader to compare it with the Scripture itself.

A LARGER HOPE TRANSLATION OF ACTS 17:30-32

And the times of ignorance, embracing centuries of the past in which God did not try to enlighten the poor people, he winked and fell asleep; but rousing himself out of stupor, he now wishes everybody would repent. About the matter, however, he is not greatly exercised, because he has appointed a day of judgment, at which time he will give them all a chance in a world of righteousness by a man whom he has ordained to do this work, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men that they shall have a chance then in that he hath raised him from the dead. And when they heard of this chance to repent and be saved after the resurrection of the dead; they laughed: and others said, We must hear more of this matter; but we have already decided to wait till then to repent.

Communication

They spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it--Mal. 3:16.

DEAR RESTITUTION:

I WAS sorry that you had to send me notice about the paper. It was partly through neglect. I was awaiting to do some work. I am 61 years old and cannot work like I used to do, but I love your paper so much that it seems impossible to do without it. I was reading J. E. Hammond's article about the worthy ones of the age to come. It is certainly grand and glorious to know that some can write such pieces. I have been with the church a number of years, and enjoy the paper very much. I have never heard a service from our ministers. Myself and one other lady is all the ones of the precious faith in this town. I am very much isolated. Sister Venable and myself have our talks and readings, for it seems we cannot get others to see the truth. Why it is I cannot tell, when the gospel that was preached to our ancient fathers is so plain. Pray for me and my daughter. She is not in the church.

Wishing you every success with your dear paper.

Yours in Christ,

Mrs. FLORA LEIDIGH.

BAPTISM

AT THE close of our regular service at Frankfort, Sunday the 27th, Annabelle Harrell and Christine Stuard were baptized. May the blessings of the Father rest upon these sisters in their Christian warfare.

A Dialogue on Responsibility

Between Brother John Parker and Brother A. D. Strickler

TO THE EDITOR OF THE RESTITUTION:

I NOTICE that as the warm weather comes on you expect to be short of copy. This, with the hope of also getting a little further information on the subject of resurrectional responsibility, induces me to reply to Brother Strickler's articles.

I wish first to thank him for the kind and considerate way in which he took my former criticism, and the earnest effort he has made to present his views of Bible teaching on this subject.

I do not wish to be understood as finding fault with Brother Strickler on his views; but let us suppose Brother Strickler and I have met one of these fine summer evenings to have a little chat and to exchange ideas. Sitting on the verandah with the readers of The Restitution around as interested listeners we talk the subject over with pleasure and profit. To make the illusion more complete I shall employ the conversational form.

Brother Stricker -I hope you have understood my explanations and see this subject in a clearer light than you have done.

Brother Parker Well Brother, I cannot say that I fully understand you yet. This may be largely my own fault, for I am slow to grasp new ideas; but I think that if you would keep in mind a clearer distinction between those in Adam and those in Christ we would get on better. You see some things apply to the one class that could not be true of the other: and I am in danger of contradicting you when I should not.

It will be as well to state the issue as I understand it at once, then if you find me wrong I can be set right.

WHERE WE AGREE

I think we agree that all who are baptized into Christ will rise from the dead at his return and appear before him for judgment.

WHERE I AM IN DOUBT

Then added to those in Christ you say a certain number of those in Adam who have been enlightened by knowledge of the truth will rise and be judged at the same time. Thus you seem to make enlightenment rather than relationship to Christ the basis for resurrection.

Brother Strickler Yes; enlightenment brings responsibility, and resurrection follows as a matter of course.

Brother Parker- But, Brother, I cannot see that responsibility and resurrection are interchangeable terms.

THE CASE OF ACHAN

As recorded in Joshua 7th chapter this man was enlightened and was certainly responsible. After judicial inquiry and at God's command, he was put to death. Even following your own statement he died a natural death, that is, he ceased to breathe, and blood ceased to circulate, and death followed. Question: what do you say to this case? Did he suffer the penalty of his sin? Will his enlightenment and responsibility bring him to life at the return of Christ; and if so, will he be tried again for the same offence? I have been trying to fit your theory to the recorded facts. A plain yes or no would help me.

Brother Strickler- The wages of sin is death. This penalty will be inflicted at the judgment seat of Christ, except in those cases in the history of mankind where God has already brought judicial punishment on the objects of his displeasure.

Brother Parker -You are quoting from Rom. 6:23. Is not this whole chapter addressed to men who are in Christ, not to men who are still in Adam? You know that we have already agreed that all in Christ will be raised at his return.

Then as to your exception: will this apply to the case of Achan? If it does then we have one case where an enlightened and responsible sinner will not be raised.

THE CASE OF SAUL

I think we have another in the case of Saul. 1 Chron. 10:13: "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord . . . and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit to enquire of it, and enquired not of the Lord; therefore he slew him." This quotation leaves no doubt as to what he died for, or as to who slew him. Yet he was both enlightened and responsible. Now Brother, do you not find it difficult to make your theory fit specific cases?

THE CASE OF ADAM

Brother Strickler I have already said there are exceptions.

Brother Parker--Yes, I see there are. Now we will try the case of Adam: I understand you to say that in order for death to be the penalty of sin it must be scriptural, legal, judicial, and under the displeasure of God. In a former talk I tried to show that the sentence on Adam had all these characteristics: and I asked you if it would be necessary to have Adam's case reopened at the judgment seat of Christ? Yet you omitted to answer that.

Now I put the question in another form: Is Adam one of your exceptions? Remember the tremendous consequences that hang on this issue. The destiny of the race is involved in the case of Adam. Is it reasonable to suppose that the judge of all the earth would leave this case six thousand years in abeyance in order to reconsider it at some time in the future? I gravely submit the following for your thoughtful consideration.

Adam died a judicial and legal death under God's displeasure on the evening of the day in which he sinned. The machinery for his execution was immediately set in motion which culminated in his death under God's sentence nine hundred and thirty years after his creation, thus coming within God's thousand year day, of which Peter tells us some are ignorant.

Brother Strickler- Would a just God make a farce of forgiveness by doing away with the penalty due for sins of the past, and then allow his natural, physical law of death to take place? Certainly not; natural death is not a provisionable affair; it is written in the very nature of man as the Bible specially teaches.

Brother Parker Your remark contains a question and also an assertion. I will first reply to the question, then deal with your assertion.

Would God forgive sin and then enforce the penalty? My answer is yes: the guilt of sin is a moral quality, the penalty (death) is a physical affair. Your assumption that all the results and consequences of sin disappear the moment that its guilt is forgiven is not justified by the record of Scripture.

THE CASE OF MOSES

The penalty for rebellion in the wilderness was death before entering the land of promise. Num. 27:12: "And the Lord said unto Moses, get thee up into this mount Abarim and see the land . . . . and when thou hast seen it thou shalt be gathered to thy people . . . . for ye rebelled against my commandment in the desert of Sin." Deut. 3:23: "And I besought the Lord at that time saying. . . . O Lord, thou hast begun to show thy servant thy greatness . . . . I pray thee let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan . . . . But the Lord was wrath with me for your sakes and would not hear me. And the Lord said unto me, Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter." Deut. 34:5: "So Moses the servant of the Lord died . . . his eye was not dim nor his natural force abated."

Here is a case where the sin is plainly stated and the penalty enforced. I have not the slightest doubt that Moses had repented and made the necessary offering which the law required, and obtained forgiveness. Had he not done so he would have been liable to immediate execution; for as soon as he knew he had sinned he was guilty. And although a repentant and pardoned sinner, the penalty was rigidly enforced.

REFLECTIONS ON THE DEATH OF MOSES

Moses did not die of senile decay; he did not die because he had an animal nature (that made death possible but was not the reason of his death). There is no reason to think that he died of disease. He died by what is called in legal terms "the act of God." God gives the reason for his act: Moses had rebelled against him.

I will now answer your assertion that death is written in the very nautre of man. Running through all your arguments there is an assumption that even if man had passed a successful probation that death would have got him anyway. The Scriptures give one cause of death in the human family; that cause is sin. They are absolutely silent as to any other cause.

Brother Strickler—Death in order to be a penalty must be a continuous thing. Simply dying is not penalty.

Brother Parker—Here you fail to discriminate between the sentence pronounced on Adam and the sentence at the judgment seat of Christ? As applied to the last you are quite right: but as applied to Adam you are quite wrong.

THE SENTENCE ON ADAM

This sentence has a distinct time limit. That limit is marked by the little word "till." Certain things were to affect man "till" a certain event took place. When he returned to the dust the time limit was reached. Now it may be said that this is practically the same thing, as it leaves man helpless in the grave.

I reply, yes; but it does not leave God helpless: on the contraty, it leaves the door wide open for the operation of his redemptive plan, to redeem all who accept his conditions out of death.

Adam is the federal head of our race. If the sentence pronounced on him had a clause requiring him to forever remain in the dust, then it would have shut out all room for redemption for the race.

The expression "return to the dust," must not be taken too literally, as it simply means death. The same language is used in the 22nd Psalm: speaking of Christ is says "Thou hast brought me into the dust of death."

Brother Strickler—Now as to Paul's great principle, "He that is dead is free from sin." Undoubtedly Paul here refers to Christ risen from the dead, not Christ in the tomb.

Brother Parker—I have examined your different renderings if this verse, and in none of them does Paul say so: in each rendering it is "he that is dead," not he that is dead and risen again is free from sin. This is in exact harmany with the Adamic sentence: the time limit reachel to Adam's death, and there it ended.

But suppose we read it as you think Paul intended: how does it apply to your theory? You have a man enlightened and responsible; he dies without accepting Christ, at the resurrection he is alive again. Is he free from sin? Surely you will not say so. Is it not better to leave the statement as Paul wrote it?

Paul's great principle helps us in considering Christ's death. Christ suffered the penalty for sin though he never incurred the guilt of sin. When he was brought into the dust of death the penalty was complete, and he was free from sin in every sense, representatively or otherwise.

I will now set down my views in brief form. I speak as unto wise men; judge ye what I say.

BROTHER PARKER'S VIEWS IN BRIEF

The sentence on Adam reached to his death. All who die in Adam will suffer Adam's fate.

Only those who have made a covenant with God by being baptized into Christ's death have a positive promise of resurrection. None of these will be judged as to their sins, while in Adam. They stand or fall as to their faithfulness or unfaithfulness to Christ.

As to those in Adam: that any of these will be resurrected rests on somewhat doubtful inferences that have little support in Scripture.

Natural death is penalty for all who sin in Adam. "The soul that sinneth it shall die" has never had an exception.

In considering the question it is impossible to arrive at correct conclusions unless we ever keep in mind a clear distinction between the sentence on Adam and the sentence on those who appear at the judgment seat of Christ and are found unworthy.

The sentences each have a time statement: that on Adam is until death; that on those unfaithful to Christ is everlasting death.

And now dear Brother Strickler, in closing let me thank you for the kind efforts you have made. Although I am not able to fall in with all your views, yet I have learned much in reading them.

To the readers of The Restitution: the views that I have advanced are not infallible. If in reading them they help some to a better knowledge of God's ways, then they have served my purpose.

JOHN PARKER.

GOLDEN TEXT: Psalm 23

A WAYFARING PSALM

HE LEADETH me in the lowly path of learning,
He prepareth a lesson for me every day,
He bringeth me to the clear fountains of instruction,
Little by little he showeth me the beauty of truth.
The world is a great book that he hath written,
He turneth the leaves for me slowly;
They are all inscribed with images and letters,
He poureth light on the pictures and the words,
He taketh me by the hand to the hill top of vision,
And my soul is glad when I perceive his meaning,
In the valley also he walketh beside me,
In the dark places he whispereth in my heart.
Even though my lesson be hard, it is not hopeless,
For the Lord is patient with his slow scholars;
He will wait awhile for my weakness,
And help me to read the truth through tears.—Selected by Sister Atwell.

OBEDIENCE TO GOD OUR ONLY HOPE

"AND SAMUEL came to Saul; and said unto him, Blessed be thou of Jehovah; I have performed the commandment of Jehovah. And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen, which I hear? And Saul said. They have brought them from the Amalekites; for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto Jehovah thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed. Then Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what Jehovah hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, say on.

And Samuel said, Though thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel? And Jehovah anointed thee king over Israel; and Jehovah sent thee on a journey, and said, Go, and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites and fight against them until they be consumed. Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of Jehovah, and didst fly upon the spoil, and didst that which was evil in the sight of Jehovah? And Saul said unto Samuel, Yes, I have obeyed the voice of Jehovah, and have gone the way which Jehovah sent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites. But the people took the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the devoted things, to sacrifice unto Jehovah thy God in Gilgal. And Samuel said, Hath Jehovah as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of Jehovah? Behold to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft and stubbornness as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of Jehovah, he hath rejected thee from being king."

The above is a quotation from 1 Sam. 15:13-23. We ask you to read the entire chapter so as to get the full significance of the story.

At one time Saul was so bashful and modest that he hid himself among the baggage when the people had elected him their king and now he had become so bold that he put his own thoughts and judgment against God's plain and positive instruction.

We say this was a most horrible thing for Saul to do. But what are we doing with our lives? Are we obeying the commands of God? Do you not think that God can plainly hear the "bleating of the sheep" of our disobedience? For ourself we confess full fellowship with same. We are confounded by the bleating of the sheep which we have preserved for our own pride and indulgence, when obedience to God's commands would have compelled us to slay every one of them.

King Saul had been told to kill the heathen Amalekites for their treatment of the children of Israel. The awfulness of this command did not seem to trouble his moral conscience. But his vanity and cupidity balked at the direction to destroy the flocks and other booty, which he and his army could use. And as for executing king Agag, it ministered far more to Saul's vanity to retain him as a prisoner to decorate his triumph. The explicit command of God came into conflict with Saul's desires and pleasure, and the divine will was put on one side.

Saul's excuse was that he had disobeyed so he could offer the spoil of his disobedience as a sacrifice to God. The prophet squarely condemning this idea said, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." No tribute to God is perfect except that of obedience, God does not want flattery; he is offended by it. He ask first and only of every mortal obedience to his revealed word. This is the only incense that seems sweet in his nostrils.

Angels can sing no sweeter tribute to the Eternal than is rendered by a life of earnest obedience. The most eloquent tongue or gifted pen cannot phrase an eulogy of the attributes of the Deity that will compare with the humble holiness of the lowliest saint who orders his or her life by the word of God. Nations can enact no statutes so Christian as the simple following of the plain law of God in their dealings one with the other and with their peoples. The bleatings of the sheep of disobedience deafen the ears of the Highest to all outward forms of worship. No man can present a church organ or a stained glass window or place enough money on the collection plate that will drown the noise of the bleating sheep of a life lived contrary to the will of God.

The preson that departs from the law of God will be repudiated by him. Only the disfavor of the Lord can follow a life that does not square with his explicit will. This should be a day of heart searching. There is no calamity possible equal to the withdrawal of the divine favor.

On the other hand, it is equally clear that the one plain path to peace, joy, and rest, is by a return to the revealed word of God, to take God at his word, to accept God's plan, to believe God's promise. We are so engrossed in the world's politics as well as other worldly questions that we have been careless, if we have not done worse and crowded out entirely the greatest question of all, which is, Is our heart right with God? Are we following the ancient path of obedience to the will of God? Is our first concern that we should do that that he would have us do? Above all we need to Give ourselves to thy obedience,

Love and serve thee best of all.

"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."

JOHN 3:16

"FOR GOD so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

The above often is called "the gospel verse"; perhaps you have so called it yourself. But did you know that by taking the first letter of the six most prominent words in the verse we have the word GOSPEL. Now, let us see, place a dash under the G of God, the o of only, the S of Son, the p of perish, the e of everlasting, and l of life. Each in rotation forming a perfect word. The Scriptures have many little surprises such as this in store for those who search.

Meditations in the Night

WATCHMAN, TELL us of the night,
Will the stars guide us aright?
Will the moon with silver ray,
Give light until the dawn of day?

Or will the blinding sleet and rain,
Make darkness doubly drear again?
Will sorrow chill us on the way,
And cause our footsteps oft to stray?

The landscape scenes we view with care,
And anxious thoughts we often share;
And for the needs of life we pray,
And call down blessings on each day.

But God has promised needful things,
Borne to us on nature's wings;
If we but trust him as we should,
The Wise, the Holy, and the Good.

The ravens are each day supplied,
Their every want is satisfied;
Their food released from nature's store,
They have enough, they need no more.

To us, the children of the King,
There's bounteous blessings on the wing;
Each father gives his children food;
Thus God will grant us all that's good.

J. E. HOGARTH.

Greetings

If you have come from Texas plain,
Or if you come from icy Maine,
We, the children, welcome you
In happy, loyal friendship true.

We hope you all are very well,
And glad to stay here for a spell.
So welcome, welcome every one,
We are so glad that you have come.

We hope you'll profit by your stay,
And when at last you go away,
Your ears shall hear the last refrain,
Goodby, goodby, and come again.—SIS. PROSEK.

Is Man an Immortal Being?

A Discussion of Man, Soul, Spirit, Death, Hell, and the Resurrection

A DEFINITION OF MAN

WE HAVE shown that it was no more proper to call man a living soul than any other animal. We are now able in some degree to apprehend what the Bible definition of man is. He was originally earth, as lifeless as any clod of the valley. Into this clod enters a divine breath or spirit and it becomes full of life. The breath of life was not the man any more than it was the body, but it was the producer of the rational living soul or living man. It is further to be remarked that this breath of life produced in different subjects, varied manifestations complex and wonderful and far surpassing the highest manifestations of brute organizations. So long as the breath of life remains in the body, the man is the living soul, but when it is withdrawn, the soul no longer lives but becomes a dead soul. This state is termed in Scripture death or sleep, because of the certain purpose of God of resurrection.

WHAT IS DEATH?

A prevalent belief is that death is the "separation of the soul from the body." This is not only unscriptural but the source of mischievous error. Death is the separation of the spirit from the body, as we read in James 2:26, "As the body without the spirit is dead,' etc. Nothing is so sadly lost sight of as this distinction of soul and spirit, a distinction which the authors of the Scriptures persistently maintain. They never confound soul with spirit, but modern writers habitually use these words as synonymous. With the great majority, man's spirit and soul are identical, being in fact only different names for the same thing, so much so that they think, to commend their spirit in God's hands (as Stephen did) is just the same as commending the soul. The following Scriptures plainly show that the spirit is not soul any more than it is the body. Heb. 4:12: "The word of God is sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit," etc. 1 Thess. 5:23, "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body, may be preserved blameless" etc. Much if not all the sophistical arguments for the immortality of the soul are based on this pernicious habit of confusing terms. Writers first of all think and speak loosely about soul, that man has a soul—whereas Scripture calls the man himself the soul--then, they assume that this soul is spiritual, and finally they identify it with the spirit and lo! the thing is done! We have already alluded to the article in the Manitoba College Journal for June 1897, by Dr. McLaren; we allude to it again here, only to cite it as an instance in point where the distinction is so recklessly disregarded. On this confusion of terms rests much of what is believed and taught of the state of the dead, as we shall see later on.

"MY SOUL" AND SUCH LIKE EXPRESSIONS

It will now be in order for us to enquire into such expressions as "my soul," "thy soul," "your soul," and the like which abound in Scripture. These are all rendered from the same Hebrew word "nephesh" and means "myself," "thyself," "yourselves," etc. The following are examples which may be verified from the marginal readings of an English Bible: Psa. 131:2, "Surely I have behaved and quited myself (margin, my soul) as a child that is weaned of his mother." Judges 16:30, "And Samson said. Let me (my soul) die with the Philistines." If this passage had been rendered "my soul" as it should have been, then it would teach that the soul dies, which would be in harmony with the plain teaching of Scripture. Psa. 105: 18, "Joseph's feet they hurt with fetters: he (his soul) was laid in irons." We here learn the true meaning of the expression "his soul," namely the whole man Joseph. Psa. 35:25, "Let them not say in their hearts; Ah! so would we (our souls) have it." Jer. 37.9, "Thus saith the Lord; deceive not yourselves" (your souls). 2 Cor. 12:15, "And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you" (Greek, your souls). Job 36:14 "They die (their soul dieth) in youth." If this had been rendered "Their souls dieth in youth," many would have read it with astonishment and have led them to see that according to the Bible souls really do die. Isa. 47:14, "Behold they (i. e. the astrologers and prognosticators, etc) shall be as stubble; the fire shall burn them; they shall not deliver themselves (their souls) from the power of the flame." A familiar text is Matt. 16:26. "What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul." Luke renders this in the way indicated, viz., "For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world and lose himself, or be cast away" (Luke 9:25). Here we see "his soul" means just "himself." To "save a soul" according to Scripture, is to save a man— according to present day theology it is to save some kind of demon inside.

WHERE DOES THE SOUL GO AT DEATH?

In spite of these plain Scripture statements, an ever recurring question is, "Where does the soul go to at death ?" This question is suggested in our minds just because of our education into a false and Platonic conception of soul. With some, as has been stated, it is identical with spirit; with others the soul is some kind of immaterial essence, ghost, spook or demon which lodges in the body and which leaves the body at death. If the reader has had a fairly good grip of what has already appeared in these articles, he will see that this is very erroneous and unscriptural. The soul is the human personality and it dies, it sleeps. The following texts show that it sleeps in sheol, Hebrew, hades, Greek, the grave, pit or hell. This last word "hell" is a Saxon term meaning hidden, and is identified in old English as the grave. Psa. 89:48, "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death ? shall he deliver his soul (himself) from the hand of the grave ?" Isa. 38:17, "Thou hast in love to my soul (me or myself) delivered it from the pit of corruption." It is written of the Lord Jesus that he commended his spirit to the Father, but "he poured out his soul unto death." That "his soul was exceeding sorrowful even unto death." In Psa. 16: 10, his soul went into sheol (hell, grave), but was not left there to see corruption. The plain inference from this text is, that every other soul is left in the grave or "hell" to see corruption until quickened again into life and activity by the Son of God!

There appears therefore a wide difference between modern teaching and the position we maintain by Scripture. How shall we decide who is right. These articles are written for thinkers and for free Christian men. The Bible and only the Bible is the cry of liberty. Search the Scriptures therefore and see whether these things are so or not. Job says in 14:10: "Man dieth and wasteth away." We believe Job means a real man here. A sermon read thus, "Listen, man; a voice within us speaks, Man thou shalt never die." Does not this remind us of the serpent to Eve, "Ye shall not surely die" (Gen. 3:4) ? The Lord told Adam that if he disobeyed "Thou shalt surely die." Dr. Clark correctly explains this in his commentary thus: "From that moment thou shalt become mortal and shall continue in a dying state until thou die." Who told the truth, Jehovah or the serpent? Both addressed the real man, not "the house of clay." After Adam's fall, the sentence went forth, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Does the word "thou" stand for the body or the real man ? Poets may insanely lisp out that it is the body, but it must be obvious to the meanest capacity that they arrogate a license which no Bible poet ever dared to.

We see from all this that the accountable man --the soul- -returns to the ground, to sheol at death and not to heaven, or paradise or purgatory, while the spirit or the breath of life returns to God the giver. Nowhere in the Bible (excepting in the instance of the Rich man and Lazarus where the fable is borrowed by our Lord from the Talmud to teach certain truth in parable) is man said to be alive between death and resurrection. God speaks to Abraham, "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age" (Gen. 15:15). What does "thou stand for ? Surely the man Abraham himself. Moses subsequently records his death in 25:8: "Then Abraham gave up the ghost and died in a good old age -an old man and full of years, and was gathered to his people." Where were his people ? In the grave to be sure in sheol. A startling instance of exegetical skill recently is related of a city preacher. Said he, "'Gathered to his people,' must mean somewhere else than in the grave, because Abraham's body was buried hundred of miles from where his fathers were buried." It must be then, that the proper Abraham joined in his fathers in some place. Where is that place ? It cannot be paradise or heaven. It must have been in purgatory or the theological "hell," because Joshua is careful in telling us in 24:2 that "Abraham's fathers served other gods," and we know from Scripture that idolators shall have their part in the lake of fire! "The friend of God" is sent to associate with his fathers in torment, to maintain the Platonic theory at all hazard. To be sure we absolve the preacher from the uncomfortable dilemma into which he had unwittingly fallen. But "save me from my friends!"

In Ates 13:36, "For David after he had served his generation by the will of God fell on sleep and was laid unto his fathers (just where Abraham and his fathers were) and saw corruption." Some tell us David is in heaven. Let us hear what Peter has to say. Acts 2:29, 34, "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried . . . David is not ascended into the heavens." Can anything be plainer ? "But that means his body,' objects one. Well Peter calls the lifeless organism David - the man - and with him agree Dr. Luke and all the prophets.

If David is dead, does he know anything ? The Scriptures answer: "The dead know not anything." "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." "In that very day" a man dies, "his thoughts perish." Is there a passage that contradicts these plain statements that shows that a dead man has any knowledge, or wisdom, or device, or work, or undestanding ? We have not been able to find it. David as a writer believed this, for he states in Psa. 17:15, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." This shows that he expected to fall asleep, and Peter says that he did fall asleep!

G. W. WINCKLER.

The King of the North

DANIEL 11:40-45

ABRAHAM LINCOLN is reputed to have said many wise things. One of the sayings his biographer attributed to him is, "A nation cannot exist half slave and half free, for being so divided it must fall." One far wiser than Lincoln, or any other of the world's wise philosophers expressed this thought, which in our judgment is more applicable to our day than the saying of Lincoln to his day and generation. Jesus, the wisest of all men said: "But he knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth. If satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand ?" (Luke 11: 17, 18).

The writer feels utterly incompetent to express an opinion upon this important subject. So many "father in Israel," knowing, and like "a certain Jew named Apollos, an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures" (Acts 18:24), have written intelligently and wisely upon this subject. Some have suggested Germany. A recent writer states emphatically that it is Great Britain! The majority, however, recognize the king of the north to be Russia. Jesus said, "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light" (Luke 16:8). If the statements of politicians of this generation possessed half the knowledge of the Scriptures which the "children of light" possess; they would accurately recognize this power personified as the "king of the north." How, we ask ? Because, dear brethren, in matters political they are more observant than the "children of light." We are too busy, as Brother Huggins pointed out recently, in trying to remove the mote from our brother's eye, instead of using our eyes and understanding in observing the times. Jesus said that when the events now transpiring begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads for your redemption draweth nigh (Luke 21:28).

The churches on every hand are crying "Unity, unity." There can be no peace until we are united. Well, Isa. 8:9-13 warns us that this is just what will happen prior to the desolation of the nations. When President Wilson went to Paris, the whole world expected much from him, for before an English audience he said:" "There is only one thing that can bind people together and that is common devotion to right." Brother Huggins, in his sermon this morning, pointed out that it is not what a man says; it is what he does that tells.

President Wilson in his speech to the senate January 22, 1917, said: "No right anywhere exists to hand peoples about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were property."

Mr. Wilson, why are you opposing Italy occupying Fiume, when this port was promised Italy by the powers. Germany would have defeated without the aid of Italy ? Do the Catholic votes in the United States influence your judgment in this matter. Why are you so passive in permitting Japan to steal and occupy Shantung with its 38,000,000 Chinese republicans without protesting in the manner you did over the occupation of Fiume ? Why are you so eager to ratify the Treaty of Versailles with the League of Nations tacked on ? This League the clever statesmen of Great Britain opposed, only acquiescing to it when they recognized they held the "balance of power." I wonder if the Lord's recording angel does not know all about what was discussed by you and his "holiness the pope" ? Now brethren, I am requesting the Editor to publish the following article I recently read by an unknown diplomatic correspondent. If after reading it you have any doubts as to who the king of the north is, and inasmuch as the German government is almost compelling her wealthy and intellectual citizens to emigrate to Russia and forbidding emigration to any other, you can plainly see how quickly Russia can be transformed. Under the genius of Bismarck it did not take long to unify Germany. France in 1870 learned the lesson.

GEO. B. ALLDRIDGE.

BOLSHEVIKS IN THE EAST

M. KRASSIN, who is the business brain of the Moscow government, and second only in imporatance to Lenin himself, has arrived in London, together with a large staff of Bolshevik technical representatives.

His object is to negotiate for a resumption of trade with Russia, and if possible, to find a basis for the conclusion of a peace arrangement with the Allied Powers.

The whole of the Middle East, from Constantinople to the frontiers of India, is in a state of open revolutionary turmoil. The ridiculously few Allied troops dispersed in small isolated posts, and scattered for the most part along the coastal fringe of this vast region, are powerless to deal with the critical situation which has arisen.

The Bolsheviks, acting, it must be admitted, with the support of the local inhabitants, are in power at Baku, the great oil city in the Caspian. From there they have organized an expedition which captured Denikin's fleet, interned in the Persian port of Enzeli, and compelled a small British force to beat a hasty retreat. The Bolsheviks are now in undisputed command of the Caspian Sea.

That is not all. From end to end Persia is in a state of revolutionary turmoil. The Shah returning home from Europe, wisely tarries at the holy places in Mesopotamia, and the Persian Foreign Minister has arrived in London to discuss matters with the British government.

AGREEMENT—OR ARMED ACTION ?

The question naturally arises: What has the visit of Krassin and the resumption of trade with Russia to do with all these happenings in the Middle East ?

The answer is that if we do not arrive at some arrangement with the Soviet Envoy such as will offer reasonable guarantees that Bolshevik propaganda will cease, then the only alternative will be to send very large forces to the Middle East and wage war there on a great scale.

For the Middle East, now turning red before our very eyes, may well be compared to the spinal column of Britain's Asiatic Empire, and Persia, lying next to India and Afghanistan, is the most vital nerve centre of the whole of this column. In other words, Persia is the direct corridor to India; and Baku, where the Bolshevik army and fleet are concentrated, is the gateway to this corridor.

IDEAL SOIL FOR AGITATORS

Experience shows that Bolshevism thrives best in the soil of turmoil. Therefore at present Bolshevism has a vast field of unlimited opportunities in the East.

Realizing this truth, the Japanese have lately taken drastic action and have occupied territory in Northern Manchuria and Siberia, the extent of which is nearly as great as the whole of Europe, including European Russia.

It is not as yet realized in this country that the Japanese are now openly at war with the Soviets. But Bolshevism, because of the nearer proximity of its centre. Moscow is a far greater menace to the Middle East than it is to the Far East.

Remember, that although the Bolshevik leaders have taken as the foundation of their faith Marxism—a purely western materialistic conception—they have given to this faith a peculiarly Russian, and even semi-Oriental interpretation.

Remember, also, that Peter the Great said that is was Russia's mission to unite East with West, and that he told his countrymen that Persia was vitally important to Russia as the highway to the ultimate goal of India. Not only in the sweep of this policy, but also in the ruthlessness of his method, Lenin closely resembles Peter the Great.

OUR OWN PROBLEM NOW

Very illuminating you will say, but what has all this to do with M. Krassin's visit and the resumption of trade with Russia ? Let me explain.

IF THE MIDDLE EAST GOES RED THE BACK OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IS BROKEN

Bolshivism has already crossed the first great mountain barrier—the Caucasus. Unless something is done quickly Bolshevism will sweep over the plains and cross the second mountain barrier which opposes its path—the Himalayas.

Then India, where the fires are already smouldering, will be aflame, and the dream of Peter the Great will be realized at last.

Farther to the west strife and desolation prevail on all sides. In Asia Minor the Turkish Nationalists under Mustapha Pasha, wages fanatical guerilla warfare with opposing bands, the massacre of unhappy Armenians continues, and the small Allied forces scattered about in isolated posts dare not move a step from the coast for fear of annihilation.

The position of Persia, in particular, is tragic in the extreme. Small British forces are stationed at several places in the interior. There are little communities of British subjects, including women, resident in different towns.

With a view to organizing and officering a Persian army we sent a military mission to Teheran some time ago. That mission acting on instructions from the Home government, has done nothing—it is said that they will report. In and around the capital there are eight thousand Persian Cossacks under Russian officers, avowedly Bolshevik, and the Persian Gendarmerie, officered by Swedes, is not by any means a reliable force. Thus Persia is left helpless and in despair, is at the present moment frantically appealing at one and the same time to the Bolsheviks in Moscow, to the British gverment, to the Supreme Council, and to the League of Nations, of which Persia is an "independent member." Could worse confusion than is here implied be well imagined ?

FUTURE NEED OF BIGGER ARMIES

The reason for this state of affairs is to be found in the fact that the Anglo-Persian agreement does not amount to a Protectorate, and our super-sensitive French allies have not been slow to emphasize this legal definition. Thus it is nobody's business to look after Persia.

But trade is very much our business, and if Persia turns Bolshevik, India is in instant peril.

It is not to be expected that the Bolsheviks will at once march on Teheran. Their method of penetration is more subtle and less costly—the method of propaganda.

So long as Eastern races were more or less quiescent, and relatively small contingents of troops sufficed to maintain order, Great Britain's sea power was adequate to emergencies.

The Great War has so changed conditions as to render necessary nothing less than a military organization on a Continental scale, if Britain's Asiatic Empire is to be preserved on a sure basis.

We must frankly admit that we have not the forces available firmly to secure the whole of the Middle East against the inroads of Bolshevism, but we have an abundance of manufactured articles ready for export. Russia, on the other hand, has a great army in being, and claims to have large exportable stores of grain and raw material. But in the way of manufactured articles she lacks everything that is necessary for ordinary human existence.—Sunday Chronicle.

LOVE—REAL AND IMITATION

INTELLIGENT LOVE is a steady flame that has both beauty and endurance. It is not a consuming fire. It is the light of the world.

Ignorant love is the uncontrollable conflagration of passion that for a time burns like tinder. But at last the sparks are blown by the whirlwind, and then some new flame is started.

Remember the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

CHARITY THE GREATER

"FAITH, HOPE, and charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." "Without faith it is impossible to please God."

Hope is expectation and desire. When we hope we both expect and desire the thing hoped for to be accomplished. Our hope is that we shall see Jesus and he with him and the Father throughout eternity. Charity is above and beyond either and both of these. Why ?

Because charity is a deep, affectionate love, embracing both faith and hope. "Charity believeth all things." Without charity faith and hope are dead.—Alex. D. Donaldson.

BACKWARD OR FORWARD

HOW TRUE this is! When you slack, you back: when you do your best, like all the rest, you go ahead.

Each night puts you a peg higher, and each finished day writes on a blank page the end of either a perfect day or an unfinished day. What is written is a true record of results. In after years you can' not change this record no matter how much you may want to.

NO COMPROMISE

WHAT IS success ? Success is overcoming the obstacles the difficulties of life

What is failure ? Failure is surrendering our will to life's obstacles, the white flag of ended effort. This refers to the Christian life as well as the business life.

Men are either successes or failures. They are on the way up or on the way down. No man can compromise with these consequences. Get the fact firmly fixed in your mind that everything is largely up to you.—Alex. D. Donaldson.

LUCK

THE PERSON who makes a fuss over his good luck in some speculation would make a greater fuss over his hard luck. In other words, the person full of fuss trusts to luck. He is all "fuss and feathers," and when he gets his feathers wet he is a sorry sight.

We were honored this week by a visit from C. M. J. Jaroshevick, minister of the Russian United Church of Chicago, Ill. He is a missionary for the evangelization of Russia. Years previous to the European war the denominations of Christendom had evangelized Russia with the gospel; then the war broke out and they were evangelized with bullets. In what other sense than these they are to be evangelized by Mr. Jaroshevick he did not explain in his interview with us.

Many of us do not realize how subtle a passion pride is, and how easily it makes nutriment out of its own served members. One struggles successfully to overcome his avarice, and then becomes vain of his benevolence. One crucifies his shame, and then glories in his boldness. Even the very act of self-crucifixion, the pain involved in it, the fortitude exercised, and the success achieved—become topics of self-complacent exhibition. Sometimes the disciple parades his cross before others; sometimes before himself. Sometimes he even displays it before God, like the pharisee standing up in the temple and reciting to Omniscence the list of his fastings and his tithes.

Many readers appreciate the discussions that appear in The Restitution. Worldly people "turn away their ears from the truth and are turned unto fables." They do not want to have their belief discussed; its fabulous nature might be exposed. Occasionally, we are sorry to say, one professing to be in the faith manifests the same evasive disposition. Thank God such are rare. Those who have been actors recently in discussing Bible subjects, as Alex. Allan, Alta King, John Parker, A. D. Strickler and others, do not feel hurt at those who differ from them. We often see worldly men in orthodox churches with such prejudiced minds and warped judgments that they cannot bear to hear the truth discussed in their presence. Even some who call themselves brethren are so self-conceited they will not take The Restitution because it dares to discuss openly and frankly all subjects of importance. Are we your enemy because we tell you the truth? The Restitution must continue to be, as heretofore, a paper for the unprejudiced and the independent. If you love the truth you will love the paper that loves to discuss the truth.

A Friendly Word for Larger Hope

Number Two

II. "IN THE future this unjust God will become just and give to the very ones, from whom he withheld a chance, the chance which he has denied them, and which they deserved."

There is no proof for this statement. We would say here that no one deserves God's mercy. Not even we, with all our goodness and knowledge, who have been granted the opportunity.

There is proof, however, that God's plan of salvation, formulated before man, was made for the whole human family.

The proof is this: the basic fact of God's plan of salvation is the death of Jesus. Paul says in Heb. 2:9 that he tasted death for every man, and in 1 Tim. 2:6 that he gave himself a ransom for all; and John says in 1 John 2:2 that he is the propitiation not only for the sins of the church, but also for the sins of the whole world. There is nothing in the context of these Scriptures that gives us the right to say that Paul had in mind "every man" in a certain class, or that the all for whom Jesus gave himself a ransom, is the all in a limited class, or that John was thinking of a less number of sins than all the sins that have been committed by all individuals of the human family.

ALTA KING.

Editorial Comment

SINCE OUR beloved correspondent admits that none of us deserve God's mercy, we are on the way to enquire upon whom God will bestow mercy. That Christ died for "every man" (Heb. 2:9), and that he gave himself a "ransom for all" (1 Tim. 2:6) has been acknowledged and explained dozens of times in The Restitution. "He is the propitiation for our sins (the sins of the church): and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world" (1 John 2:2)—those outside of the church. If the benefits of Christ's death did not extend to the "world," the world could never get into the church. The propitiations under the law were limited and purely Jewish; but the propitiation of Christ, in contrast to these, is wide as the "whole world."

THE APPLICATION OF PROPITIATORY BENEFITS

OUR FAIR scribe talks about Christ dying to forgive all, bless all, ransom all, and save all. That she is not a Universalist is the eighth wonder of the world! The way she escapes the clutches of universalism is by an inconsistency in the application of the benefits of Christ's death. She is a "Partial Universalist"—pardon the contradiction. Like the "All Soul's Church," "all" with her is universal. All must hear the gospel whether they want to hear it or not; all must be raised from the dead; all must be saved; all must be ransomed; but hold! she uses the words "saved" and "ransomed" with half of the meaning squeezed out of them: all are only "saved" from the grave and "ransomed" from the tomb—that's all she means! Independent of human participation or co-operation in the matter, she goes on her way arbitrary as any Universalist, till she gets half way; there she stops and leaves thousands without the "force making for righteousness;" and they perish forever because left to themselves! Things done in halves are never worth the doing.

There is an application of the benefits of Christ's death taught in the Bible. "Of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption" (1 Cor. 1:30). How excellent soever Christ is in himself, what treasures of righteousness soever lie in his blood, and what ravishing comforts spring up to men out of his birth, humiliation, and exaltation, they all give out their distinct benefits and blessings in the way of effectual application. "In Christ Jesus" there is wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; out of him, nothing.

Never was any wound healed by a prepared but unapplied plaster; never any body warmed by the most costly garment made but not put on; never any heart refreshed and comforted by the riches cordially compounded but not received; nor from the beginning of the world was it ever known that a deceived, condemned sinner was actually delivered for his sins until "of God," Christ was made his wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. For as the condemnation of the first Adam passes not to us except by generation we are his; so grace and redemption pass not from the second Adam to us except as by regeneration we are his. Adam's sin hurts none but those that are in him; and Christ's blood profits none but those who are in him.

AN INDIVIDUAL APPROPRIATION OF THE BLOOD OF CHRIST

THE FOLLOWING "poser" was sent out broadcast by a "Partial Universalist" as a kind of challenge a few years ago: "The Holy Scriptures do not teach an individual appropriation of the blood of Christ; therefore as Christ shed his blood for all, and as his blood cleanses from all sin, all will be saved, and the doctrine of everlasting punishment is absurd."

Well, if everlasting punishment is "absurd" Matt. 25:46 is absurd, for that Scripture teaches that doctrine in those very words. But Sister King, in company with all "Partial Universalists," denies the necessity of personal appropriation of the blood of Christ.* Because Christ shed his blood for all, it no more follows that all are cleansed by it than that all are enlightened by his teaching because he is "the light of the world." The sun shines for all, but there has to be "an individual appropriation" of the light; otherwise the sun shines in vain. To the confusion of spiritual profiteers the Bible teaches an individual appropria- of the death of Christ:

I. "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood" (Rom. 3:25). Faith is an "individual" act; and the propitiatory blessings of the blood of Christ are appropriated "through faith."

II. "In due time Christ died for the ungodly"; "We have now received the atonement" (Rom. 5:6, 11). The atonement confers no benefit upon the "ungodly" until they "receive" it—an "individual" act.

III. "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John

*That the benefits of Christ's death flow to the sinner without his participation or even his concurrence, is the very breath of life of Larger Hope as of Universalism. The only difference in the two theories is of degree. Both are spiritual profiteers, greedily grasping from God something for nothing. Larger Hope steals from him pratial salvation for all, independent of man's power to prevent it; while Universalism steals a full salvation for all unconditionally. On the principle of getting while getting is good, the Universalists are the wiser; for if temporal salvation must come upon all without their consent, in wisdom, analogy, and logic, eternal salvation may be obtained upon the same terms.

1:7). Here the cleansing power of Christ's blood is made to depend upon an "if."

IV. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?" (Rom. 6:3). Here is "an individual appropriation" of the blood of Christ on the part of believers, in their baptism.

V. "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Christ" (1 Pet. 1:2). To talk of any one being elected unto that which is the same to all, will not pass except among Universalists. And to make that to depend upon "obedience", which is just the same to the disobedient as to the obedient, is an unpardonable abuse of language.

The Apostles' Doctrine

Pemmican Notes of the Editor's Sermon

NOW WHEN they heard this they were pricked in their hearts, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. For the promise is unto you and your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. . . . And they continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine, and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers" (Acts 2:37-42).

BY READING the entire chapter you will discover that the words we have read relate to the sermon that Peter gave on the day of Pentecost. Sinners pricked in their hearts asked Peter and the other apostles "what shall we do?" and the reply which Peter gave and in which all the apostles concurred is, "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins."

From the 24th chapter of Luke we discover that there is unusual importance in these words; for there the Master said repentance and remission of sins were to be preached in all the world "beginning at Jerusalem." The conditions of forgiveness required by Peter of the pentecostians in the 2nd chapter of Acts apply to all the world. Therefore it follows that what Peter told them to do for the forgiveness of sins is what the Lord tells us. "Repent and be baptized . . . . for the forgiveness of sins."

I suppose that some are thinking now. "There he is, back on doctrine again." Why should we not preach the doctrine that Peter preached? Why should we not preach the same conditions of forgiveness that he laid down? Why should we not believe in the forgiveness of sins according to the terms that Peter here states? Those who dislike doctrinal preaching should read the 42nd verse, "And they continued steadfastly in" something that he calls "the apostle's doctrine and fellowship, in the breaking of bread, and in prayers."

DOCTRINE A WORLDLY NECESSITY

We live an age of turmoil, upheaval, and unrest. We are living at a time when changes of all kinds are popular. I recall an old maxim which says, "None are so apt to believe too little as those who commence by believing too much." Our late European war has smashed many ideals. Reaction has affected creeds. Among the results that have followed the late war is the amalgamation of religious beliefs, the fusion of sects into one body. If you want to arouse one's suspicion just suggest that we have a creed. "Do you folks have a creed?" they ask with a look that dares us to say yes. But let us be reasonable. What would the world be without doctrine? People say, "Give us practical religion. The world has too much of the doctrine already." What would the world do without creeds and summaries of belief?

Let us take the political situation for illustration. Whoever organized a government without political doctrine? How long would the United States exist without a constitution? The constitution is just a summary of political belief. Right or wrong, the government of the United States came into existence through that instrumentality, and it remains the basis of the government to this day.

If you will investigate labor unions you will find there is not a union in the world but what has a creed. A labor union without a summary of principles connot exist. There is not in existence today a political party that does not have a belief summarized in a platform. Suppose the Republican Convention in Chicago had said, "We must not touch upon Woman's Suffrage; we will remain silent on this issue also on that." Suppose the Demorcratic party in San Francisco had tried the same evasions, "We will not say anything about Women's Suffrage. We love liberty too well. We will just state to the people that we are standing on the Constitution of the United States." Beloved, since the world cannot get along without doctrine, and unions without principles—since the world hangs together by political belief; certainly the Church of God cannot exist in this world without belief, a definite summary of principles.

THE MOSAIC THEOCRACY BUILT ON DOCTRINE

"Hear O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord" (Deut. 6:5). These words form the Constitution of the Israelitish government, the very backbone of the Mosaic theocracy. The goverment built upon that foundation lasted more than 1600 years. Jesus Christ in Mark 12 did not say that he stood on the Constitution, merely. When asked, "Which is the first commandment of all?" he did not boast of standing on the Constitution, but he quoted the very words of Deut. 6:4, 5 codifying part as the first commandment, and another part as the second commandment. He knew what stood "first" and what stood "second." He committed himself to specific declarations and bound himself by a creed. The Mosaic Theocracy was built upon specific doctrine.

THE CHURCH OF GOD IS ALSO FOUNDED UPON DOCTRINE

Doctrinally, people like the vague better than the specific. But addressing Peter Christ asked, "Whom do you say I am?" And Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. 16:15, 16). Here Peter specifically states a belief, and Jesus Christ, instead of saying, "Away with doctrine," said, "Upon this rock I will build my church." Now here we are either Catholics or Protestants. If Catholic we can build the church on Peter; but if Protestants we must build it on what Peter confessed. Jesus Christ built his church on a creed. Then "Repent ye, and believe the gospel" (Mark 1:15).

TO THE BRETHREN OF THE CHURCH OF GOD:

It has long been my purpose to provide a witness that will continue to sopak for me and proclaim gospel truth after my tongue is silent in death; and with that end in view, I have for many months been laboring on manuscript for a little book, in which I shall endeavor to present gospel truths in language that will interest and attract both old and young. It will be a book of 80 pages, entitled "Good Company," and is specially designed to attract and interest both the alien and the young. Parents cannot afford to neglect having a few copies of this little book around for family use at home and for distribution. Price 25 cents. My object in this note is to get some idea of to what extent the brethren will support my efforts. I am now an old man of limited means, and before submitting manuscript for publication, must have assurance that at least a part of the edition will be sold. With that end in view, I will be grateful if brothers and sisters will drop me a line informing me how many copies they can use.

DEAR OLD RESTITUTION:

IT IS not because I have not relished the good things I find in your pages, neither do I want to be neglectful of the kindness shown me of the weekly visits; for I learned to read and loved The Restitution when quite a young girl. Then I was without it for so long. Now as I grow older I find it more precious than ever. In June 22nd issue, "Is Man an Immortal Being?" is strong in Bible arguments that he is not. Strange that those who claim to study the word will in the face of all truth insist that man has an immortal soul when it cannot be found between the covers of the Good Book. A friend of mine in talking of the good who die said, "We all think our mothers went to heaven." I said, "No. While I think my mother as good a woman as ever lived, she did not think, and according to the Scriptures I do not think she went to heaven." She was dumbfounded. Then I tried to tell her the way of the Lord, but she refused to listen. Verily we know we are in the times when they will turn away from the truth and be turned unto fables.

I am alone in the faith here, but I am sure the time is near even at the door when our King will come and execute judgment and justice in the earth. When the cares and trials of this life will be forgotten in love and everlasting joy and peace in our Lord.

Greetings to all our readers.

AN INTERESTING LETTER

DEAR SISTER HARSCH:

I NOTICE the annual meeting of the National Berean Society of the Chuch of God convenes July 15 and 16, 1920.

I am deeply interested in that meeting and in the work of that organization. As a servant of God I am doing to the extent of my talents what I can in that line.

Under the efficient leadership of the chairman of the Social Correspondence committee, Anna L. Adams, I have been corresponding with the isolated members of the Church that are scattered abroad and we believe that we have awakened a deep interest in many a heart that had become almost dead to the interests of Christ and the Church, encouraged and helped the poor, the sick, the widows and orphans, with material help in special cases, fed the babes with milk, and helped the older ones to masticate the strong meat. Just the work that the church is called upon to do.

I send you dues, one dollar. Thanks for program. And may God add his blessing to your gathering, and your labor of love, and may it prosper is the prayer of your humble servant.

Ever for the truth,

M. W. PERRINE.

THE PRICE of The Restitution is two dollars a year. Is your subscription paid up?

AN APPEAL

DEAR BEREANS:

IN THESE days we see such an indifference existing towards all things religious, it seems to me it is time for us to take warning, and get busy and not allow drowsiness to overtake us. We all know that it is very common for us to think we cannot do anything, or if we can, what? We should sit down and think out some way ourselves for doing something for the promotion of truth. But we so seldom do this that it is left to others to tell us of ways and means to help in the cause of truth. I am convinced that the Berean Society affords one of the best means for each one of any other up to date. People cannot always be reached by ministers, and if they could the means to send them is not always at hand. So many just couclude there is nothing for them to do consequently just become inactive.

Now let us realize before it is too late when the Master comes we must be found at our post and alive to the work. Certainly each one knows of some one and perhaps different ones they could hand a tract to when we think about it we know we can do that and how many may be brought to know the truth by this work.

I am the secretary of the Nebraska Berean Society and know the tracts will never enlighten any one lying on the shelf, so I appeal to you to get these tracts out and let them be doing the work they were designed to do. If you know of some one you think would read them, send and get a few and hand to them. If you know of some one who is not in your immediate neighborhood you feel interested in, send me their name and address and I will send them whatever you suggest. It costs money to print these tracts and get them to the people, and we should all be indentified with some kind of work and be ready to contribute to its support. Why cannot each one send me your mite and I will see that it is put in the proper channel and where it will help in this commendable work.

Let us now get out what tracts we have and at the same time be prepared to get more when they are gone. I am not talking to just Nebraska Bereans. We know no state lines; we are one family. I would be glad to hear from you, no difference where you live. Please do not lay the paper down with a full resolve of some day when it is convenient you will respond to this appeal. But while it is fresh in your mind put off some other duty and for once (possible the first time) make the Lord's work come first and see if then your other duties will not come easier. I wonder who will respond first. Whose heart will this penetrate deeply? I must wait and see how you will vie with each other to respond first.

Your sister waiting for the kingdom,

MISS MAYNHILD SORENSEN.

CONTENTMENT

DON'T LOOK for flaws as you go through life
And even where you find them,
It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind,
And look for the virtue behind them.
For the cloudy night has a hint of light
Somewhere in its darkness hiding;
It is better by far to hunt for a star
Than the spots in the sun abiding.

The current of life runs ever away
To the bosom of God's great ocean;
Don't set your force 'gainst the river's course,
And think to alter its motion.
Don't waste a curse on the universe,
Remember it lived before you;
Don't butt at the storm with your puny form
But bend, and let it fly o'er you.

The world will never adjust itself
To suit your whim to the letter;
Some things must go wrong your whole life long,
And the sooner you know it the better.
It is folly to fight with the Infinite,
And go under at last in the wrestle;
The wiser man shapes into God's great plan
As the water shapes into the vessel.

HOW TO MAKE A CHURCH PROSPER

THERE IS a sure way of prosperity. It has never failed and never can. The following rules observed by all the members of any church will insure good days. If the church is decaying, the decay will soon be arrested. If it is standing still, it will soon begin to grow. If it is already flourishing, it will grow more rapidly.

(1) Attend all services regularly. If possible, be in time; you need at least five minutes after coming in to get a seat, and to compose body and mind for the service.

(2) Never miss a service needlessly. If you have visitors, invite them to go with you; they will respect you more as a Christian if you are faithful to your duty.

(3) If it rains or snows, make a special effort to go. Our churches stand much in need of storm-proof religion.

(4) Take part in the service. You go to worship not to be entertained.

(5) Be devout in your attitude; all whispering should be studiously avoided. Find the hymn, and sing it if you can; and share the boom with your neighbor.

(6) Speak to strangers and invite them to come again. A hearty hand-shake will add much weight to the invitation.

(7) Be friendly to all. Remember, hand-shaking has not gone out of fashion. A hearty Christian greeting means much by way of cheer, comfort, and encouragement.

(8) Accept gladly any work assigned to you. If pastor or someone else, are struggling under a load, take hold and help. At least, do not increase the burden.

(9) Never encourage strife, but be a peacemaker. Peace-makers, you know, are called "the children of God."

(10) Avoid gossip as you would an enemy; it is one of satan's best agents for starting church troubles.

(11) Give cheerfully, according to your ability. The Lord has dealt bountifully with you, hence you should be liberal with his cause.

(12) Think of the services through the week, speak of them to others, and pray that they may be attended with divine blessing.

(13) Pray for the sick and poor. Help the Lord to answer your prayers.

14) Pray for the pastor. His usefulness will be greatly increased by the daily prayers of the people.

(15) It is a great deal braver to try to do something to better the conditions of things than to try and criticise. If you mean to help along, don't get in front and block the way. Get behind and push. You will see how little you feel like finding fault with the burden-bearers after you have shouldered your part of the load.—Sel. from "Evangel."

THE PERFECT BOY

SOME LITTLE time since we printed an article entitled. "A Girl's Complete Education," which we thought would bear results, and sure enough it has, for out of the great west "A Girl" has sent us the following which she has entitled

A Boy's Education Is Most Incomplete Unless He Has Learned

To be prompt
To be courteous
To be generous
To be magnanimous
To be patient
To be industrious
To be pure
To be orderly
To be considerate of others
To be frank and honest
To be gentle with animals
To sew on buttons
To prepare a simple meal
To close a door quietly
To cheerfully assist mother
To clean real estate off shoes before entering the house
To keep war whoops and dances outside
To avoid evil companions
To guard against making a promise that cannot be fulfilled
To refrain from wounding others with stinging retorts
To esteem others better than himself
To form good and regular habits
To remember that "a good name is rather to be chosen than riches"
To "abound in every good work"
To "walk before God and be perfect"
To be a gentleman at all times and under all circumstances

WHICH ARE YOU

When Mary Sunshine goes to shop,
Of course she loves the toys;
Her eyes just feast on all the things
For little girls and boys;
But most she likes something to buy,
To make another glad;
Bringing surprise and happiness
To some poor lass or lad.

God loves the world. Christ loved the church. It is our plain duty to reflect both these loves on whoever we come in contact with. Self sacrifice is the most practical way we have of showing love. Let us imitate little Mary Sunshine and win the approbation of our heavenly Father.

Young Willie Crosspatch always wants
The contents of each shop:
He begs to have first this, then that—
One thinks he'll never stop.
And then, when something bought for him,
He wants another toy;
Now doesn't he just seem to be
A selfish, grasping boy.

If there's one thing in this world that is more distasteful than another, it is selfishness. Conceit and selfishness are the parents of practically every vicious act. Don't follow Willie's example; rather let us show Willie the error of his way and have him join the "Sunshine" class.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, O. JULY 27th, 1920. NUMBER 28

Deadly Consumption

For I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth (Isa. 28:22).

THE PROPHET heard this from the Lord, which shows that it is sure. The consumption will be unto death. This earthly order of things is gradually wasting away; little by little we see its life ebbing out. It seems sometimes that we get impatient and wonder why God does not wrest the power from the wicked one, but we must remember that consumption is a slow disease. It is slow but sure. After a certain stage in consumption, there is no possible cure for the patient. This old world has passed that stage and is wasting away fast. Each day shows a marked change to the student of prophecy. It will not be long before the Great Physician will take the pulse and pronounce the patient "dead." Glorious hour! may it soon come.

Then will commence the "times of restitution" spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, when Christ shall be King in all the earth. Dear brethren, are we watching and praying each day for this new order of things to be established? Let us keep our robes unspotted from the world, and be ready to meet the bridegroom when he comes to claim his bride.

Watch the signs of the times:
Yourr sister in Christ,

HANNA M. BARBER.

Gems for Zionists

NEW YORK, June 26.- Mrs. Nathan Strauss has donated all her jewels, valued at $18,500 to the Zionist Organization of America for the development of medical and health service in Palestine, the organization announced here today.

At the same time her husband gave the Zionist Organization $100,000 for a health and medical research department for the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Mr. and Mrs. Strauss are now on their way to Palestine.

Mrs. Strauss' action has started a similar movement among the Jewish women of England, Poland, and Palestine, according to reports received at Zionist headquarters here.

Prophetic Signs of the Times

SEVEN TIMES OF DAN. 4:16

THE NATIONS will be brought to their senses, also, by judgment, at "the end of the days" of the antitypical "seven times" or 2520 year-days, which, added to the time of the beginning, and commencing B. C. 562, would end in A. D. 1957. This seems to be the limit of the days of the "times of the Gentiles."

These "seven times" are "the times of the Gentiles" referred to in Luke 21, and in concluding our identification of them as such we will call your attention to the vision of the "Image" found in Daniel's second chapter. The image was of four different metals, the head being of "gold." These different metals represented the four world empires, beginning with Babylon. Daniel, when explaining the vision, said to Nebuchadnezzar: "Thou art this head of gold," which shows that Nebuchadnezzar, being the "head" of the image, stood for or represented the kingdom of men. Therefore, the visions of the "image" and the tree are alike. Thus we may clearly identify the kingdom of men with the times of the Gentiles mentioned in Luke 21, though the number of the "times" are not there given, but here in Dan. 4:16, associated with the "tree" vision, they are given as "seven." In the 32nd verse, Nebuchadnezzar was told that seven (minature) times would pass over him before he was brought to realize that the Most High ruleth in the "kngdom of men" and giveth it to whomsoever he will. In accordance with this scriptural declaration, God took the kingdom from the Babylonians and gave it to the Medo-Persians, then to the Grecians, and lastly to the Romans, whose empire was reduced to a divided state as we see Europe today. Thus, we have a straight line of the divisions of the kingdom of men back to the Babylonians; so the present dominions in either their political or church aspect, may be rightly referred to as "BABYLON THE GREAT" (Rev. 5; Jer. 25:26 Sheshach).

By starting "seven times" with the fall of Nineveh, B. C. 607, we are brought down to 1912, when the nations were at the zenith of their glory. There has been a most marked decline in Great Babylon's prosperity, and it will continue to decline, in proportion to the development and realization of Jewish nationalism, since the "Balkan League" of 1912, of which the "World War" was an out growth, as is evidenced by the fact that the late Emperor Joseph of Austria-Hungary said that (as a result of Serbia's supposed encroachments upon Austria's interests due to the extensive gains made in territory as a result of the Balkan Wars), "there must be another war." He began it, that is, the World War, in July of 1914.

So we have a forty-five year period from 1912 to 1957 as the time of Great Babylon's decline and for Israel's rise, which is called "the time of the end" in Dan. 12:9.

It was formerly assumed that the difference (forty-five between these two numbers represented "the time of the end," but it may be proved now by means of the "Gentile times" and the similar period of the time of the beginning as just illustrated. These periods of Dan. 12:11-13 are quite in harmony with the "Gentile times."

THE 1290 PERIOD NOW HISTORY

This 1290 period is now history, having been fulfilled in 1917, when the Turks lost Jerusalem and Mesopotamia; accordingly, the period began in A. D. 622 with the establishment of the "Hegira Era" and the Mohammedan abomination by Mohammed.

The expulsion of the Turk from Jerusalem was expected as a prominent sign of "the time to favor Zion" (Psa. 102:13); and the beginning of the generation of about forty years that shall not pass away until the kingdom of God is established. Therefore a five year overlapping of this period was looked for; since the five years are the difference between the time of the end (forty-five years) and Micah's forty years (Micah 7:15).

TIMES OF RESTITUTION BEGUN

The taking of Jerusalem was an appropriate marking of the "times of restitution" predicted concerning Israelitish affairs. "And at the time of vengeance the daily shall be taken away; in order to set up an abomination that maketh desolate two thousand and ninety days."

History has proved, as the verse plainly infers, when properly rendered, that one abomination was to take the daily sacrifice away (Dan. 8:11-13; Matt. 24:14-18); in order to set up another distinct abomination; not another phase of the same abomination as we formerly thought.

HARMONY OF INTERPRETATION NECESSARY TO CORRECT UNDERSTANDING

Much has been said in favor of commencing this period with Omar's capture of Jerusalem in A. D. 637, which seemed very feasible when taking this period alone into account while Jerusalem was held by the Turks, with the prospects of their holding it until 1927, which would then fulfil a 1290 period. But her deliverance in 1917 has upset this theory, as was expected, seeing that it was quite out of harmony with the other periods. If the period began in A. D. 637, the 1335 period of the 12th verse, having the same beginning as the 1290, would accordingly end in 1972 fifteen years beyond all the other periods. However, commencing the 1335 period with the 1290 in A. D. 622, when the founder of Mohammedanism began the "Hegira Era," it ends in 1957, which is, as we have shown, "the end of the days" of the Gentile times: this very same expression being also used with regard to this 1335 period in Dan. 12:13, where Daniel was told that he would stand in his lot at "the end of the days." So we have two different periods of time given in two different times ending at the same time, which is called in both cases "the end of the days," thus exhibiting the existing harmony of scriptural time-periods.

We have clearly illustrated the necessity of using and harmonizing all the time-periods which reach to our day if we hope for a correct solution of any one of the periods and of the complete "vision" of the times.

All of the time-periods reaching to our day will be found illustrated on the chart of the Time of the End in their respective connection with this time. Most of them start and end exactly, while some overlap a few years, the overlapping at most covering five years, as is illustrated in connection with the "12 90" period. It may be here said that we know of no instance where the time periods of Scripture run short a year of the allotted time.

It may be well to mention in this connection that the 1260 years of Dan. 7:25, which had its application to the temporal power of the papacy, beginning with the decree of Phocas in A. D. 606, which gave the pope power over the state and Emperor, and ending when the pope lost his temporal power and was made "a prisoner in the Vatican," in 1870, was a period of 1264 years in all, causing a four-year overlapping.

TIME PERIODS TERMINATE IN EPOCHS

In view of the foregoing, it seems that adding an extra year or two to some of the longer periods, but never deducting, is allowable, and that we should consider these long periods and the events to which they have reference as terminating in epochs; especially when we see that in some cases, where two different periods of different duration are given concerning the same event, one ends exactly, while the other varies slightly. In these deductions of the "times" they are considered as ending together at a point in the structure of "the time of the end" determined by a harmonious arrangement of all the different arches of time combined.—WALTER L. CURTIS.

All prayer in line with God's will and purpose cannot fail of an answer, because he definitely encourages his children to ask and faithfully promises to answer (John 14:13, 14; 16:24).

The Meekness of Christ

Now I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ (2 Cor 10:1).

PAUL WAS out on a collecting tour when this second epistle to the Corinthians was written, and the consensus of opinion places him at Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia, where it is thought all gifts intended for the poor saints at Jerusalem were probably sent, and from which they were forwarded. It seems so from the superscription. Paul had been wrongfully accused by some of the Corinthians of making gain of the church, though he had given them his services without cost. They had called him "base" because of his meekness and gentleness, and had ridiculed his rudeness of speech; and now he appeals to them by "the meekness and gentleness of Christ" to show them that all he had done had been for their edification and not for their destruction, and to save them from being beguiled into receiving any other gospel than he, however rudely, had taught; appeals to them to bear with him, because jealous over them with godly jealousy, having espoused them as a chaste virgin to Christ, lest when he came he be compelled to be bold in using such sharpness of speech he would rather not use, and warning them that if he came again he would not spare those who had sinned and not repented.

But it is not my purpose to analyze this epistle of Paul: it is his meekness and gentleness that I wish to emphasize, and emphasizing these qualities in him emphasizes them still more strongly as belonging to Christ, and as elements that must enter into our characters if we want to share with the Master the delights and glories of the everlasting kingdom.

What is meekness? Young defines it as "humbleness," "humility," "mildness." An humble person does not think more of himself than he ought to think; he does not have the proud look that is an abomination to the Lord. "The Lord resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble."

"Come," says Jesus, "come hither to me; for I am lowly in heart." A proud Savior might refuse such laboring, heavy laden souls as you are; but this Savior will not. Whosoever will may come.

It is a galling yoke that satan has put on our neck, the monstrous bundles that he has hung and locked securely to each end of that yoke are so crushing that if you do not go to Jesus to get rid of them, they will drag you into a deep, dark pit, labelled "everlasting destruction."

Meek? Yes, and that means "mild," and to be mild is to be "tender and gentle in temper and disposition; kind; compassionate; merciful; clement; indulgent; not fierce or cruel";"Not stern or angry, or rough, or frowing, but calm and tranquil"—just the person for man in his wretchedness to go to, and unafraid, confess how sin has bound and is holding him fast, so that he cannot get away. How he battles with drink, with nicotine, with gluttonous appetite, with temper, with lustful desires and is beaten every time; and how much he needs and must have a merciful Savior to whom he can cry "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner"; and who will answer, "My child, thy sins are forgiven thee!" Good reason we have to come to such a Savior, for he being "meek and lowly in heart," we shall not be sent empty away, nor be cast out as of no account, but because of that meekness and lowliness of his character that causes him to bend, to uplift and forgive and hide all our sins from sight, shall "find rest to our souls." No longer shall we be held in life-long bondage for fear of death, because free from sin, it having no more dominion over us; no longer under its jurisdiction, or its power, it cannot take from us our future being—cannot remand us back to the grave, when once its bars have been broken.

Sometimes when we look back at our sins we feel that it is not possible that we have been, or can be forgiven, but that is doubting the power and mercy of God, and the great love of our meek and compassionate Jesus who loved us and gave himself for us, even while we were yet sinners. We can safely trust in him, can take his yoke upon us without fear. It is not a heavy yoke, and the burdens hung upon it are light. "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me," he says. Learn what? Learn all that he taught; learn the gospel; learn to be "meek and lowly in heart" for he was. Divine love and tenderness were in his words; his looks, his actions, they should be in ours.

We are to "receive with meekness the ingrafted word," "show our works with meekness," give "a reason for the hope that is in us with meekness and fear," "in meekness are to instruct those that oppose themselves," are to "put on meekness," "follow after meekness," "show all meekness unto all men," and "if a man be overtaken in a fault, we are to restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering ourselves, lest we also be tempted." There is no law against meekness, but very precious promises are given to the meek. They shall "eat and be satisfied"; "the meek will he guide in judgment, the meek will he teach his way." "The Lord lifteth up the meek"; he will save the meek"; "will beautify the meek with salvation"; "The meek shall inherit the earth."

The meekness, gentleness, and love manifested by Christ is what draws us to him. "Nothing," says Geike, "could disturb his patience or rouse him to vindictiveness. He endured meekly the most contemptuous sneers, the bitterest criticism, and the most rancorous hostility."

"Round one so transcendently meek, self-interest found no motive for gathering. He who with such possibilities would do nothing for himself could not be expected to do more for the personal ends of others. Hypocrisy had nothing to gain by seeking his favor. Only sincerity found him attractive. Condescension wins admiration when it is only from man to man; when it showed itself in veiled omnipotence, ever ready to bless others, but never used on its own behalf, it became a divine ideal."

And it is this divine ideal that we are to follow. A brother, "overtaken in a fault," cannot be restored by harsh and cruel words. It takes the meekness and gentleness of Christ to win the erring back to the way of righteousness and peace. And it takes the "meekness and gentleness of Christ" to successfully instruct others. Ridicule, sarcasm, never melts the hearts of unbelievers, nor opens blind eyes; nor does calling people hard names convince them of error in doctrine. It takes a lot of love and meekness to be a Christian, and a lot of patience too, dear brethren. God did not call us to tear down, but to build up; he did not call us to "kill," but to save; did not call us to hate men, but to bless them. If hatred toward anyone who differs from us creeps into our hearts, the best antidote that can be found for that hatred is to pray for them.

Gentleness is nowhere else attributed to Christ save in 2 Cor. 10:1; yet in all descriptions given of him in the gospels and epistles we can see that this was a prominent feature in his character. Little children loved him because he was gentle; they crowded round him, sat upon his knees, and joyed to have his hands laid upon their heads in blessing, because he was such a meek and gentle man. And right here that old hymn for children comes to mind: was it from "The New England Primer" that we learned it?

Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
  For God has made them so.
Let bears and lions growl and fight,
  For 'tis their nature to.

But children, you should never let
  Your angry passions rise:
Your little hands were never made
  To tear each others eyes.

Live like God's well beloved Son,
  That sweet and lovely child:
Let love through all your actions run,
  And all your words be mild.

His soul was gentle as a lamb,
  And as in age he grew,
He grew in favor both with man
  And God, his Father too.

Now priest for us he sits above
  And from his heavenly home,
Sees what children dwell in love,
  And marks them for his own.

A little grandson of a Mrs. Beers, who lived not far from Spencer, Tioga Co., New York, more than 100 years ago, said one day, "How does he mark them grandma; how does he mark them?" and she said, "He marks them with his mind."

Now as Paul prayed for his Corinthian brethren, so dear ones do I pray for you, "that you do no evil;" "Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you."

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Living Today

LET US reverently thank God for being granted the privilege of living during the past five or six years. The result of the action of centuries has been crowded into this time. We not only look backward on the past with a full understanding as explained in prophecy but with the eye of faith we can see into the future, knowing what God has in store for those who know God and are learning at the feet of his Christ, as well as what is to happen to those who know not God.

Those who have lived during this time without learning the "lesson of the day" have missed the greaest oportunity of finding out the will of God they ever will have.—A. D. DONAIDSON.

Where are the Dead, and What is Their Condition?

IF WE enquire of the Mohammedan, the Arab, the pagans of China or the South Sea Islanders, the American Indian or the native of darkest Africa, we find a perfect agreement that dead men are not dead; that death is merely a change to another condition of life; that death brings a state of misery and torment for some, and joy and pleasure beyond the power of words to express, for others. The immortal soul of modern popular theology was borrowed from these heathens by that old harlot the church of Rome, and incorporated into her creed it became a source of vast revenue to the church as, according to their creed, only the prayers of priests can loose the soul from the pains of purgatory, and the cost of their prayers and masses, and their number are only limited by the ability of sorrowing relatives today.

When protestant churches branched off from the old mother church, they took with them their heathen fable of the immortal soul, and the conscious existence of the dead; and it has become the chief corner stone of modern, popular theology. The chief object of all churches is to save precious immortal souls from eternal torment in hell and provide for them a home midst the joys of heaven; therefore they preach and sing of a never dying soul to save, and fit it for the skies; or devils plunge it down to hell in infinite despair. To the earnest and honest seeker after truth, all is darkness and confusion, and he stands in hesitation and doubt.

Here on the left he hears a lusty toot,
The captain of the schooner "Angel makers,"
Is setting forth the safety of his route,
While sends his craft straight on the fatal breakers.

Another shouts, "This is the chosen way.
Behold ye not the beackon ever yonder?"
Then steers his ship where fogs the thickest lay,
Condemns with righteous wrath all those who doubting ponder.

"Ho, ye that would be saved," another cries,
"Trust not yourselves to false, misguided leaders;
This bark alone is chartered for the skies,
Heed not the canting of yon crafty pleaders."

And thus the strife goes on day after day;
In vain we seek its meaning to unravel,
An hundred ships of Zion, are sailing every way,
And voices raised in fruitless cavil.

As an antidote for this turmoil and confusion of fables and creeds, let us turn to the sure word of God, and we shall find that when a man dies he is dead, wholly and entirely dead; he is no longer alive in any sense. An unconscious dreamless sleep, in which condition he knows nothing, nor has he any knowledge of the lapse of time.

"Man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, he shall not awake, nor be raised out of his sleep" (Job 14:12). "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake" (Dan. 12:2). We read that "David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David" (1 Kings 2:10); David himself referring to his approaching sleep of death and the awakening, says, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy (Christ's) likeness" Psa. 17:15). David also fully understood that his sleep would be a state of unconsciousness, for he says, "In death there is no remembrance of thee (God); in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" (Psa. 6:5). Also "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4). Isaiah agrees also that "the grave cannot praise thee (God), death cannot celebrate thee, they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth" (Isa. 38:18) Solomon also adds his testimony in language that cannot be misunderstood. "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything" (Eccl. 9:5, 6). And as if anxious to place the question beyond possible doubt he continues, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast for all is vanity. All go into one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Eccl. 3:18-21).

If, therefore, God has said that David is not ascended into the heavens, but that he is sleeping with his fathers; if God has said that the dead cannot praise him, but at death his thoughts perish, and he knows not anything; if God has said that at death the same thing befalleth men that befalleth beasts; even the sa;me thing: if all have the same breath (spirit); if all go into one place; and if, in the death state man hath no pre-eminence above a beast; if God, who cannot lie, be the author of these (and a multitude of other Scriptures which reiterate the same truths); and if God has indeed caused these things to be written and preserved for our correction and instruction, upon whom the ends of the world have come: any man who will turn away from them and continue to teach that mankind is immortal and cannot die, and that the dead are not dead, but alive and conscious, singing praises to God in heaven, or cursing his name in the torments of hell, is a falsifier of God's word, without God or hope in the world. God pity such creatures, for the world is full of them. As a matter of fact a vast majority of those who think themselves Christians belong to this class. God has a controversy with those who refuse to believe his word, and the great and notable day of reckoning is almost in sight. Just a little while and those unfortunates, who are being lulled to sleep by the soothing fables of heathen mythology, dished up and daintily served by learned theologians and so-called doctors of divinity, will experience a shock that will stertle the world, and the great day of retribution will have begun.

How beautiful and satisfying is the teaching of the Bible concerning the state of the dead, as revealed by this brief reading of the word: just a quiet, peaceful, dreamless sleep, calm and patiently waiting for the glad morning of the resurrection, now so near. It is then our dear Lord and Savior has promised to return, and awaken those who have believed and obeyed his word, rather than the traditions of men, as he did Lazarus, and bid them come forth. It matters not whether we have been sleeping a day or a thousand years; it will seem but a moment to us. Such a faith, such a hope, dear ones, almost robs death of its terror. Just a wee short sleep, and then awake to meet our Lord and Savior; awake to clasp in fond embrace our dear ones, rescued from the prison house of death; awake to feel the power of an endless life leaping and bounding within us; awake to realize that no longer can sickness, pain or death terrify us; awake to realize that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him, and believe his word.

S. H. THOMAS.

Man

MAN, THE same as a book, is divided into pages and chapters; he also has an appendix.

Man often is an open book although he may be bound in paper, cloth, morocco, or half calf.

Books have an index, and so has man. The best index of the man is to note what he reads. If he fills his mind with good thoughts through good reading you have a good man. Of course the best reading a man can indulge in is the Book of books. There also are many other good books, but there is no other book from which we can get the same amount of profit, instruction, and satisfaction as we secure when we read the Bible with the eye of faith and the desire to understand.

DO IT NOW

PROCKASTINATION STEALS more success than almost any other thing. Putting things off to a more convenient time is a most expensive habit.

You have thought of renouncing the world and coming out on the side of Christ as a son of God. But you are waiting for a more convenient time. Do you not realize that the only moment we live is the present one? We know not what is to happen next month, next week, tomorrow, or even the next moment. Give your heart to God. Accept God's plan of salvation. Don't procrastinate. Don't put it off. Don't delay. DO IT NOW.

Sister A Ashute writes: "Please give our Christian love to the Cleveland church of God. Please ask them to write to us. Also print my address in our paper with a request to the believers everywhere to write to us. We are only three here, Brother Sam. Pitts, Brother A. Ashute and myself. Best love and good wishes." Men, like trees, begin to die at the top. Make intelligent use of your brains in order to secure health and long life. Two classes of men are noted for longevity—those who do hard work and students of large and broad intelligence: the first because contrained to simple and regular living in air free from the corroding anxieties of the rich; the other because it is the brain rightly and constantly used which keeps the body in order and thus prolongs life.

On Saturday afternoon, June 26, 1920, thirteen of the brothers and sisters of Cleveland journeyed to Brother B. F. Smith's home at Monroeville. After a hearty repast of good country cooking we visited Brother Newman and Marie Smith, son and daughter-in-law of Brother B. F. Smith. After our evening's visit all the younger folks motored to town and returned for a fine night's sleep. Sunday found us up bright and early not wanting to miss any of the good fresh country air. At ten-thirty we had an interesting lesson on the subject of "Unbelief," led by Brother B. A. Meermans, after which we partook of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our dear Lord. As there were twenty present in all, all members of the one body except two, we had a very enjoyable meeting. Brother Smith suggested we take up a collection and forward same to the Cleveland church of God. The result was the amount of ten dollars. After a real country chicken dinner and a good rest we motored back to Cleveland thankful that some of our brethren, although isolated, are looking and longing for the return of our Master.—One who was there.

Identity not Destroyed in Unconsciousness

I HAVE a friend whose education is rather pretentions who claims that identity would be destroyed by unconsciousness. Does consciousness always continued constitute identity?

Editorial Comment

No more than perception of truth, light, and cold is the efficient cause of truth, light, and cold. Our identity is perceived by consciousness; but consciousness is as different from truth as past events are different from memory, as colors from the power of seeing. Consciousness of identity is so far from constituting identity, that it pre-supposes it. An animal might continue the same being and yet not be conscious of identity; which is probably the case with at least some of the brute creation; and which is sometimes the case with man himself. When we sleep without dreaming, and often too in our ordinary dreams, we lose all sense of our identity, and yet our identity suffers no interruption: the moment we awake we are conscious that we are the same individuals that we were before.

A Friendly Word for Larger Hope

Number Three

"III. THE RESURRECTION is to be universal".

The proof for this statement is, God made his plan of salvation for "every man," and conditioned his salvation upon his acceptance of it. God has not granted knowledge of his plan to the "every man" for whom he made it; hence the resurrection of those who have died without receiving knowledge of the opportunity which the plan furnishes. There is no question concerning the resurrection of enlightened ones whether worthy or unworthy. The fact that God's plan of salvation is universal so far as he is concerned and that he has not made it known universally, leaves no room to question the resurrection of the unenlightened class.

This proof for the resurrection of the unenlightened class is the same kind of proof God granted to Abraham of his resurrection. He made him certain promises that made his resurrection necessary.

ALTA KING.

CHALLENGED TO prove universal resurrection, the response is as above. We are simply told that resurrection for the ignorant is guaranteed by promises which make their resurrection necessary This may not convincingly prove the proposition, but allowing it does, "the promises" in the case should have been given fully and plainly. The argument for universal resurrection is made to rest entirely upon promises, not one of which is given! Instead of quoting promissory Scripture we are treated to a semblance of logic after the following fashion:

LARGER HOPE EXPRESSED LOGICALLY

I. GOD made a plan of salvation for "every man";

II Afterwards he conditioned man's salvation upon his acceptance of that plan:

III. Man's acceptance of the plan, however, was impossible without knowledge;

IV. This knowledge God refused to impart to man;

V. Therefore the plan is a blank failure, so far as the masses are concerned, because God refused to grant a "knowledge of his plan to 'every man' for whom he made it";

VI. Conclusion: To keep the bottom from falling out of the plan, and to save himself from shameful incompetence, God must raise all mankind from the dead and impart to them the knowledge which he had previously denied them.

A PLAN OF POWER WITHOUT WISDOM

IT IS a suspicious circumstance that in all this prolix logic not a text of Scripture is quoted to prove that the resurrection will be universal; or that the people raised will be "granted knowledge" after they emerge from the tomb. Now reader, what thinkest thou of the "plan" proposed? God is represented as making a plan which extends to "every man" in the universe; then of imposing the condition of knowledge by which alone the plan could reach and benefit them; then of failing to "grant" the requisite knowledge! Millenniums pass by with leaden feet, crushing out the life of billions of poor ignorant, helpless sinners. Finally, the resurrection comes. The "plan," incredibly belated, must be carried out in the case of "every man." So all are raised from the dead, then all are "granted" the knowledge formerly denied them, and finally all are — ——.

The "Plumb Plan" and other devices of men show more wisdom than God is represented as showing in the Larger Hope sketch of his purpose. To say their "plan" blasphemes his holy name is to put it mildly and conservatively. God appears, from their standpoint, to be excessively fond of displaying power but painfully ignorant. He performed a stupendous miracle in creating man, then lacked either the generosity or the wisdom to "grant" him knowledge. He left him in helpless ignorance to die as ignorant as the beast. Then God intervenes by another and greater miracle: he RECREATES him, and after this second miracle he "grants" him knowledge! In all these repeated miracles of wasted power no end is attained which could not have been reached without them. There cannot be found in any part of the "plan" one grain of wisdom. There is a prodigality of power, but no wisdom. What a wasteful expenditure of miraculous power!

THE ADEQUACY OF GOD'S SAVING POWER

TURNING TO "the promises" of God's word we learn that he has adequate means to impart knowledge at the present time. He has "ten thousand times ten thousand" angels (Dan. 7:10) to minister "to them who shall be heirs of salvation" (Heb. 1:14). Have these celestial ministers gone on a strike? The Holy Spirit "helpeth our infirmities" (Rom. 8:26) and guides us into "all truth" (John 16:13). Has the Holy Spirit abandoned its office of help and guidance? The word of God is "able to save" (James 1:21). Has the word of God become obsolete? Christ is a great high priest at God's right hand "able to save them to the uttermost that come to God by him" (Heb. 7:25). He has "compassion on the ignorant and on them that are out of the way" (Heb. 5:2). Has the priesthood of Christ collapsed, and has the compassion of Christ vanished away? God lives. None seek him in vain (Isa. 45:19). He seeks worshippers (John 4:23) with hand not shortened and ear not heavy (Isa. 59:1). But in spite of all these saving agencies reaching out to "the uttermost," Larger Hope complains that God does not "grant knowledge" now! At the present time we have angels the Holy Spirit, the word of God, the intercessions of Christ, and God himself seeking the lost. In the future what agencies other than these will be used to "grant knowledge"? Shall we then have the ministrations of angels? We have that now. Shall we have the guidance of the Holy Spirit? We have that now, too. Shall we have the word of God? We have that today. Shall we have the priesthood of Christ? We have that today to "the uttermost." Shall God love, bless, and save? He is doing all this today! We challenge the world to show a single saving instrumentality that will be used in the age to come which is not employed in the present. Thus do we completely vindicate the righteousness of God from the libel cast upon him by those who would dishonor him for the sake of sustaining the future probation of the dead

RESURRECTION LIMITED, NOT UNIVERSAL

INSTEAD OF God having a plan which it is impossible for him to execute now, although assisted by angels, the Holy Spirit, the word of God, and Jesus Christ; and instead of making "promises" which make the resurrection of all mankind necessary, and that then by other agencies (not named) he will carry out his plan, we find just the opposite idea is taught in the Holy Scriptures. Consonant with man's mortality, finiteness, and worthlessness, where ignorance obtains among men they have none of the responsibilities of the rejectors of the gospel, and neither do they have any of the privileges of enightened and obedient believers. The irresponsible are without amenability to any law. They cannot be punished without outraging justice; they cannot be saved with violating every condition of the gospel as well as every divine principle. According to the dictates of logic and reason, and on the strength of the following solemn declarations of the Almighty, we submit that they are exempt from responsibility, and that they will never see the light of resurrection. Their existence terminates forever in death.

If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost (2 Cor. 4:3).

Alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their hearts (Eph. 17, 18).

The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead (Prov. 21:16).

They shall not rise (Isa. 43:17):They shall fall and never rise up again (Amos 8:11-14).

Men of the word have their portion in this life (Psa. 17:14); They have their reward (Matt. 6:5).

They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore, thou hast visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish (Isa. 26:13, 14). They shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts (Jer. 51:39, 57).

Why died I not from the womb? . . . . With kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places (tombs) for themselves; or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver; or as a hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw the light (Job 3:11-16).

Wherefore then hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh that I had given up the spirit, and no eye had seen me! I should have been as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave (Job 10:18, 19).

If a man beget a hundred children,, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good . . . I say, that an untimely birth is better than he. For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness. Moreover, he hath not seen the sun, nor known anything. This hath more rest than the other (Eccl. 6:3-5).

TO THE CHURCH OF GOD IN CHRIST JESUS.

HOW WE love those precious words and the loving ones who are writing such loving letters in The Restitution. How we long to be with you in your services, and do hope it will not be long till we shall rejoice in the day of redemption, thanks to our Lord and Master. Let us all be ready with our lamps triimmed and burning.

How we would rejoice to hear a good truthful sermon once more. I know we could not keep from weeping for joy to see and hear the children of God testifying to their happiness in the Lord and the glory of his power. As the poet says:

We shall know as we are known,
  Never more to walk alone,
In the dawning of the morning
  When the mists have cleared away.

When we err in human blindness
  And forget that we are dust.
Face to face with those that love us,
  When we struggle to be just.

Dewy wings of peace shall cover
  All the plain that hides the way:
We shall know each other better
  When the mists have cleared away.

Oh! what a glorious time there will be when saints and angels will meet the dear Lord in the air never more to part: never more to sin and sorrow. I am sure we shall all be there if we live in the spirit of the Lord. The Restitution is our only minister, and we read it over and over. We are so glad to see your names in The Restitution and feel nearer to you all.

May the dear Lord's blessings be with you all in your conference meetings is our prayer.

Your loving sisters in Christ.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

ON JULY 6, 1920, we began a special meeting at Cove Springs, Warren Co., Va. Because of heavy rains the meeting closed July 11. The attendance and interest were good. On Sunday we had an all day meeting, preaching in the forenoon and an entertainment by the children, led by our daughter, Mellie, and preaching in the afternoon. Dinner was served at the church and there was plenty of good things for all and then some. The sisters of Cove Springs Church know how to get a good dinner. About noon it began to rain and poured down a heavy torrent till night. However, after preaching in the afternoon a few went to the creek where we had the pleasure of baptizing Brother D. J. Updike into Jesus Christ. For the past two years Brother Updike has been a student of God's word, but as he had been baptized(?) by the Baptists, he was slow in obeying Mark 16:15, 16. So we rejoice that he did obey before it was too late. There are a number of people at this place who believe (?), but hesitate in obeying, and make all kinds of excuses for their disobedience. Oh! that people would take God's word as it is, believe what it says, and obey its commands! How careful the members should live so that their conduct will honor God's cause. Brother, if a member by his conduct brings a reproach on the church, what will God do with that member? Will the Editor write on the above question?

Israel

No. 3

PAUL GIVES us a lesson on who are Jews. Israelites, and children, thus, "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly, ... But he is a Jew which is one inwardly; and circumcision is of the heart" (Rom. 2:28, 29); "For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel" (Rom. 9:6); "Neither because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children" (Rom. 9:7).

"An Israelite indeed" is one "in whom there is no guile" (John 1:47). These texts show us that even if the United States, England, Germany, Holland, the Scandinavian states, and the colonies of Britain were all direct descendants of the twelve tribes there would be few Israelites or Jews, in the strict sense of the word, among them; for very few of those peoples are circumcised at heart, and their relationship to Abraham is not a pledge of their being children of the Most High. The Israel (wicked) of the past have no more hope than a wicked Gentile. They were taught by the great Teacher, "Except ye repent ye shall . . . . perish" (Luke 13:1-5). Moses told them, "A prophet shall the Lord God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people" (Acts 3:22, 25).

Peter adds to this, "Yea and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days. Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, and in thy seed shall all the kindred of the earth be blessed. Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you (not will in the future send him, but in the past, "sent him to bless" the Jews of Peter's day) in your turning away each from his evils" (Acts 3:24-26, Rotherham). Paul clinches this nail by saying, "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the Scripture seeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which are of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (Gal. 3:7-9).

Those two apostolic authorities give us to understand that the blessing promised to Abraham comes now to those of faith, and is not forced upon any unconditionally; but is participated in by the faithful whether Jews or Gentiles, and thus we are informed that "the families" who are to be blessed must be in Abraham and his seed, or in other words, IN ABRAHAM AND CHRIST. All the families in Christ lacks quite a lot of being all the families that have existed, will exist, or do now exist. The Greek is "en," and the Hebrew word is as strong; and here is a reason why Paul makes "they which are of faith. . . . the children of Abraham:" and "they which be of faith, ... blessed with faithful Abraham." All are not children because descendants of Abraham, nor does the text declare all will be blessed by Abraham and Christ; but "IN THEE (ABRAHAM) AND IN THY SEED shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Those in Christ are related to him by faith and obedience, and those in Abraham must be related to him the same way; so we are told, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (After one has put on Christ, he is in him). "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's then ye are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:26-29).

This is conclusive, and needs no comment. But will it be the same in the millennium age? Yes. How do I know? By this: "And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins" (Rom. 11:26, 27). Here it is positively stated that the Deliverer shall take away the sins of the Israel of the return, or the Israel of the future. Are there any conditions in this? Let us go back to what is written and see; "And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord" (Isa. 59:20). This is conslusive proof that those in Jacob (Israel) must turn away from their sins, that they may be removed. But this is not yet all the evidence we have. Listen: "As I live, saith the Lord God (not J. J. Heckman), surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you (Israel): and I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant: and I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the countries wherein they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel: and ye (the Israelites indeed) shall know that I am the Lord" (Ezek. 20:33-38).

The fury here is for a purpose; if not for the destruction of those rebels I am unable to see why it is poured out at this particular time; and the fact that the rebels are gathered from the lands in which they are scattered, and purged out in the wilderenss, is a proof that they are left without a home on earth. If taking away Israel's sins were coercive then all would be forced to be righteous, and there would be no rebels, unless God was a respecter of persons. The "pleading" here also shows that Israel has something to decide in the matter as to whether their sins are taken away or not. Jeremiah also chimes in here most beautifully in these wonderful words: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel, and the house of Judah with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them to build and to plant, saith the Lord. In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge" (Jer. 31:27-30). Should we here as Universalists do, make the word "every" a universal term, we would have all men dying for their own sins: and as natural death was brought about by the disobedience of Adam it could not be that; but must be a second death for humanity: but we will not be so inconsistent, and let God explain who it is that dies for his own sins: "He that eateth the sour grape," or he that is disobedient to God's will. Isaiah also falls in line here. "For by fire and by sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many" (chap. 66:16). This clinches the nail Ezekiel so forcibly has driven. The rebels are slain, and hence righteous Israelites only are saved, and restored to their land.

GOLDEN TEXT: Timothy 6:11, 12

Forgive me Father, for my sin,
For all the wrong I've done or been,
And make me true and pure within,
For Christ's sake. Amen.

WHAT CAN MAN DO?

MAN CAN make a ship that can ride the seas,
Through blinding storm and pouring rain.
But he cannot alter one zephyr breeze,
Nor the course of a hurricane.
Man can harness lightning, it's aid invoke,
And use it in all sorts of ways,
But he never can make a single stroke,
'Tis made by the Ancient of Days.

Man can delve and dig, and extract the ore,
Forge the steel, and refine the gold,
But he cannot make a single ounce more,
Than God gave Mother Earth to hold.
Man can mix the seed and produce new fruit,
For the jaded palates of folks,
But he can't give life to one tiny root,
That was done when the Great God spoke.

Man can people the earth "after his kind,"
And do much for their weal or woe,
But he must guess what's in a baby's mind,
Only God and angels can know.
Man may hold up his head and proudly say
"I can run ths old world alone,"
But he will find out there's a Judgment Day,
With Jehovah upon the throne.

THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM

JEHOVAH IS my shepherd; I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures;
He leadeth me beside still waters.
He restoreth my soul;
He guideth me in the path of righteousness for his name's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadaw of death,
I will fear no evil; for thou art with me;
Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me,
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies;
Thou hast anointed my head with oil;
My cup runneth over.
Surely goodness and loving kindness shall follow me all the days of my life;
And I shall dwell in the house of Jehavah for ever.

The above is the twenty-third Psalm as printed in the Revised edition of the Bible. To my mind it is the best written, the widest known, and the longest lived song ever published.

The twenty-third Psalm was not written in English, although today it is the most loved of all writings—English or otherwise. It universally is known as the "Shepherd Psalm," and was written by king David about three thousand years ago. Its atmosphere is not that of the court of Israel, but of the open fields, where the flocks of Jesse were watched over by a singing shepherd boy.

The reason the twenty-third Psalm has heartened king and peasant alike is that it takes us down to the level of life where all humanity have the fundamentals in common. The queen and the peasant's wife share in common this basic sense of God, the sense of reliance upon the shepherd care of the Divine. What a shepherd boy thought out on the hills of Bethlehem satisfies the deepest spiritual desires of humanity.

To have true wisdom we must have simplicity. You never will find a grain of the worldly-wise in David, or Peter, or Paul. Subtlety, astuteness, cunning—all fail before simple condor and faith. Vaunting unbelief often is simply absurd; there is more of profound philosophy in David's familiar lines than in all the books combined written on infidelity since the world began.

The twenty-third Psalm is David's confession of faith in the God of Israel. It speaks of God's love, his protecting care, his all-abiding grace, his ever present comfort and his power to provide. In it David also tells us of his faith in God, his acceptance of God's leadership, his acknowledgement that God doth provide, his acceptance of the rod of God, and his hope in the future fulfilment of God's promises. It is David's declaration of faith; it is his expression of the highest, the deepest truth he knows. He is bearing witness to the best that is in him. Before the twenty-third Psalm ever was meant to comfort others it was David's great confession of faith. "Truth is the highest thing a man can keep." Therein David tells a man's highest function of bearing witness to God.

Like sheep all of us need leading, feeding, and protecting. Our heart hunger is for shepherding. "All we like sheep have gone astray." We need the tender compassionate care of the Good Shepherd. The strongest spirit knowns, when best it knows it's best self, that it longs for the comfort of the Helper of the helpless. The hunger for God which the Psalmist portrays, is the deepest instinct of the human soul. It is a proof that man was created above the rest of animal creation; that our hope is in God and that we are homesick apart from God.

"He guideth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

ETERNAL YOUTH

IN THIS life there can be no eternal youth, but all men have an internal desire to remain young in heart. And here is where so many men fall behind. They dwell on the fact that they are getting old, and they get old before their time. The natural life is "three score years and ten," and few men there be who attain it, simply because man ignores nature and live unto themselves in their own way.

The life to come is "length of days for evermore," and still fewer there will be who will get it, simply because they ignore God and his Christ, living unto themselves in their own selfish way.

If we live unto God, accepting his Chrst, we can have eternal youth. It s worth striving for,

GRASP IT

LIFE IS just one big opportunity after another, and the greatest opportunity presenting itself is the Father's offer to make us "sons of God."

"SUFFER THE LITTLE CHILDREN TO COME UNTO ME"

ON TUESDAY morning, June 29th, after making a good confession of faith the following "little children" put on the name of Christ by baptism: Marie, Jennie, and Helen Thomas are the grandchildren of Brother S. H. Thomas and at their urgent request to be baptized, he gave them, during the winter months, the necessary instruction; and after feeling that they were fully prepared, he led them into the water. They were followed by the prayers of those on the bank who had their interest most at heart. May the protecting influence of God be ever over them and lead them always "in the paths of righteousness." May they always be found worthy of the name they have just entered into, that they may wear a crown of glory when our King comes to give such crowns to all who are worthy.

ARE YOU SUNSHINE OR A CROSSPATCH

WHEN MARY Sunshine's mother says,
"Now say good night, my dear,"
There's no delay on Mary's part,
To her it is quite clear
That mother knows what's best for her;
She hastens to obey.
And with a good night hug and kiss,
She ends a happy day.

In our dealings with God, obedience is righteousness, and disobedience is sin. The only way we can show our loyalty to mother is by willingly doing whatever she asks the moment she makes the request. If this has not been our habit, try it, and see how happy you will be.

WHEN WILLIE Crosspatch every night
Is told it's time for bed,
"Oh, let me wait five minutes more,"
He'll say, and shake his head
To each request that mother makes
For him to go upstairs,
That she can tell what's best for him,
He neither knows nor cares.

There is nothing more disgusting than a disobedient boy. No body wants him; nobody loves him. At times he may be tolerated, but he never is welcome. He has no friends nor does he deserve any. He is an outcast. Don't be a croospatch.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, O. AUGUST 3rd, 1920. NUMBER 29

Have You Found Jesus?

HAVE YOU found him, weary stranger?
  Is he precious to your soul?
Has he spoken peace and pardon,
  Touched your hand and made you whole?
Is he more to you than jewels,
  Stocks or mines, or flowing wells?
More to you than royal palace,
  Where earth's proudest monarch dwells?

More to you than friends or children?
  Height of place or worldly fame?
More to you than sweetest pleasures,
  Acres broad or titled name?
Oh, if not, your wealth is ashes,
  Cheating dust and tinselled toy!
Only yours for one brief moment
  Here to have and to enjoy.

All must perish with the using,
  Naught to keep for endless years;
Life go out in bitter grieving
  Vain regrets and useless tears!
Give yourself to God's sweet service;
  He hath need of such as you,
Earth's broad vineyard needeth tilling,
  Grand the work there is to do.

Up, delay not! life is going;
  Swift the moments speed away;
Would you have the crown of glory?
  Seek the Savior now today!
Rich reward awaits the doer,
  Wealth, beyond what tongue can tell;
Crown, and throne, and life immortal,
  And bright home wherein to dwell.

Sweet it is to work for Jesus,
  Building for the ages long;
Where will come no pain or dying,
  Nor be heard sad sorrow's song.
Work for him will prosper ever,
  Widening, broadening, moving on,
Till the world's last field of battle,
  Shall for Christ our King be won.—Selected by Brother and Sister A. ASHUTE.

Is Man an Immortal Being?

A Discussion of Man, Soul, Spirit, Death, Hell, and the Resurrection

RESURRECTION, THEN REWARD

IT IS appointed unto men once to die and after that the judgmnet. And so all men irrespective of character or moral fitness, the good and the bad, believer and unbeliever, all go to "sheol" into a state of death. As responsible moral beings, however, there is of necessity a judgment, and because this arena of our lives is not the place and time for rewards and punishments, responsible men must come up out of sheol and appear before "the judgment seat of Christ, that each may receive the things done in the body." Hence the great stress which Scripture places upon resurrection in the following order:

1st. The resurrection both of the just and of the unjust.

2nd. The judgments with rewards or punishments following and all this to resurrected human beings and not to ghosts or spirits. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." The judgment will determine whether to live forever or to suffer the second death.

PAUL'S ARGUMENT IN 1 COR. 15

Observe now the mighty issues resulting upon resurrection. Paul in 1 Cor. 15, after asserting the facts of Christ's resurrection, goes on in the 16th and following verses. "For if Christ rise not . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ have perished, literally, utterly destroyed. We, however, fail to grasp this conclusion, if the soul is immortal! Indeed, we think that, in that case, Paul to be not only a bad reasoner but the resurrection itself becomes an absurd superfluity.

Surely it was the very extreme of the rediculous for Paul to have stated that dead believers were utterly destroyed, if he held that souls were immortal! But the argument is irresistible on the premise that the soul is mortal and sleeps at death, and if there be no resurrection, the soul will sleep on for ever. which is tantamount to never living again. We will follow Paul on this same line of his all conquering argument to the 32nd verse of the same chapter. We quote from the revised version with its correct punctuation: "If after the manner of men, I fought with beasts at Ephesus what doth it profit me? If the dead are not raised, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." Paul here states in many words that the Epicurians (a school of philosophers who rejected the immortality of the soul, and who did not believe in a future state and whose motto was. "Let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die"); He says that they would be perfectly right in their belief "if the dead are not raised." It passes our comprehension, how Paul could have argued like this, if he held any mental reservation that souls were immortal! His enemies, the Platonists (another school who did believe in a future state and in the immortality of the soul) would have tripped him and have laughed him to scorn. "What necessity," they would have retorted, "can there be for your absurd resurrection of the dead when the soul in its intrinsic immortality, lives forever in consciousness?" How does the argument strike you, reader? Is there a loop hole for escape from the scriptural conclusion we have arrived at, that "the dead know not anything"?

MEANING OF THE WORD "DEATH"

When God warned Adam in these words, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," the question is not, how did Adam understand the threat? but how did Moses the historian writing some 2500 years after and his hearers understood it? Did they understand that a triple death was involved in the sentence? Did Moses and his hearers believe that this death included.

1st. The death of the body;

2nd. The spiritual death of the soul; and

3rd. The eternal death (life?) of both body and soul in the fires of Gehenna?

If he did, then his silence is amazing! That he should have kept back the far severer punishment to the "immortal soul" and have only mentioned the word "death" as referring to the body, is inconceivable. And be it noted that not alone Moses, but not one of the subsequent historians after him, makes the slighest reference to the punishment which lost souls were supposed to be undergoing in purgatory or the hell of theology. Are we forced to the conclusion that for 4000 years. Old Testament saints and sinners were left in absolute ignorance of the eternal process of punishing going on in sheol, until Paul rose up and lifted the veil to the shuddering gaze of the churches? Were this even so, we would stagger at so apparent a reflection on God's jutice and love. But is it so? Does Paul in the few texts supposed to convey this fearful teaching, really maintain this proposition and unheard of in the churches till later in the centuries? We assert and we challenge the assertion that Paul makes no such diabolical revelation. For the present we rest content with this.

It is credible that a blessing covering richer things, such as eye hath not seen or ear heard, may be vailed in a promise under general terms but to attribute to the loving and gracious Father a disposition to hide the real meaning of death by a prolonged silence of the appalling punishment which he purposed inflicting on Adam and on his myriad children, is not only incredible, but it is the worst reflection upon his character. What? That God had all along purposed that death to Adam included the perpetual and unceasing torment to his soul, and not to have so much as hinted at it? Is not this sufficient to brand him as an Omnipotent monster? And the malice (we speak in reverence) is aggravated from the fact that for 2000 years the prophets and teachers whom he sent by the score to warn, to teach, to implore, to beseech, never said a word not even gave a hint of the far more exceeding wrath in sheol which Adam's sons were already undergoing in their immortal souls! We wonder not at such men as Bradlaugh and Ingersoll rising up in their atheistical abhorence of such a God, profaning his name and in trumpet tones shaking the faith and patience of the saints of God. Inspired by God or otherwise taken which way you will they are attacking with irresistible power the the strong-holds of a corrupt theology. "Infinite punishment," said Bradlaugh, "is infinite cruelty administered by an infinite jailor and I bow not my knee to so detestable a monster." Fellow believer and free Christian, cheer up! "His word nevertheless standeth sure." Their assaults are but against creeds. "We have a more sure word of prophecy whereunto ye do well that ye take heed."

"By death," says John Locke, "some men understand endless torments in hell fire; but it seems a strange way of understanding a law which requires the plainest and directest words that by death should be meant eternal life in misery. Can any one be supposed to intend by a law which says that for felony thou shalt surely die, not that he should lose his life, but be kept alive in exquisite and perpetual torments, and would anyone think himself fairly dealt with that was so used?"

ADAM'S EXPULSION FROM THE GARDEN

After Adam's transgression and sentence, Moses records his expulsion in these words, Gen. 3:22: "And now the Lord God said. Behold the man is become as one of us to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever, therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man, and he placed Cherubim with flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." We ask in all honesty, what could Moses have understood and meant by this? Adam by disobedience forfeited, not God's favor,—as is unwarrantably asserted but he forfeited the right of eating of the tree of life to perpetuate his esixtence. He was dust from the day of his creation and now became a mortal rebel; but lest he become an immortal sinner and perpetuate in himself and in his children the awful continuity of sin in the eternal ages, for this reason lest he partake of the tree of life and "live for ever"—Moses says that God guarded the way and denied him access to the tree of life! In the face of this clear and emphatic action by God, is it not marvellous that we should be taught that God in his creative power, had purposed to maintain Adam and his children in a hopeless state of appalling immortality, unceasingly sinning and being unceasingly tormented in the lurid flames of Gehenna? This one text, so lucid in its utterance, so merciful in its results, should once and forever settle the vain babblings of Platonic divines and the insane chatter of dead fathers and schoolmen. God's record henceforth stands clear: "Man is mortal." The promise of immortality is made later on, on an acceptance of the "Life Giver" who is the antitype of the tree of life. Eat of him and live forever or in default, "perish everlastingly." The Lord himself speaks in John 6:50: "This is the bread of life . . . that a man may eat thereof and not die. I am the living bread which came down from heaven . . . If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." Note the negative word "not die" is in exact correspondence with the positive "live forever." Will everyone live forever? "But the believer does die," you say. Quite so; he dies the Adamic or first death appointed unto all men. The reality of this death was by no means overlooked by the Lord, for hear him again in the 54th verse: "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life and I will raise him up at the last day." Indeed, he reiterates this promise of resurrection no less than five times in the same chapter, but it is the awakening from the sleep of only a moment. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thess. 4:16).

It is in this view of death, as a momentary sleep, that many of the supposed texts, teaching the consciousness of the dead are to be reconciled. In sleep, time is not to the dead: the next moment of consciousness is at resurrection, although asleep for centuries! This is the key to apprehend Paul's desire to depart and to be with Christ— to be willing, rather to be absent from the body and be at home with the Lord. These are some of the well worn proof texts which are forced to override and to overthrow the plain teaching of Scripture as to the state of the dead. The rest to Paul will be as the "twinkling of an eye," although asleep these 1800 years when he with other believers will wake to immortality and to incorruption. This is also the hammer of truth to break in pieces the wide spread delusion of intercessory prayers to the ever Blessed Mary, and to the many sleeping saints of God.

"As in Adam All Die"

IN VIEW of the discussion being carried on in the pages of The Restitution on the wages of sin and responsibility, the exegesis of the words of the apostle Paul to the Corinthians will no doubt furnish light on some features of these two subjects. 1 Cor. 15:22: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Theory upon theory has been built on these words, but time would not permit their consideration. The particular feature of the verse I intend dealing with is (as shown by the title), "As in Adam all die." The most common conclusion is that all men who are born in Adam die for his sin. Whatever the apostle intends to teach, it cannot be determined by the context. In considering it then, we must investigate it in the light of the Genesis record of man and his shameful fall.

The initial feature of Adam's fall, and its consequences, is recorded in Gen. 3:19; the sentence being, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." How did this sentence affect the man? The reading of these words conveys to our minds three thoughts: 1st, Adam was made of the dust of the ground; 2nd, He was to return to the dust of the ground; 3rd, Why? Because he had sinned and God had said, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The dissolution of the man was the penalty for his sin. He was to return to the elements of which he was composed. Adam's death sentence reveals no ray of hope for him. God did not promise him any resurrection, and did not offer him any redemption as an offset to the sentence. Nothing of this nature is revealed to us in the narrative, and so we are forced to conclude that this extinction of life was perpetual. It was a final divine decree as the wages of sin.

This illucidation of the sentence passed on Adam does not cast very much light on the apostle's words, "As in Adam all die"; we must therefore look further to determine the relationship of this sentence to Adam's posterity, for Gen. 3:19 makes no reference to descendants of the sinner. The writer to the Romans refers very positively to the subject in the 5th chapter, 12th verse, where he says: "Wherefore as by one man sin entered the world, and death by sin, so death passed on all men, for all have sinned." It is noticeable Paul does not say death passed upon all men for Adam's sin, but all have sinned." God does not impute one man's sin to another man. Each individual is responsible and accountable for his own iniquities, and one man never suffers the penalty of another's sins.

The prime cause of death in the world is sin. Stating that the prime reason for death is sin, in no way binds us to the conclusion that natural death is the wages of sin. This may be clearly illustrated by an analogy. The prime cause of all the evils and afflictions which came upon the children of Israel was sin. Deafness, dumbness, blindness, and madness were all brought by disobedience in Israel's day; but these were not the wages of sin, for Paul says Rom. 6:23, "the wages of sin is death."

Returning again to the Edenic narrative we read Gen. 1:31: "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good." This is the divine testimony as to the conditions of all things of nature and man also. But when Adam sinned there was a disruption in these conditions of nature; for in Gen. 3:17 we read: "And unto Adam he (God) said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying: Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat of the herb of the field." The animal creation also changed: the serpent which talked with Eve went on its belly and many of the beasts became carniverous in their nature. This is plainly indicated by the narrative, and by the words of the prophet Isaiah, for he (when speaking of the times of restoration) says, Isa. 65:25: "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock, and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."

Previous to Adam's fall, the narrative indicates he was in no way dependent on the tree of life in the midst of the garden, for his life. Therefore the Edenic substances supplied the proportion of all chemical and vegetable composites of an indefinite existence. When the disruption took place and elements in nature changed, the composite substance of the things used to sustain life also changed, and accomplishes what is now called senile decay.

Death through mortality thus became a law of natural creation. Why did it ? Was it the penalty of Adam's sin for there had been no other sin up to that time. Isaiah the prophet says (46:9), speaking of God, "Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done saying, My counsel shall stand and I will do all my pleasure." God then, as the creator of all things knew the causes and effects, the beginning and the ending, of all his creation. What did he foresee by his omnipotent power ? That (Rom. 3:23) all would sin and come short of the glory of God. That man's sin (not God's law, for it is perfect) would defile man's being. We find this in our observations of every day life. The father follows after evil and the son inherits physical quantities or tendencies in that particular direction; or as it was expressed in olden times "the fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge."

This principle became so manifest in men that it became a law with them. They became weak through the flesh and could not live perfectly, so we find the apostle Paul saying, Rom. 7:23: "But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members." God was under no obligation, either by covenant or promise, to let man live perpetually in sin. So the Psalmist says, 90:10: "The days of our years are three score years and ten; and if by reason of strength it be fourscore, yet is their strength labor and sorrow: for it is soon cut off and we fly away." The reason for man's life being three score and ten, is given in Psalm 90: 8: "Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance." God by his foreknowledge has set our iniquities before him, and by his love and mercy determined there be an end to sinner's existence, that they should not perpetuate in sin, lust, crime, and misery, in darkness as of night, so he established as a law of natural senile decay. The prime reason for the introduction of natural death to Adam's posterity was in. Natural death was instituted because of sin, not as the wages of sin, but as a means of releasing all men from the life of misery which was their lot by birth.

This death of senile decay, it is evident, then, is not the wages of sin, but a feature of natural creation. But, if it were the wages of sin then saints and sinners alike pay it, and there would be no such thing for saints as forgiveness of sins. The wages of sin as passed on Adam was death. From this death there was no promise of resurrection. It was a death by decree of the Almighty for sin, and such must, I believe, be the accompaniment of the death of all cases of the passing of the wages of sin. Furthermore, since the wages of sin is death with no promise of a resurrection (as in Adam's case) Christ could not redeem men who had passed into the death-state as the wages of sin. What he did do was to redeem men from the penalty of sin, by a sacrifice as a covering for sin, God forgiving the sin, that the penalty (death) with no hope of resurrection should not be inflicted.

Considering our text 1 Cor. 15:22, "As in Adam all die," in the light of what has been given, what do we find the apostle Paul to teach ? The fathers ate sour grapes and the children's teeth were set on edge. All Adam's posterity, that is, all who were lineal descendants of Adam, sinned. None could live perfectly. God by his foreknowledge, saw all this must come to pass and provided through the upset of the "very good" condition of nature, a death by senile decay, in order that man should not be perpetuated in sin and misery, and that his plan of redemption might be accomplished through his Son, Jesus Christ.

OUR ENTIRE character is judged by what we say and do to others.

Don't say anything regarding others but what you would be willing for them to hear.

Don't forget to keep yourself clean bodily, mentally, spiritually. Taking a bath is not the only cleanliness known to God.

Don't forget to read and study the Bible daily. Jesus said, "Seach the Scriptures . . . they testify of me."

Don't be unkind to your sister, brother, or friend; no, not even to the stranger or he who has tried to do you wrong. The admonition is "love your enemies."

Don't forget that the coming of the Lord will be soon. Be prepared, be ready; for, "at an hour ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

AN OPEN CONFESSION

DEAR BEREANS:

HERE I come greeting you for the first time, and while saying this I am reminded that I am the Vice President of the Nebraska Bereans. Now don't you think I am a great officer ? But like all others, I suppose I have to find an alibi. So here is partly mine for the last year: I have been away to school, and with keeping up with my studies I have neglected this important work. In reality this is not altogether a legitimate excuse, is it ? We should all realize that we owe a duty to our organization, which means also a duty to the Lord, which should never be displaced by other duties; and while I make this open confession, I promise not to be negligent in the future, and ask all the Bereans that they will promise me the same.

I expect to be at the Conference in Omaha this year, and would be glad to meet many Bereans there. While I was not able to attend last year, I have learned that our worthy Secretary had a splendid program, and expect that she will excell it this year. Let us all prepare to be there, and if possible in some way, be in the program. In being there we will not only enjoy each other's company, but will talk and plan for the future work. It might not be possible for all the Nebraska Bereans to be present, but I do believe that many could be there if the proper effort was made. Let us try this once and see how this works.

This Berean work is not just a pastime, a place to go, nor a fad; it is a very important work; it is accomplishing much good. So let us get it really at heart and if we will we will see it progress with leaps and bounds. If just one neglects his duty, then some one else has to do twice as much, to keep the order up to a standard of efficiency.

How many of you can I expect to meet in Omaha, August 25th ?

Your sister for the Bereans,

ROSE STORJOHN.

TO THE BRETHREN SCATTERED ABROAD

GREETING:

A FEW years since we organized an isolated fund, and lest you should forget I wish to remind you that that organization still exists. Like all others we sometimes forget to perform our duty as promptly as we should, and while the brethren have responded nicely to our appeal and a nice little sum has been collected, we have failed so far to keep you posted as to what your money has done. So just here I wish to tell you we have sent out several ministers to a number of different places, where they could not have gone at all had it not been for this fund. And due to this a number are now rejoicing in the truth, and the seed has been sown in several places, and the kingdom alone can reveal all the good that has been done. So we know by visible results that your help in this matter has been far from lost, and if you knew as I do just how much good has been done you would feel well repaid for all you have donated to us. I wish to further say that every dollar of your money has been carefully guarded and properly expended. When urgent calls came in saying, "Come over and help us," we have rejoiced to know we were able to respond to these calls, and could only praise the Lord for your liberality.

We still have some in the treasury yet, but in time it will run dry unless we keep it up. We have at least two very urgent calls now, where the prospects are bright for additions to the body of Christ, and neither of these places are able to bear all the expense of sending for a minister. These cases have appealed to us, and we must in time appeal to you. We perhaps have enough to meet the expenses of the present calls; but what would we do if others should call ? So I earnestly appeal to you not to become lax in this matter. Let us remember while we have done well in the past the necessities seem greater now than ever before, and when we think that just a little from each one makes a goodly sum, we should not hesitate to respond

Which of our many friends and brethren can I look to hear from first. Send along your amount much or little, as your heart prompts, and later I will tell you what it has accomplished.

Every sign seems to indicate that we should use our means now to the best advantage. I want to do my duty and help you by reminding you of this duty that we owe to the world in giving them the truth. So I wait your response. To each one that sends I will respond by letter, acknowledging the receipt of your offering. Address at Phoenix, Nebraska.

Yours in the work,

ROSE L. STORJOHN.

The Editor has recently made visits to Euclid Beach (Cleveland) and Myers Lake (Canton). The lavish way in which he saw the sons of leisure and the daughters of pleasure spend money for a "good time," made him feel bad when he compared it with the restrained and parsimonious way in which many of God's people support the truth. In many ways the children of this world are wiser than the children of light.

Practical Points on Larger Hope

INTERROGATIONS SELF-INTERPRETING

QUESTIONS BOTH imply and assert. Unconscious of this fact men sometimes try to conceal their convictions under the mists of an interrogation. The self-interpreting nature of a question finds illustration in the following quotation published elsewhere in this number: "My question was and still is, If that is true, and God says my ways are equal, how can it be reconciled with the fact that at a later date God visited the descendants of these same people, and presented to them the gospel, which their fore-fathers died without? Then one class heard the gospel and died with hope; the other never heard it, and died without hope."

Now this question implies, if it means anything, that if God reveals the gospel to one man, he is thereby obligated to reveal it to every other man in the world; and if he does not, he is remiss in duty. It is the fallacy of Socialism that God must treat every man exactly alike, speaking religiously. That the question means to charge God with injustice if he does not obey the law of equality dictated by Socialism is plain from another quotation: "I was accused of defaulting the mind of the reader by referring to certain Scriptures where God tells us his ways are equal. I might ask here how this could be, that his ways were equal, for that, I remark, cannot be true as long as one person or set of persons have received the plan and terms of salvation, while others died without it, whose doom was sealed."

GOD TRADUCED IN TIME AND IN ETERNITY

WE HAVE before noted the fact that when God said his ways were equal, it was a challenge to the people who lived 519 B. C. (Ezek. 18:25). Just here is where Larger Hope meets its Waterloo. This theory asserts that if one man hears the gospel, all other men must hear it because he did; and that so long as "one person" has not heard it, God's ways are not equal! Well, did all people in Ezekiel's time hear the gospel? How about "the generation of vipers" that could not escape the damnation of hell (Matt. 23:33)? How about the cockatrices, which would not be charmed (Jer. 8:17), of whom God says: "Estranged from the womb, they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies. Their poison is like the poison of a serpent: they are like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear: which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely" (Psa. 58:3-5). How about the wise and prudent in the days of Jesus, from whom he hid the gospel (Matt. 11:25)? What have you to say of the millions that have died ignorant of the gospel for the last six thousand years, and of the majority of the human race today who have not even heard of the name of Jesus? Remember that God does not plead guilty of injustice and say that he will reform sometime. He reveals the gospel to a son whose father was ignorant of it, takes out a people for his name (Acts 15:14) and leaves the world lying in wickedness (1 John 5:19); and then claims that his ways ARE equal. If one class dying with hope and another class dying without hope is unjust, then God has certainly been guilty of injustice for about six thousand years. During all these centuries more have died who had "no hope" (1 Thess. 5:13) than had hope. God has done for millenniums the very thing which Larger Hope advocates say would be unjust for him to do. These defamatory utterances against God cannot be mitigated by saying that he will redeem himself from unrighteousness in the coming age by raising a "generation of vipers" from the dead and by making the saints snake-charmers; for both the saints and snakes will always remember six millenniums of unrighteousness for one of righteousness. They would spend eternity in the fear that God might lapse back into his old habit of injustice.

LARGER HOPE IN BAD COMPANY

BY LARGER Hope we mean all religious bodies throughout the world who believe in posthumous salvation. We mean by the term Hinduism, Braminism, Catholicism, Mormonism, Universalism, Russellism, Campbellism, Pattonism, and all the other isms which teach the salvation of the living after they are dead. "Be not led astray: vicious intercourse corrupts virtuous habits" (1 Cor. 15:33, Diaglott). To talk about the Editor's "spirit," "probity," "acerbities," etc., is merely a device for getting away from an unwelcomed subject. They are ashamed of the company in which they find themselves; Especially do they resent being classed with the Mormons. "Where is the likeness between the two? One believes you can believe for another and be baptized for another, which is very unscriptural." But Paul speaks of being "baptized for the dead" (1 Cor. 15:29)—plainer testimony and stronger proof for proxy baptism than we have ever seen produced for the belief that men will be raised from the dead, be taught, believe, and be baptized for themselves. If you have any proof for your theory which equals the Mormon's for his, please bring it forth! Remember, he laughs best who laughs last. Larger Hope and Mormonism are exactly the same in principle. Larger Hope is the same thing the world over—the salvation of the living after they are dead. How and when this attained, are questions of detail upon which there are divergent views. The Mormon saves the dead by proxy, the Catholic by penance, the Campbellite by evangelization, the Hindu by 1,400,000 transmigrations, the Larger Hope of American brand by resurrection! All believe the same in fact, differing only in details of how and when the means are applied. The end reached by them all is the same. Whatever means are used and when, the salvation of the dead is the basic thought to which all heartily subscribe. This is the gray headed father from whom all the children have descended. The "likeness" of the father shines brightly in the fact of every child.

"WHAT'S THE USE?"

ALL GOOD men have a good motive for everything they do. We have been puzzled for years seeking to find the motive which prompts men to believe and teach Larger Hope. They work themselves to death trying to evangelize a people that are to be evangelized whether they evangelize them or not! They waste paper and ink teaching the living the salvation of the dead! Who are they seeking to benefit by all this useless endeavor: the saints? No; they are saved now. They do not need future probation. They are not helping the saints a bit. Well, they must aim to help somebody; who? The ignorant? No; for future probation is unconditional; the ignorant are to get this whether they know of it or believe in it or not. So they are not helped. Who, then, do the propagandists of Larger Hope expect to benefit by preaching the doctrine? Who? Nobody! "What's the use?"

Gird up Your Minds

Pemmican Notes of the Editor's Sermon

WHEREFORE GIRD up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ (1 Pet. 1:13).

BIBLE WRITERS never rest satisfied with stating mere systems of doctrines; they make applications to us. Beginning at verse nine Peter leads up to verse thirteen where his application of the stated dogmas are made: "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you. Searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed that not unto themselves but unto us they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into" (1 Pet. 1:9-12).

Then follows our text. Out of the numerous thoughts which are potent in this verse we shall consider but two: the great object of a believer's pursuit as summed in the words, "the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Second, The manner in which we should pursue this chief object as written in the words, "Gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end."

I. When we study the revelations of Jesus Christ we find many. A series is found from the time of creation to the culmination in the manifestation of Christ. Turn to Gen. 3:15 and this is the first promise, the first manifestation when a revelation of his nature and sacrifice for men was made. Genesis 4 records the offered sacrifice and martyrdom of Abel which is mentioned in Heb. 11:4 as a sacrifice which gave witness that he was righteous, "God testifying of his gifts"; and Heb. 12:24 reads: "Jesus the mediator of the new covenant and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel." Then follows successive manifestations in the successive ages, e. g., Gen. 22:18, the seed of Abraham, and Isa. 53:

1. 5 11. where his sufferings were revealed. Likewise were revelations made during the 1600 years of Jewish ritual in which, according to Exod. 12:5, the lamb chosen was one without blemish, and to which Peter in 1 Pet. 1:19 refers when he speaks of the antitype Christ.

Finally, in the reign of Tiberius Caesar, Christ was personally revealed, a man approved of God by miracles and wonders and signs, according to Acts 2:22; and declared to be the Son of God with power by the resurrection of the dead, according to Rom. 1:4. He further manifested himself by preaching the gospel. "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 4:6). Notwithstanding these revelations there are certain obscurations around Christ which shall be cleared away at the coming of Jesus. "For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am also known" (1 Cor. 13:12). Read Matt. 25:31; 2 Thess. 1:7,8; and 1 Thess. 4:16 to realize that these revelations go down to that personal apocalypse when Christ shall sit on Mount Zion ruling all the nations of the earth.

Is it perplexing how grace can come to us when already we have grace, as Christ said his grace was sufficient, and we are said to be standing in the grace of God? Grace and glory are often used synonymously. Grace is glory begun, and glory is grace consummated. "But we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. 3:18). The apostle is here looking at the grace of which Paul explains in Eph. 1:7. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of his grace." So when Christ comes and occupies the throne of David, grace is consummated in glory (Zech. 4:7). It shall then be bestowed in an open and conspicuous manner in the presence of an assembled universe. Now our grace is secret; then it shall be made public. When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from his goats" (Matt. 25:32; Dan. 7:13, 14,27). Gathering up all these fragments of revelations of Christ, Peter says we are to hope for the grace that is to be "brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

II. With these visions of past dealings and the past grace of God all culminating in the public bestowal of grace and glory Peter says, "Wherefore, gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end." Gird up the loins of the mind is a figure of concentrating the wind. The universal and customary apparel worn by the Jew was a long flowing robe which impeded progress, and therefore to accelerate speed it was to be a gathered up or girded about them. So Christ says to gather in the wanderings of your mind—let there be an activity, a concentration of the mind so that, like men who wait for their Lord, you may open immediately when he cometh and knocketh (Luke 12:35, 36). With a thousand provocations to distract from the concentration of our worship David prays: "Unite my heart to fear thy name" (Psa. 86:11). In writing "gird up the loins of your mind" Peter means what was written in 2 Pet. 1:5, 10. "Giving all diligence add to your faith virtue, and to virtue, knowledge. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall."

We are called to be sober, to have a sobriety of manner. In the Scripture to be sober refers to moderation. Paul is sober and thoughtful when he says, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world" (Eph. 6:14). When Gal. 5:21 is fulfilled then we come to a state of sobriety, and an insuperable barrier is between us and the world. Then having controlled our minds, having a sobriety of thought, we are to hope to the end. Faith respects the promises, hope waits upon the fulfilment of them. Christ having made peace through the blood of his cross (Col. 1:20) we are to hope. "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast" (Heb. 6:19) The same thought is found in Heb. 3:6: "But Christ as a Son over his own house, whose house are we if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." In view then of Christ to be revealed and the grace of God brought to us in so public a manner, we should lay hope up in our hearts. For just in proportion to our deadness to the insidious influences around us will we be able to maintain the confidence and one hope begotten in us unto the coming of Jesus Christ.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

IN VIEW of the discussion going on in The Restitution on the subject of responsibility, the enclosed article, "As in Adam All Die," might prove interesting to your readers and will doubtless throw some light on the subject.

This article is an exegesis of natural death and does not trespass on any reply Brother Strickler may make to Brother Parker's criticism of his advocated views.

I note your advice that copy is abundant, but this being on a theme which your readers are at present interested in, this may be opportune.

Thanking you in anticipation, and wishing you all success.

Yours fraternally,

K. M. POOK.

DEAR BROTHER:

FOR SOME considerable time I have desired to write to you, but my time has been fully occupied.

I had hoped that I might have been able to send you a MSS. bearing on the second death. There is much more in the Scriptures regarding it than I thought, and the references to it far exceed in number what I anticipated. I noticed your request for contributions, and am sorry I have not been able to comply.

Some few weeks ago the Baptist minister here played false to his congregation, and in a most dishonest manner left them and joined the Methodists. Being unable to get "supplies," they requested me to preach on Sunday, and though a month has gone by, they are still unsettled. Today I took for my subject, "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully" (Jer. 23:28,29), basing my remarks on 2 Tim. 4 and 1 Cor. 15. Already some are considerably offended. What the result will be I cannot say. I have lent out a quantity of literature, and circulated a few of my tracts.

Yours faithfully,

R. H. JUDD.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

THE SPECIAL meeting at Guthrie Grove, near Pelzer, S. C., will begin August 1st, with an all day meeting. We expect, the Lord willing, to reach Greenville, S. C., Tuesday 1:40 P. M. Will some of the brethren meet us and let us know whether to go on to Pelzer by train or auto? We are sorry we cannot be there for the first Sunday, but cannot be away more than two Sundays on one trip. I expect to be at Guthrie Grove from August 3rd to 9th, and then at Traveller's Rest, 15 miles north of Greenville, from August 9th to August 16th. The meeting will be in a school house six miles north of Traveller's Rest, on the road leading from Greenville, S. C., to Asheville, N. C.

Indiana Conference Report

THE ANNUAL Conference of the churches of God of Indiana convened at the North Salem Church July 16 to 18. This is the second year that the Bible School and Conference have met at this place, which is henceforth to be the permanent location for the yearly meetings. With the improvements and the equipment for dining service, the entertainment of the people is made more easy and comfortable. The brethren in this community receive and entertain with true hospitality which was duly appreciated and enjoyed by the guests.

The Conference proper began on Friday evening with a splendid but short address of welcome by the president, Wm. Huffer, followed by a sermon by Mary A. Woodward. Each of the speakers presented the Bible truths in a most interesting and instructive manner, as everyone knows who has heard Sister Woodward, Brothers F. L. Austin, D. VanVactor, Frank Siple, Leroy Austin, and Clyde Randle. They told us of God's promises and his wonderful and glorious plan of salvation for his people and the nations of the earth; of the wonderful age in which we are privileged to live because now we see the fulfilment of that prophesy which points to the favorite theme of our faith—the second coming of Christ. Neither did they neglect to admonish us in our every day acts and conversation, and to impress upon us the necessity of faith on our part, in God's word and rich promises concerning these things. This Conference was pronounced one of the best of Indiana gatherings. Complete harmony and brotherly love seemed to prevail.

All the churches of the state were represented by delegates or visitors except one, and that one sent in a report of the year's work.

There was no business of very great importance transacted at the business session this year.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President, Wm. Huffer, Michigantown;
1st Vice President, Floyd Stilson, South Bend;
2nd Vice President, Leroy Austin, Plymouth;
Secretary, Beulah Pence, Williamsport;
Treasurer, Waldo Wood, Michigantown.

Questions on Larger Hope

IN THE Restitution a few weeks back I asked Brother Knapp a couple of pertinent questions for which I was quite severely criticized for presuming to ask a question upon what seems to be thought a one sided question. I ask this question in the best spirit I knew how, and for no other purpose than to elicit thought, and if possible to arrive at the truth. Now lest you forget I will reproduce the question. The brother said this: "All who died prior to this time, were without God, without Christ, and without hope in the world." Therefore their doom is sealed. My question was and still is, If that is true, and God says my ways are equal, how can it be reconciled with the fact that at a later date God visited the descendants of these same people, and presented to them the gospel, which their fore-fathers had died without? Then one class heard the gospel and died with hope; the other never heard it, and died without hope.

I still want to know how this can be equalized. My critic said, "Brother Knapp was no doubt speaking of systems and not individuals." If this were true it would take someone with a very keen eyesight to see the difference. But this supposition cannot be true, for Brother Knapp said, "All who ever died prior to this time." This statement would certainly include everyone he was speaking of, who were those who have died without hope. If these subjects are worth while at all, they are worth discussing in the best spirit possible.

Probity should be the watch word in the discussion of every important question. I was accused of defaulting the mind of the reader by referring to certain Scriptures where God tells us his ways are equal. I might ask here how this could be, that his ways were equal for that, I remark, cannot be true as long as one person or set of persons have received the plan and terms of salvation while others died without it, whose doom was sealed. Common law grants every man a hearing, while divine law, if our brother's position be true, seals the doom of some without a hearing.

To say that this doctrine is "Mormon Doctrine," is very unjust. The Mormons believe one can be baptized and believe as well for those who died without hearing. Those who believe in the so-called doctrine of larger hope simply believe people cannot be saved without hearing and believing the gospel for themselves. The orthodox churches teach that children can have god-fathers, who can believe for them; which is more like Mormon doctrine. One who would say that larger hope is a Mormon doctrine either is unfair, or else he does not understand what is believed.

Again, let me ask you, where is the likeness between the two? One believes you can believe for another and be baptized for another, which is very unscriptural; the other teaches you have to believe and be baptized for yourself. This is salvation by proxy—I mean the Mormon doctrine. This doctrine is not similar to any that it has been accused of being like. Now as the Editor has asked someone to write on this subject under certain captions I accept the invitation. For like him, I have never sent an article that sets it forth in the true light. This I will comply with as soon as time permits.

Obituary

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.--Psa. 116:15.

PASSING OF HIRAM VAUGHN REED

WE NOTICED in yesterday's issue the passing of Mr. Hiram Vaughn Reed, who was born in Utica, N. Y., in 1836, and was nearing his 84th birthday, later in life making his home in Chicago. Mr. Reed leaves two sons, Mr. Earl H. Reed, and Chas. B. Reed, M. D., both of Chicago.

His daughter Mrs. Myrtle Reed McCullough passed away several years ago. After his first wife, Elizabeth Armstrong passed away, Mr. Reed married Mrs. Sarah Bethel, M. D., now living temporarily in Winter Park, Florida, where Mr. Reed passed away last Sunday about 1:30. Mr. Reed and his first wife were writers of note, also the daughter whose books are to be found in the Public Libraries. None of the children were able to be present during the last services and temporary burial in the Winter Park Cemetery.

The warmest sympathy was expressed by a number of friends whose acquaintance with Mrs. Reed had only been for a few days. The assistance of Mr. E. T. Nelson, a former friend who made the necessary arrangements, was highly appreciated by Mrs. Reed.

Mrs. Reed writes in note: "I suppose you know that eleven months ago Mr. Reed fell and broke his leg, and since then has suffered greatly. For four months he has been with me in Florida, but only bedfast a few weeks. He was aware the end was near, and requested that at the funeral the fourth chapter of Thessalonians be read and 'Asleep in Jesus' be sung which was done."

Yours in the one hope,

A. TURNEY.

GOLDEN TEXT: . Psalm 72:6

NO ONE NEEDS THEE MORE THAN I

DEAREST FATHER all thy creatures
Are more worthy of thy grace,
Than the vile and wretched sinner
Who now kneels before thy face;
Yet one claim I have upon thee,
Which thou never wilt deny:
In the bounds of thy creation,
No one needs thee more than I!

Other souls have been more faithful,
And have served thee better far,
Many cleaner hearts more fitting,
For thy gracious presence are,
Many lips devout a greeting
Far more fervent can apply:
But, dear Father, well thou knowest,
No one needs thee more than I.

Many loving hands have carried
Richer offerings to thy shrine,
Many generous hearts have loved thee
With a purer love than mine;
These, thy chosen ones approach thee,
As the doves to covert fly:
I am utterly unworthy,
No one needs thee more than I.

And without thee I am helpless,
Fast in sin's strong fetters caught,
Blinded by my evil passions,
Swayed by impulses untaught,
I can do no good unaided,
It were worse than vain to try:
Oh my God! my only refuge,
No one needs thee more than I.

Thou didst send thine only Son
To redeem and save the lost,

He did take upon him freely
Our redemption's awful cost,
Thou, thyself hast called me to thee,
Thou wilt hearken to my cry;
In the bounds of thy creation,
No one needs thee more than I

CONCERNING FAITH

A QUESTION was asked that, perhaps if answered on "Our page" may help someone else that is doubtful on the subject. The question was, "when Jesus said, 'If ye have faith ye can remove mountains,' did he mean real mountains, or obstacles in life?" My answer is, that he meant real mountains.

Let us imagine what a shock that answer might be to the one who asked the question. He or she is, no doubt, a very devout person, loving God and having great faith that he will do as he says he will in his word. Perhaps this brother or sister has faith enough to even attempt to move a mountain from one place to another. When the mountain failed to move at their bidding think of the disappointment and sorrow they might feel because their faith was not as strong as it should be. They would say, "Why did not that mountain move? I had perfect faith that it would. The Bible says it would: now why has it not done so?"

Some friend may answer, "You know the Bible does not always mean just what it says. It may not mean real mountains in this case, but trouble, trials, and obstacles in life." To the puzzled brother or sister this will sound much more reasonable than the removal of mountains. So they generally accept the idea and are sure that they have at last found an answer to their question. Then some other brother or sister spoils it by saying positively that our Lord meant real mountains. Let us see how we can prove it.

As a general thing it is supposed that Jesus meant all who had faith could do these miracles. As a matter of fact, if we read Matt 17:19, we find that Jesus was talking to the disciples apart from the rest. They wished to know why they could not cast out the devil of disease from the child. They had been given the power to perform miracles: why had they failed? Then Jesus replied, "Because of your unbelief: for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed ye shall say unto the mountain, remove hence to yonder place."

Again let me repeat that Jesus was talking to the disciples. But you say, are we not his disciples too? Yes, we are, but God has not given us the power to perform miracles. In Matt. 10:1 we read that these twelve disciples were given that power. With it they could, if they had faith, move mountains But often they lacked faith. Peter lost his courage or faith when he tried to walk on the water, and so he began to sink. We are told to have faith that the Lord Jesus is coming to set up a kingdom on earth, not to move mountains or any other miracle that none but those endowed with the power of God can perform. But dear brothers and sisters, we are promised that if we have that faith now, that we will be given the power to do these things when our King comes, and we have every reason to believe this his coming is at hand, so watch! Be ye ever ready. Our redemption draweth nigh.

ANOTHER VOLUNTEER

DEAR READERS OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE:

AS THIS is my initial writing I will introduce myself and family.

By looking at the special contributor's list you will find that the "Ashute Family" have officially become a part of this page, so I will tell you who we are. There is Brother Ashute (father) Sister Ashute (mother), who is the writer, then there are five little Ashutes, Marion who is 12, William 10, Anthony 7½, Lillian 4½, and Frederick 3. We all are trying to please Jesus by obeying him and we have a strong desire to know you. We would be pleased to have you write us. We have been moving about and have just settled here. I hope more of you young people will do what you can to encourage those who work so hard to interest and encourage us. Spare time, and work hard. Remember it is in Christ's name you are asked Choose who you will serve.

SISTER ADA.

Sister Ashute's address is 110 Elmhurst Ave., Syracuse, N. Y.

AN INSCRIPTION

NEAR THE R. R. depot in Springfield, Mass., painted in large letters on the side of a building, so "he who runs may read," is an inscription that should prove an inspiration to the thousands that daily pass that way; and feeling you too may be benefitted by reading we here print it in full.

My Daily Desire

To awaken each morning with a smile brightening my face; to greet the day with reverence for the opportunities it contains; to approach my work with a clear mind; to hold ever before me, even in the doing of little things, the Ultimate Purpose toward which I am working; to meet men and women with laughter on my lips and love in my heart; to be gentle, kind, and courteous through all hours; to approach the night with the weariness that ever woos sleep and the joy that comes from work well done; this is how I desire to use wisely our days.—Thomas Dreier.

A TRUISM

IT HAS been said—and with truth—that happiness was born a twin, and before we can enjoy the sensation in its fulness we must create it in another. Therefore to be happy, make others happy.

The Restitution

A Paper Representing "The Church" of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"—Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, O. AUGUST 10th, 1920. NUMBER 30

Look on the Bright Side

DON'T TELL how few there are of us; and of how little is being done. Talk of the great things God is doing through us, of joyful things, inspiring things. Tell the dear ones that God can work and will work through them; that they have a lever in their hands that can move the world if they will only use it—the lever of the gospel. Help them to believe in themselves and in their power to save others. Don't let them doubt. Don't make them feel discouraged.

Prophetic Signs of the Times

Time Periods, Dates, "Times of the Gentiles," and the Final Consummation

THE KING OF THE NORTH

BEFORE CONSIDERING Dan. 12:7, we wish to make a little clearer the marking for the beginning of the "times of restitution," which correspond also to the time of Jacob's trouble out of which he, as a people, will be delivered (Jer. 30:7; Rom. 11:26).

We have already seen by Daniel's 4th chapter that Nebuchadnezzar was a representative man and stood for the "kingdom of men" as depicted in the vision of the "tree" there given. This identification is also made clear by the vision of the "Image" recorded in the 2nd chapter already referred to. It will be well to study this chapter, for it clearly sets forth the different progressive stages of the kingdom of men from Babylon down to our own day. It shows that in the days of the divided state of the kingdom, as represented by the "toes" of the image, that God will establish a kingdom on earth after destroying all other then existing governments.

After a perusal of these two chapters it will be readily conceded that both the visions (of the "image" and the "tree") have reference to the same thing, and in that they both represent the kingdoms of men.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR REPRESENTATIVE OF THE KINGDOMS OF MEN

Seeing then that Nebuchadnezzar is identified as the man who was to represent Gentile dominion, and his times miniaturely signify the Gentile times, we could expect that this identification of the ancient Assyrian (B. C. 603) would be significantly related to the identification of the latter-day Assyrian.

Daniel, as recorded in the 2nd chapter of his book, said to Nebuchadnezzar (B. C. 603), "Thou art this head of gold," that is, the head of the image there in question. Seven times, or the 2520th year from that time, is 1916, in which year we had identified the latter-day Assyrian (Micah 5:4-6), when Russia (not Germany) occupied Armenia and Persia. It is true that it was only a temporary occupation, yet it was sufficient for identification at the right time, 1916; and therefore on this account there is no doubt that she is the power that will later occupy not only Armenia and Persia, but also Egypt (Dan. 11:40-42). Armenia and Persia, as it will be seen by consulting a map, were part of the first world empire, and we can expect they will also be under the Assyrian head when, in the near future, he "overflows" and "passes over" in his effort to take a great spoil (Ezek. 38:11, 12).

Again, we have a "bear" representing the 2nd World Empire (Dan. 7:5), and this, no doubt, was made with the view to its double application and pointed to the latter-day "Bear" which is to occupy the same territory (Persia). So again our attention is directed to Russia, whose emblem is a bear, being identified, by her occupation of Persia, as the latter day Bear, and therefore the latter day Assyrian and King of the North.

1260 OF DANIEL 12:7

We will now return to the 12th chapter of Daniel and consider the 1260 period referred to in the 7th verse. From this passage it will be seen that the perior terminates at a definite stage in the progressive ending of Jewish oppression, or of the "indignation" against Israel, and will correspond to the time when "there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer," on behalf of natural Israel (Rom. 11:26).

THE HOUR OF JUDGMENT

It is the time of Jerusalem's deliverance, as referred to in Zech. 14:3, when the Lord will go forth and fight against the nations that are gathered in the valley of Jehoshaphat and on the plains of Megiddo. At the battle of Armageddon, Israel will be delivered from her enemies' invading armies by their Messiah and King. This will be another stage in the treading of the nations "in the great winpress of the wrath of God," which will be during a period called the "hour of judgment" (Rev. 14:6, 7, 19, 20). The beginning of this "hour of judgment" has a very prominent part in the introduction of Christ to both Jew and Gentile, as will be seen in the summing up of the 38th and 39th chapters of Ezekiel, as we read in 39:17: "And thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God; speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field; assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh and drink blood."

It will be seen from this verse that the event of the battle of Armageddon is clearly set forth, and the result as described in the 22nd verse, corresponds with Rom. 11:26, Zech. 14:3, Dan. 11:36 and 12:7, where, in the references from Daniel, it is set forth that "the indignation" against Israel will be accomplished at the end of these 1260 day-years. "So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward" (Ezek. 39:22).

This "hour of judgment," referred to in Rev. 14:7, is a period of thirty years. An hour, the 12th part of a day (John 11:9), typifies the 12th of a year, or one month, and then by the application of the principle of a year for a day we have thirty years as represented by the hour. The second multiplication of this typical period, "hour," has already been demonstrated in its application to history, with the opening the "seventh seal," when there was a "silence--(no war)--about the space of half an hour" (A. D. 324-338, Rev. 8:1). In the present case the hour of judgment's relation to the other time-periods requires that it should be years instead of thirty days, although in cases where a "day" and an "hour" are associated together only thirty days are intended by the hour, the year for a day principle being applied to the "day." Example, Rev. 9:15: "And the four angels were loosed which were prepared for an hour and a day and a month and a year for to slay the third part of men" on the scale of a year for a day, equals 391 years and one month, as follow:

An hour		1 month
A month	30 years
A day	1 year
A month	30 years
A year	360 years
	391 years 1 month

Its application to history is from April 27th, 1062, to May 29th, 1453, when Constantinople fell before Mohammed II. But, in the case under consideration (Rev. 14:7), an "hour" for judgment of thirty years duration, it will be seen, is more in harmony with the phrase, "This generation" (Luke 21:32). It gives scope for "Jacob's trouble", (Jer. 30:7), and, "According to the days (forty years) of thy coming out of the land of Egypt . . . the nations shall see and be confounded at all their might" (Micah 7:15-17).

By allowing this "hour of judgment" and of trouble to terminate with the forty years of "Jacob's trouble" in 1957, which year is "the end of the days," it would begin in 1927, when, as we have shown, deliverance should come out of Zion at the battle of Armageddon. Accordingly, the 1260 of Dan. 12:7 ends at the same time and began in A. D. 666.

THE MAN OF SIN IDENTIFIED, HIS TIMES

In A. D. 666 a papal decree began to be put into force, which was to the effect that the reading of the Scriptures in all churches should be in Latin; thus through the western limb, Catholicism was identified in one of its last phases as the system that is represented by "a man," "that man of sin," "his number is 666." By his use of Latin he may even now, be called a Latin Man, or, ecclesiastically a Latin Power, or Lateinos, which is the generally accepted solution of "his number," the numerical value of "Lateinos," in the language in which the prophecy was written, being 666 (Rev. 13:18; 2 Thess. 2:3, 4).

Catholicism, whether in its Greek or Latin branches, must, according to the prophecy, "prosper until the indignation (against Israel) be accomplished" (Dan. 11:36; 12:7).

It must be conceded on all hands that Catholicism has prospered and is prospering in the ecclesiastical world; therefore, the necessity of applying these 1260 years to the church phase in both its branches, rather than to civil, will be readily recognized. It would naturally be expected, as shown to have been the case, that this period would be associated in its beginning with a decree that pertains to the church phase instead of the state.

ASSOCIATING THE 1600 "FURLONGS" WITH TIME

There has existed for some time differences of opinion as to whether the 1600 of Rev. 14:20, which number is associated with the treading of the "winepress of the wrath of God," has reference to linear measurements, or measurements of time. There are two good reasons for accepting that time is meant: First, because such a period of 1600 years bridges the interval from the beginning of the seventh seal, A. D. 325, to the beginning of the treading of the winpress in 1927, which would make the duration of the seventh seal 1600 and thirty years. The latter thirty is the "hour of judgment" in which the treading of the winepress takes place as referred to in the 7th verse of the same chapter. Second, because if days or years had been given instead of "furlongs," how could the visions of the times have been "sealed" (Dan. 12:9), seeing that the seventh seal is the longest period given in the book of Revelation, and that the beginning of the seventh seal has been understood for years, it would have pointed directly to the time for the treading of the winepress in the epoch now indicated by a consideration of all the times combined?

WALTER L. CURTIS.

"What Must I Do to be Saved?"

THE QUESTION presupposes a lost condition, and the need and desire to be saved out of it. What is that lost condition? What is the condition when salvation is attained or accomplished? This is the subject matter for our consideration.

Confining the inquiry to the sins of Adam, the human race, we see that universal observation teaches and demonstrates the fact that man is a dying creature. The young as well as the old cease to live. When a person has attained to the age of three score and ten, he realizes the fact those who were old when he was young are no longer among the living. Death has claimed them for its victims.

Every sane person desires life, health and happiness. Yet observation demonstrates that under existing conditions death will inevitably come. Neither science nor physiology are able to ascertain the primal cause of death, nor invent nor compound a remedy to evade its coming. Jehovah as the Creator has the undoubted prerogative to make laws, prescribe rules to govern the intelligent being that he has created. He was under no obligation to bring him into being; he is under no obligation to continue him in existence.

God has stated the specific purpose he had in view when he created man; namely, to fill the earth with an intelligent, nevertheless free-to-choose race that would show forth his praise, and fill the earth with his glory. Man feels honored and exalted, and experiences satisfaction when his plans work out and accomplish the things that he had in view; especially does he feel honored if his children grow to manhood walking in his precepts, and become honored members of society. This trait in man is only a fitting tribute to his Creator, who himself experiences satisfaction and glorification when he is honored by a hearty, grateful, intellectual walk in his precepts by the people of his handiwork. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me; and to him that ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God."

The inspired word of God alone reveals the cause, and prescribes a remedy whereby victory may be obtained over death. The stated cause is sin. Sin is disobedience to the divine command. "The wages of sin is death." "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." "Sin is the transgression of the law." Adam transgressed the law that God gave to him and brought on himself and on all his posterity the penalty of which he had been fore warned, namely, death.

Also in the inspired word we have the remedy, the case is set forth in plain language. Christ's commission to his disciples was: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "Philip went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them." "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized." "Without faith it is impossible to please him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and is a rewarded of them that diligently seek him." "Faith cometh by hearing the word of God." Man must believe that God was just and righteous in passing the death sentence on the disobedient pair; he must also believe that God in love planned the scheme of salvation whereby the sinner might pass into a condition in which God could in justice raise him from the death state, and give him eternal life. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven, given among men whereby we must be saved."

God's law required sinless obedience. Jesus the Christ, in human nature, the son of David through Mary, the Son of God by begettal, was the only man that passed through life without committing sin. Though tempted in all points as we are, yet he yielded not, but overcame temptation, and developed a character well pleasing to God. Death could not, and cannot, hold a sinless victim. God his Father could therefore in perfect justice raise him from the dead to die no more, also give to him power; constitute him the life giver, to raise from the dead other sinless victims made sinless by having had all their sins blotted out, washed away, forgiven, and righteousness imputed to them on account of faith in the revealed plan of salvation, and obedience to its requirements.

"Thou hast given him power over all flesh that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he die, yet shall he live" Again, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth." "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin."

The answer, then, to the question, "What must we do to be saved?" is, acquaint yourself with man's lost condition on account of sin; God's gracious provision for the forgiveness of sin;

render a hearty obedience in faith, and maintain a godly walk through probationary life. To such overcomers it is promised; "They shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy." Beginning at the same Scripture Philip preached to the Eunuch Jesus the Savior. "See, here is water. what doth hinder me to be baptized? If thou believeth with all thine heart thou mayest." "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins." "Sirs, what must I do to be saved? Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." "Men, brethren, what shall we do?" Peter answered, "Repent and be baptized upon the name of Jesus Christ into remission of sins." "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized." "As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." "If ye are Christ's ye are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Heirs of eternal life and blessedness.

"Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you." "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." "Our life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then we shall also be manifest in glory." All through God's love and mercy in Jesus Christ our Lord. Submitted in the hope that it may be useful in guiding some one into the more perfect way.

"The Rest of the Dead',

But the rest of the dead ones lived not again until the thousand years had been finished (Rev. 20:5).

THE APOCALYPSE was showed to John, not alone for the benefit of the servants of the Deity in the times of the Gentiles, but also for the same class amongst the subjects of the millennial kingdom. Eighteen hundred years ago John wrote of the dead of the first resurrection, multitudes of whom had not then been born; yet he says concerning them, "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before the Deity." Upon the same principle he speaks of "rest of the dead" who had not come into existence either in or before the time he wrote, or in the times of the Gentiles, or before the resurrection of the firstfruits.

The "rest" is the remainder of a whole number of certain dead ones, to whom eternal life is to be imparted by the Son. The firstfruits are only the earnest of the harvest to be gathered in. The millennial generations will have the happy assurance that, though the resurrection of the firstfruits had passed, there would be a resurrection of a remainder to complete the whole number originally given by the Father to the Son.

This whole number of the dead is the subject of great solicitude and affection to Christ, who speaks of it in the following Scriptures, in this wise: "Thou, O Father, hast given the Son power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." "I pray not for the world; but for them whom thou hast given me; for they are thine. Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me" (John 17:2, 8, 24). "All that the Father giveth to me shall come to me. And this is the will of the Father who sent me, that everything which he hath given to me I should lose nothing of it, but raise it again at the last day" (John 6: 37-40). He styles this whole given to him by the Father, the sheep of whom he is the good Shepherd, and says, "I lay down my life for the sheep: And other sheep I have which are not of this (Mosaic) fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be our fold and our shepherd. Ye believe not because ye are not of my sheep. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall not perish in the Aion; neither shall any one pluck them out of my hand. My Father, who gave them to me, is greater than all; and no one is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. I and my Father are one " (John 10).

In these testimonies we see that the whole number is a gift bestowed upon the Lord Jesus Christ, whom he must bring, and upon whom he is to bestow eternal life; so that if they die before the Aion, they may have part in the resurrection of firstfruits; and if they die in the Aion, they may not perish in the Aion; but live again when the thousand years are past. Hence the whole number of the dead is a collection of persons taken out from mankind. from the time of Abel to the end of the thousand years. Seven thousand years inhabitation of the earth by flesh and blood subject to death, is the Aion of mortality, through all of which progresses the work of taking out a people for the race, who shall attain to incorruptibility and life, upon the principle of a loving and faithful obedience to the truth. These are given to the Son for brethren by the Father: who bestows upon them the earth, in a finished and paradisaic perfection, as their inheritance and abode for ever. The manifestation of this whole number "redeemed from among men," is assigned to two notable and extraordinary epochs: the first. the beginning of the thousand years; the second the end thereof. The first epoch precedes the millennium, and is illustrated by the resurrection of the firstfruits; the second epoch after the millennium is passed, is celebrated by the manifestation in life of "The Rest of the Dead" given by the Father to the Son to complete the fold "One fold and our shepherd" "the Deity then. all things in all." TEACH ME to smile when the way is rough,
And sing when the day grows sad,
Into my heart thy sunshine put,
And make thy tired one glad.

Fill me so full of thy own pure life
That each day may be lived for thee,
That neither the strife nor the woes of life
Can darken the day for me. Selected by Sister H. E. Russell.

Remarks

DURING JUNE we were once more forcibly reminded that we are not masters of circumstances. While we expected to remain at home but a few days, and be on our way and fill some urgent calls, we were detained waiting an answer from the people who own the hall, where we held conference the last two years. Then after all it was in such condition, they thought best not to let us have it as they are trying to sell it. Not being discouraged, because we remembered Paul had said "all things work together for good to them who love the Lord, who are called according to his purpose."

This proved to be true, for what seemed to be an accident, took me to a place where I found just what I was looking for. So I praised the Lord, and took courage. This being settled I started once more to carry the message of God to an indifferent world. It is needless to say that the truth has always been unpopular, but now we have reached a state of such indifference to all things religious, I wonder if you can realize the courage it takes, and the absolute trust and confidence we have to place in God's promises never to leave or forsake us, to take this message to the world.

There never was a time when I did not need your prayers and sympathy, but more in these days than ever before. I wonder what we would do or what would become of the gospel if this wonderful indifference should strike our brethren as it has others. But when we meet with those of like precious faith, and find them alive, and ready with words of encouragement, the darkness seems to dispel, and sunshine takes the place of gloom. The bee flies from flower to flower seeking the honey which will furnish sweets for others. They no doubt light upon many where there is none, but they fly away to others where they are not disappointed. How often we find a beautiful flower growing among thistles or other noxious weeds, emitting its fragrance, the air being laden with its aroma and nothing around to be attracted by it; so in life there are splendid characters throwing out light and sunshine, and no one to be lighted or warmed by these sunny rays. So we are apt under these circumstances to close up like a morning glory and wait for another morning to come out in full glory.

But this ought not to be, but every character, should retain its bloom from day to day and hour to hour. We never know when some weary traveller may come our way needing encouragement. Dark and gloomy life would be without these people, who are shedding light and have within themselves the sweetness and spices of life.

The person who carries the gospel to the world needs these more than all others, yet they are indispensable to every one. Do we realize what a real actual God-like life is? Are we ready at all times to look upon the weaknesses of our brother with that tender forgiving spirit manifested by the Master? He has just as certainly taught us that we are to forgive, in order to be forgiven, as any other one thing he taught. Yet we find people, even brethren, who will neither forgive nor forget. It is for these we tremble knowing they have no hope. Have you even thought how grand it would be if each one took upon himself to make special effort and as far as is possible emulate the life of Christ. We must not expect this of others and fail to do it ourselves. We are living in a time when we should all be alive to our duty.

During the month, we visited the church at Blair and held an all day meeting at Brother and Sister Harvey Krogh's. Brother John Mehrens and family drove over from Iowa. Brother Lecrone and family from Kennard, and Brother Athrur Johns and family. We held services in the forenoon, then all had our dinner together. when we again assembled and we gave a talk on the signs of the times. Then after enjoying a few songs I again took up the subject. We had a very enjoyable day. Sister Cole came over with Brother Mehrens, whom we had not met for some time. Sister Cole is well posted and concurred in many things that were said. Not only were we well entertained by Brother and Sister Krogh and father, but also by Sister Johns and daughter, Sister Free. These brethren we have known and labored with for years, and it seems good to meet them. We are now at the home of Brother Storjohn, just starting a meeting. If it holds out as it begins I hope to be able to report some success in my next report.

The Young People's Society convened Friday evening, July 9th, at the home of Brother Griffiths. Eighteen members responded to roll-call and after a short business meeting the lesson was taken up by Robert Meermans. The subject was "The Severity and Goodness of God." By asking the members to read numerous verses of Scripture, Brother Meermans effectually brought out how far God's goodness exceeds his severity and while he is severe only when kindness has failed, his mercy is continually showered upon all.

A Friendly Word for Larger Hope

Number Four

"IV. IT MUST be shown exactly when this UNIVERSAL resurrection takes place."

We know of no scriptural necessity for knowing the time of the universal resurrection in order that we may believe it to be a Bible truth. God has not given the time element as evidence of any truth, particularly not the exact time.

However, he has granted us this much evidence concerning the time of the universal resurrection. The enlightened ones will be resurrected at Christ's coming (1 Cor. 15:23). John, after picturing the resurrected ones reigning with Christ, says, "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished" (Rev. 20:5). We have no right to say "the rest" includes any less number than all those dead at the coming of Jesus minus those who were resurrected at that time.

ALTA KING.

Editorial Comment

LAST WEEK we quoted twelve passages of Scripture which declared that a part of the dead will never return to life, either for reward or punishment. Know therefore and understand that he who talks about a "universal resurrection" speaks not according to the oracles of God (1 Pet. 4:11). Universal resurrection is a figment of the imagination foisted upon the generality by the immortality of the soul. It is indeed a logical necessity of immortal soulism. In the system of divine truth it has no place. It is an ignis fatuus, a foolish fire, a "strange fire" to burn on the Lord's altar, which he has not commanded (Lev. 10:1).

UNIVERSAL RESURRECTION WHEN ?

TO CLAIM there will be a universal resurrection fastens upon the claimant the necessity of stating when it will take place. "The exact time" is not, of course, in question. To say there is no "scriptural necessity for knowing the time of the universal resurrection" is to display unnecessary wariness. The necessity of knowing epochally or dispensationally when the ignorant are to be raised will appear when we remember that priesthood and probation begin and end together. To raise the dead before priesthood begins, would defeat probation after resurrection; to raise them after priesthood has ceased, would also make probation both absurd and impossible. The necessity of knowing "the time of the universal resurrection" now begins to appear. The dead must be raised, not before or after, but while priesthood functions. Mistake the time of resurrection and probation for the dead is outlawed. "When are the dead raised ?" is a question that must be answered without evasions and dodges.

DISPENSATIONAL ENTANGLEMENTS AND LOGICAL ABSURDITIES

PUTTING SHYNESS aside, let us keep ourselves clear from chronological entanglements. Probably some illustrations will help us to think clearly as we ought to think. Suppose that during the days of Moses some Canaanite had accused God of not giving the people who had lived before that time a "fair chance." Suppose he had used the tactics of Larger Hope and said: "The masses of the people who lived before Moses had no chance; the kingdom of God is to be established by Moses; therefore all the dead are entitled to the priesthood and probation of the Mosaic ritual; and to obtain these they must all be raised from the dead." This argument is verbally and substantially the same as we hear today, and just as plausible. The Mosaic economy was a "pattern of things in the heavens" and was typically the kingdom of God on earth (Exod. 19:6). History steps in to tell us the sentimental and plausible theory of the Canaanite is not so. Instead of preserving all the living Egyptians and the seven nations of Canaan, they were summarily destroyed. Their dead ancestors were not disturbed. But the Canaanite would at least be logical and consistent in his error in insisting that the dead Egyptians, to become recipients of the Mosaic priesthood, must be raised form the dead sometime during the reign of that priesthood. To give them a "fair chance" he would insist that they should be raised at the founding of the Mosaic ritual, and thus get a fair start. Suppose the Canaanite preacher had said: "No; they are not raised at the founding of the Mosaic institution, nor during its administration, but after it 'passes away with a loud noise.'" Even children would have said, "that Canaanite's logical faculty is at fault. He raises people from the dead to enjoy a chance under the Mosaic law after the law and its priesthood are abolished. His chronology is badly mixed."

Again, suppose some lawyer had said at the beginning of the Christian dispensation: "The masses who lived under the Mosaic law had no chance. Christ has founded his church on earth and is a priest in the heavens. Therefore all the dead of past ages must be raised that they may enjoy probation under the priesthood of Christ." And then resorting to Larger Hope arguments he would continue: "Christ has died for 'every man,' for the 'sins of the whole world.' He says he has all power in heaven and in earth,' and that the gospel must be preached to 'every creature.' And as he commanded so it has come to pass (Col. 1:6)." Beautiful as the lawyer's theory sounds, twenty centuries of the Christian dispensation refutes it completely. Instead of all being raised from the dead in the Christian dispensation, not one has been raised; instead of all having a chance, the Jewish nation has been "broken off," and as a nation has not had any chance at all; instead of "every creature" having the gospel preached, so few have heard it that Larger Hope people build their strongest arguments for future probation on that very fact! History has unmercifully demolished the lawyer's altruistic theory . But he would have destroyed it himself if he had said in answer to the question, "Are the dead raised at the beginning of the Christian dispensation, or during its administration ?" if he had said: "No; they are raised afterwards !" He would be guilty of destroying with one hand what he was trying to build up with the other.

LARGER HOPE A CHRONOLOGICAL MISFIT

WE HAVE seen that Larger Hope is a misfit in the past, therefore its advocates must face the future without a single precedent, merely repeating arguments on its behalf which history has exploded centuries ago. The impracticability of the theory is further underscored by the fact that according to its own propagandists "the universal resurrection" cannot be made to fit anywhere in the future. Christ's priesthood in heaven is to be supplemented by his priestly reign on earth. At his coming there will be a resurrection of the dead, followed by a priestly and kingly reign of Christ and the saints for one thousand years (Rev. 5:10). This reign is expressly said to last a thousand years (Rev. 20:4), and then to be "finished" and "expire" (vss. 5, 7). It is during this period, if at all, that the dead can be raised and be given a chance under the millennium priesthood. So we approach Larger Hope people and ask,

"When does the universal resurrection, about which you talk so much, take place ?"

"We see no scriptural necessity for knowing the time of the resurrection," they reply.

"But if the dead are to benefit under the millenium priesthood of Christ, they should be raised when Christ comes and inaugurates that priesthood. Raise them then and you will have a thousand years in which they can have a chance."

No; we are not to be trapped by a stratagem. The enlightened ones only are raised at the coming of Christ."

"Then while the priesthood of Christ on earth is in full blast the ignorant, whom you want to have probation under that priesthood, are slumbering in their graves."

"Yes; they are 'the rest of the dead' to be raised later."

"But your text reads, 'the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished.' Then if they are not raised at the beginning of the reign, or during the reign, they are not raised to life until it has 'expired.' How do you expect them to benefit by a priesthood that is 'finished' before they get there?"

"We are not interested in the question of when they are raised."

"Well, we are. Frankly, now, are the ignorant raised at the coming of Christ and the beginning of his reign?"

"No; they are not raised then."

"Are they raised during his reign?"

"No; not till it is 'finished.'"

"Then they are raised in the 'little season' that follows the millennium?"

"Exactly."

"Then see what a conglomeration of bits and ends Larger Hope is. There are no parts of a vast organic whole—no vital coherence in it. Stray fragments of theology, chronological misfits, Russellite oddities, Universal maxims and much else accidently heaped together! The masses of people now have no chance to be saved, because the devil prevents them hearing the truth (1 Pet. 5:8). During the millennium when the devil is bound (Rev. 20:1, 2), and they could have a chance in a golden age of peace and righteousness, they are all dead! No chance for them under the millennium priesthood and reign of Christ; absolutely none; for they are dead! Then after this priesthool is 'finished' and the reign 'expires' and the devil is 'loosed out of his prison,' and while he is deceiving the nations in the four quarters of the earth, hurrying them on to destruction by a downpour of 'fire from God out of heaven' (Rev. 20)—then they are to have a chance ———"

DEAR ONES OF THE FAITH:

AFTER READING Brother Adams' article in July 6th Restitution, I cannot keep still longer. Why do we so often become indifferent after we see the light and are baptized? Do we think that this is all that is required of us? It is just the beginning of a useful life. Paul says to the Ephesians, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Are we redeeming the time? I am afraid I have not. Why cannot we, who live in or near Kansas City, Missouri, or Kansas, form a society and redeem the time by studing the precious truth together? Let us not have any excuses or worldly cares to hinder us meeting together once a week. In this way we might get others to study and learn the real truth; besides it would strengthen our faith to withstand the worldly conflicts now and those to come.

I am quite sure some of the brothers would spare us a few sermons now and then. If a suitable meeting place cannot be found, some of us could open our homes to no better cause. Our humble home is open at any time. Let us get busy: what say you? Let us not be like the five virgins that had no oil.

Looking for the soon coming King.

Mrs. LETTA MORGAN.

EDITOR RESTITUTION:

I WISH to tell you how much I appreciate the admirable and scriptural articles which appear from time to time from your pen and also the gifted writers on inspiration found in The Restitution. I may say that I consider myself a lonesome, isolated well wisher of your church, although not a member of your church of God or any other organized church for that matter. I rejoice in the fact of acceptance of the truth as set forth in The Restitution founded upon God's immutable truths, and that I am kept in touch with the brethren through receiving your paper regularly from Brother Rothe, of Brooklyn. He has been very kind to me from time to time, and I appreciate it very much. I also rejoice to know that I am united to all of the one hope and faith once for all delivered to our fathers, and that through the acceptance of Christ as my own personal Savior I believe my name is written on the church roll in heaven.

I am writing you about a matter that troubles me not a little, and of which I am much exercised in my mind about, so much so that I seem in a fog and do not know whether I am following the truth or not. For some time past a district field organizer and minister of the Seventh Day Adventist faith has been visiting me at my residence nearly every Sunday afternoon and holding Bible reading for the benefit of myself and wife and a few other friends. He has just built a new church of his faith about 3 or 4 miles from here and is interested in us and anxious for us to become identified as members of his church. Now this is my trouble: while I agree with much of his teaching which seems the same as I find in The Restitution, I cannot yet feel that I will be lost if I do not keep the one Lord's Day Sabbath, that is, the seventh day Saturday. He has given me much literature to read on this Sabbath question, and it appears convincing enough to me so far as the origin and commandment goes, also the historical evidence of the change of day by Constantine at the instigation of Rome, and Rome takes full credit for changing the day which is the fulfilment of the prophecy that he shall think to change times and laws. Of course it is impossible to change God's laws. The pope has only thought to do it to his own satisfaction and nearly all Protestant Christendom who acknowledge her supremacy by keeping her day Sunday.

Now here is where I do not feel able to fall in line, granted that the above is all true: must I, in order to be saved, go back to keep the law and put myself again in bondage to that law which, until I became a Christian standing fast in the liberty wherewith Christ makes me free, I was totally unable to keep by reason of my fallen nature? Granted that God's law is immutable, and has not been done away by Christ. Please tell me, where do I stand? what course must I take? I want to walk in the truth. It is a vital matter to me. I do not want to jepardize my future life through failure to do the right thing at any cost or sacrifice.

Brother M——, the minister referred to, tells me on the authority of God's word that Rome is clearly the beast, that Sunday worship is the mark of the beast, and that Protestantism has set up an image to the beast which is worshipping Sunday like Rome, the first day, instead of the seventh; and that from Revelation he showed me all those, whether Christians or not, who worship the beast or his image or has his mark in their foreheads or hands, will be destroyed at Christ's coming. What an awful ending to a faithful Christian life [illegible] destroyed because we have knowingly or not kept the wrong Sabbath!

My brother, I feel very much disturbed about this vital matter, and I appeal to you to enlighten me and guide me as to the course I must pursue. There is always two sides to any question: perhaps you with your profound knowledge of the Scriptures can give me the right view and set my mind at rest.

You may use parts of this letter for publication in The Restitution, and if you will kindly oblige submit an article in answer to it for the benefit of others who are being exercised very much about this question just now. Also I would be glad if you would just send me a personal letter in answer to my enquiries as above in order to set my mind at rest sooner than would be by the time article appears in The Restitution.

Your personal letter will be doubly appreciated as this brother is continallu urging upon me the importance of becoming a Seventh Day Adventist and keeping God's laws, and I want your side in order to be able to decide what to do, and where to stand. Any Restitution literature bearing on the subject, please send along with letter. I will send you an order in a few days for a selection of literature as advertized on the back page of The Restitution..

May God bless you and your staff of contributors, and especially dear Auntie Wince. Her articles are a great spiritual help to me. I feel so full of love to her and all the dear workers in the Church of God. On the bright dawning of that glad day what a gathering that will be!

Trusting we shall all be found there without blemish and without spot,

I remain, yours in the one hope,

GEORGE F. HAINES.

The questions propounded by above correspondent have been answered privately. Editor.

Salem Church Notes

BROTHER ROBISON, while in failing health, is able to attend our meetings.

SISTER ESTHER Burton and family spent last Sunday with Brother and Sister Moore, near Garretsville, O.

SUNDAY SCHOOL each First Day at 10 A. M.; meeting 11 A. M.; Bible study 7:30 P. M.; Brother O. A. Pottorf, teacher.

WE ARE much pleased to have with us on July 25th Brother and Sister Heacock, of Canton, O., and Sister Huggins and children, Russell and Catherine, of Cleveland, O.

BROTHER MORRON is again with us after spending several weeks at his summer home in Canada. Sister Morron left for that point last week. Their son John Wayne is also spending the summer there.

REPORT OF SISTER'S MEETING

A MEETING was held July 14th at the home of Sister Townsend on West Main St., for the purpose of reorganizing a Sister's meeting. The last meeting previous to this was held Feb. 17th, 1916.

The following officers were elected: President, Sister Pottorf, Secretary and Treasurer, Sister Coy, Organist, Sister Townsend.

The next meeting will be held July 28th at the home of Sister Ella Knowles, 50 Depot St.; lesson Psalm 2, leader Sister Ella Knowles. We shall be pleased to hear from the sisters in Cleveland and elsewhere. Address Mrs. W. W. Coy, 27 Ellsworth Ave., Salem, O.

RALPH COY, Sec.

Nebraska Conference

THE 35th annual conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic faith in Nebraska will convene in Omaha, Neb., Aug. 25th to 29th inclusive, and will continue longer if interest warrants. The signs are thickening and events are taking place so rapidly, that we have no assurance the age will last from one conference to another; so we must make the best of the time that remains. We need you at the meeting for your counsel and admonition, and you need ours. The topics we are most interested in will be discussed. One or two, and maybe more able speakers will be present to help in the preaching, so plan now to be here and enjoy every minute of the time

As far as possible the following program will be carried out.

Morning devotion	7:15
Breakfast	7:30
Children's meeting	9.00
Bible Class	10.00
Sermon	11.00
Dinner	12.00
Question Box	2.00 to 2:30

Sermon	2:30
Business	4.00
Supper	6.00
Song service and social meeting	7.00
Sermon	8.00

All coming by rail to either Union or Burlington stations take a Farnham car going north, and ask for transfer to Sherman Ave., and transfer at 14th and Farnham and take a car that says 42 and Grand Ave.; then get off at 40 and Grand, and go north to Jaynes St., then three blocks east to place of meeting. Places for sleeping will be provided free; the charge for meals will be just enough to meet the expense—3 meals for 50 cents. You cannot live any cheaper at home. Write Brother Almus Adams how many are coming from each locality, and you will be met at the train. Bring these directions with you and you will not have any trouble.

To all strangers we will say, you will be driven over the city to see principal places of interest, of which there are many. We hope to meet you here and enjoy a feast of good things. Paul in his letter to the Hebrew brethren says we must not forsake the assembling of ourselves together. and especially as we see the day approaching. Brethren, the day is fast approching.

THE MASTER IS COMING

The Master is coming! he's coming again!
He's coming to free us from sorrow and pain;
To bless all creation, and ransom the earth
He honored before by his wonderful birth.

Mark 13:35. Rom. 8:22.
John 14:18. Isa. 11:9.

The Lord Jesus is coming! he's coming the same,
As loving and kind as he formerly came;
And all who "in him" are asleep in the grave
Shall wake at his voice, for he's mighty to save.

Acts 1:11. 1 Thess. 4:14.
Psa. 72:17. John 5:28.

As Lazarus came forth by the word that he spoke,
As the daughter of Jarius, the ruler, awoke.
As the son of the widow of Nain was restored,
So they shall revive at the call of their Lord.

John 11:44. Luke 7:15
Mark 5:42. 1 Thess. 4:16.

The saints who are living and those who thus rise,
Shall be caught away like clouds in the skies;
All radiant in light, like the Lord whom they see,
And with him forever in glory to be.

1 Cor. 15:51. 1 John 3:2.
1 Thess. 4:17. John 14:3.

When earth has been freed from its sorrow and sin,
The reign of Immanuel then will begin:
The age of all gold will attain to its birth,
And peace her soft pinions spread over the earth.

HOW TO BE HAPPY

THE SUREST way to be happy is to get so awfully busy you have no time to be unhappy.

Be so busy that you have no time for "busy bodies," and you then will escape the sting of gossip and avoid much unrest.

Get the habit of looking happy, and by and by it will hurt you to look cross.

Be busy! Yes, but in what way? There are many things that it would be far better for us to be dead and buried than to busy doing.

One way to be busy that is sure to bring the happiest of results is to "bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Another way that will bring happiness both here and hereafter is to make peace. Hath not Jesus said, "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God."

Are we busy in keeping our light shining so that others will, through us, see the love of God and be brought repentant to him? Did you know that Christ admonishes us to do so?

Jesus came into this world to do "the will of his Father." Can we afford to do less than follow the example of Jesus? If we spend our time in doing the will of God we shall be happy; every one with whom we come in contact will be happy; Jesus will be happy; and God will be happy.

Yes, the only way to be happy is by making others happy, and the best way to make others happy is to tell them of "Jesus and his love."

1150 B. C. 1920 A. D.

SAMUEL WAS the Old Testament's best type of spiritual leader. His character and conduct were unblemished. He wanted only to find out the will of God and do it. He was as courageous as a warrior, as gentle as a woman. His one law and guide was the word of God. His personal dignity lends him a quality of real grandeur; he was a gentleman, "without fear, and without reproach." His personal griefs never affected his public duty. He remained serene and benign and public-spirited throughout all vicissitudes. His loyalty was not lessened, nor his spirit embittered, by his own relegation to a secondary position. He knew how to

Meet with triumph and disaster
And treat those two impostors just the same.

Shall we not pray, daily in private, and upon all the public gatherings of the church, that in this grave hour there may be sent Samuels to lead the church and the world into paths of spiritual wisdom? Even now let us pray:

Almighty God, King of the Ages, Ruler of nations and of the hearts of mankind, look in mercy upon our world today, so sorely smitten, so blindly groping, so sorrowfully stumbling. Give unto us ears quick to hear thy voice, and spirits ready to obey thee in all things; that being true followers of thee we may humbly lead our fellowmen into ways of wisdom and paths of peace. Overwhelm us now with a sense of spiritual values. Make us wise with the wisdom that is for two world's. Teach us to touch the spirits of men, and especially little children, with the touch that turns towards thee. Amen.

TO THOSE WHO DESIRE TO HELP

WILL THOSE friends who love us enough to wish to aid us in our work, kindly remember that they can accomplish their purpose much better by observing the following rules:

Write on one side of the paper only.
Write with ink.
Write plainly.
Write briefly.
Write to the point.

We appreciate and thank you for what you do, for we know it is done in love; but often we have to rewrite your message, feeling it would be unjust to the printer to send it to him in the condition we receive it. And we feel you are unjust to yourself when you write in a careless slipshod manner. One letter we received was dirty, crumpled and torn, and it bore the following postscript:

Dear Brother Donaldson:

Please excuse the condition of this letter, for had you been where this letter has been you would be dirty too.

Signed, ———

The writer had no idea of being funny, and neither was he; he simply was so careless that he was disgusting, and any influence for good he otherwise might exert would, under the circumstances, be lost. So for your own sake, for the sake of those to whom you write, for the sake of the Savior you claim to serve, we will add to the above rules, BE NEAT.

A hint to the wise is sufficient. I thank you.

TO GOD THE HONOR

'Tis he that taught the lark, from earth upspringing,
To warble forth his matin-strain;
And the pure stream in liquid gushes singing,
Gladly to bless the thirsty plain;
And from the laden bee, when homeward winging
Its tuneful flight, doth not disdain
To hear the song of praise.
There's not a voice in nature, but is telling
(If we will hear that voice aright),
How much, when human hearts with love are swelling,
His blessed bosom hath delight
In our rejoicing lays.
His love that never slumbers,
Taught thee those tuneful numbers.—Bethune.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"—Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, O. AUGUST 17th, 1920. NUMBER 31

Your Guiding Star

IS YOUR lamp trimmed and burning?
  Is your vessel filled each day?
Are you waiting for the bridegroom?
  Do you think he's on the way?
Are your robes all clean and spotless?
  Are your hands quite free from sin?
Are you the trumpet call awaiting?
  Do you think you'll enter in?

Are you mixing with the world,
  In their daily joys and strife?
Is fashion, show and pleasure
  Your guiding star through life?
Do the movies most attract you,
  And draw you far away,
When you should be at the church,
  To hear and sing and pray?

Do you love to go joy-riding
  With the gay and giddy throng?
And listen to their babble,
  Their jesting, slang and song?
Does the low seductive fiction
  That the libraries contain,
Fill your heart with foolish longings,
  And satisfy your brain?

Come, leave the trash alone and fill
  Your mind from God's rich store,
Have you tasted of the heavenly gift,
  And anxious for some more?
This age is now the only time,
  The prize of life to win;
You sure will not obtain it,
  If you spend your time in sin.

Then do not longer linger,
  Do not disdain the prize;
For soon the "Sun of righteousness"
  In glory will arise;
Then perchance you may repent
  When alas it is too late,
When the righteous are all gathered
  Inside the golden gate!

Is Man an Immortal Being?

A Discussion of Man, Soul, Spirit, Death, Hell, and the Resurrection

RESURRECTION OF THE BODY

WE CAN now see how the expression "resurrection of the body," believed in by the churches and preached about in a perfunctory manner at Easter tide, came to be adopted. When the Platonic fiction of the soul's immortality began to be accepted, then of necessity the resurrection (if any) could possibly be only that of the body. Thus the scriptural expression "resurrection of the dead" was altered in the ceeds of churches to "resurrection of the body." Let our readers compare the so-called Apostle's Creed in the Church of England prayer book with the older Nicene Creed sung or said at the Communion service, and they will see the point we are emphasizing. In the Bible we never find the expression "resurrection of the body," because it is not true.

Death is the "gate to glory." Death is "the crown of life." "Death gives us more than was in Eden lost; the King of terrors is the Prince of Peace." So sing poets and so talk preachers. Let us hear Paul: "By one man sin came into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, in whom all have sinned." "The wages of sin is death." Death is further personified by the apostles as "the last enemy." It is to be "abolished." In the coming age "There shall be no more death."

These texts quoted in brief explode the inanities and mischievous talk of poets and preachers. These would have death's victims wreathed in flowers and peans of triumph uttered over the graves of the slain. Surely a horrible, ghastly delusion!

IS DEATH A BEATITUDE?

Consider, if the popular teaching of death is right, then Adam's disobedience brought a blessing instead of a curse to the human race, and to him and to his consort in particular, death wrought a glorious and exalted beatitude. That is, they secured a heavenly for an earthly paradise by an early premeditated rebellion against their Maker! One wonders after this, if that precious pair could have done any better? The most incredible part of it all is, that Adam has been in an heavenly paradise these 5000 years, rejoicing in his salvation, in a state of glorified complacency and with his wife, "hovering in spirit" over the appalling ruin which they had wrought; witnessing the ever increasing numbers of lost "immortal souls," writhing and wailing in bitter agony, in company with their son Cain, the fratricide, cursing and blaspheming both of them and their haeful Maker! The picture is too horrible! And yet, Adam and Eve are supposed to witness all this, knowing full well that they, and they alone were the dire cause of the ruin and misery to the race. Reader, how would you like it?

Take another instance: Moses, because of his rebellion against God, as set forth in Deut. 32, was punished, by being denied entrance into the land of Canaan. "I have caused thee to see the land which I will give to Israel," said God, "but thou shalt not go over, but get thee up into Mount Nebo and die in the mount whither thou goest up, and be gathered unto thy people. So Moses the servant of God went up into the mount and died there." Well then what happened? The chronicler says, "God buried him." Not a bit of it! Moses just "swept through the gates" right into the heavenly Canaan! He lost the privilege of entering into the earthly Canaan, because "he spake unadvisedly with his lips"; but he just closed his eyes and "winged his flight" delightfully into the New Jerusalem with scarcely a blush on the face of his "immortal soul," while for thirty days the children of Israel were weeping and mourning for him!

SPURGEON IN HEAVEN

Let us briefly view the case of Lazarus with the popular death idea. The record states he had been dead and buried four days. He was doubtless a believer in his Friend and Lord, and therefore at death, went to glory. Here on earth were his sisters beseeching the Lord to bring him to life again. The Lord in his almighty power, accedes to the prayers of these selfish women and brings poor happy Lazarus back to this mundane state; probably he was his sisters' only support, gut what cared they? even if he had to go a second time, through the "bitter pangs of death." How would Lazarus like it? And how are we to view our Lord's participation in this questionable act. We bring these points in violent contrast, so that our readers may see and appreciate the blasphemous contradictions involved in the popular view of death. We remember of Mrs. Charles Haddon Spurgeon, when she lost her illustrous husband a few years ago, stating that she would not for many worlds, consent to ask that her husband be brought back from the joy with his Lord in heaven! Here spoke the true and unselfish wife and woman! She believed and therefore she spoke, but what are we to think of Mary and Martha whose actions were the very opposite? Are we wrong in calling them selfish? But then, it is only our logical conclusion from a false premise, which has compelled us to do so.

CAIN IN HELL.

We will reverse the scene while still keeping to the orthodox idea. There is Cain the first murderer, undergoing in his soul the torments of the theological "hell" for the last 5000 years. At the resurrection his "immortal soul" will be united with a body supposed also to be made incorruptible, and both will stand up before the great white throne. What for? A trial is to be held, and the judgment will probably be that, because he killed his brother Abel, therefore he is to be tormented henceforth and forever body and soul in Gehenna. In vain we hear him plead that up to date he has had over 5000 years agonies in Dante's Inferno—if not there, in the theological "hell"—that he was many degrees less culpable than sinners of his kind living and dying in this gospel age—that he really after all did his brother a good turn, by sending him "to glory" centuries before he would have reached there otherwise. The incredible and amazing part is, that Cain will have suffered punishment all these many centuries, without even the pretence of a trial! for, be it remembered, that Scripture knows of no judgment except the judgment of the "great day" when the Lord will have come and awakened the dead to the "resurrection of judgment!" Is this therefore, not tantamount to hanging a man first and then trying him? How much of folly, confusion, infidelity and blasphemous reflections against our Father would we have been saved from, if we had adhered to Moses and the prophets, and let Plato alone, when framing our theologies and isms and systems and creeds.

The Temptation of Christ

He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin.

WHEN PERUSING the words of the writer to the Hebrews, the more or less superficial reader pauses in doubt as he reads the words of the apostle, "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin," and asks the meaning of these words. Was Christ tempted in all points like as we are? More often the question is viewed in the form, Was Christ tempted in exactly the same way, or under the same circumstances as I am? The questioner pictures one of his great trials, and concludes Christ was never under such circumstances.

This form of reasoning which largely prevails, has engendered in the minds of Christians a wrong or lax conception of the temptations and life of Christ during his thirty years of private life and the three and a half years of his ministry, and has, as its consequence, prevented the truth of Jesus' words, "love is the fulfilment of the law," being universally understood by his followers.

What was then the nature of Christ? Jesus says of the angels, they neither marry nor are given in marriage, that they are spirit beings, and deathless. The writer to the Hebrews says, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" He was not of angelic nature, neither part God and part man, as some would have us believe. The writer to the Galatians tells us (Gal. 4:4), "God sent his own Son made of a woman, made under the law;" and to the Romans (8:3), "God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh." The apostles throughout the New Testament in their writings acknowledge two kinds of bodies: mortal and immortal. Jesus therefore being of a nature susceptible to temptation, must have been mortal just as all other human being are. He was mortal, human, and finite, of flesh and blood, the Son of God by begettal through the power of the Holy Spirit, as recorded in the 1st chapter of Luke.

Very early in his life Jesus is brought to our attention as displaying wisdom and understanding. When but twelve years of age his mother brought him to Jerusalem at the time of the feast of the passover. After travelling three day's journey Jesus was not found, and in consequence his mother returned to Jerusalem where he was found in the temple, sitting amongst the doctors, asking them questions and hearing them. At this early age he knew who he was, and he knew why he had come into the world, for his answer to his mother is, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" He had been taught he was the Son of God, and had heard what was written of him in the prophets and in the law, how that he should be numbered among the transgressors, crucified, and resurrected from the dead.

His constant object during his life was to follow the spirit, to live a life of righteousness always living well pleasing unto his God. He was living during the law dispensation, under the law, in covenant relationship with his Father by the law of life and death. All men had failed to keep it (because weak through the flesh), and the Son of Man had to keep it perfect. To do what all others had failed to do and ultimately to give up his life on Calvary's cross for his friends. This knowledge of what he must suffer, and ever living to that end, was indeed a great trial, and controlling his natural desires was indeed suffering. This life (known as his private life) was one of continual watchfulness and godliness, and was commended by God. At Jesus' baptism by John in Jordan when the spirit descended and lit upon him in the form of a dove, there came a voice from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

The writer to the Hebrews says we have not a high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Jesus during his career experienced the feelings common to his people. One of the most notable instances of his love and feeling is given us in the case of Lazarus who had died, as recorded in John 11:34-36, for Jesus wept and the Jews said, "Behold, how he loved him." And when approaching Jerusalem at the proclamation of "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord," he wept over the city saying, "If thou hadst known in this thy day the things which belong unto thy peace, but now they are hid from thine eyes."

Perhaps the most notable temptation through which Jesus passed is recorded in Matthew 4, his temptation in the wilderness forty days by the diabolos. At the present time the most popular view of this temptation is that the "devil" is here a person tempting Christ. Jesus according to the narrative, was tempted, therefore that which tampted him was the devil. The apostle James gives us the origin of temptation (1:14) when he says, "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lusts and enticed" (by his own desires). Our conclusion, then, is if Christ is tempted by his own desires, the devil is the origin of the desires. The circumstances of the trial of Christ differs from those of any other people. These circumstances are peculiar and singular, but when the apostle wrote "tempted in all points" he did not take circumstances into consideration. He was speaking of things commonplace to man's nature. Christ's desires were those common to humanity. The first "point" of the temptation was the appeal to his desires for food. He had fasted forty days and forty nights and he was tempted (by his own desires, Jas. 1) for food, to turn stones into bread by the Holy Spirit he received at baptism. Hunger to be satisfied, one of the features most common to human nature. The second feature was "cast thyself down, for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee." The suggestion of his mind is cast thyself down, and show people that angels have charge over thee. The third was "all these things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." All three features were of things common to mankind, hunger to be satisfied, pride to be gratified, and power to be satisfied.

"PERFECTED THROUGH SUFFERING"

The apostle writing to the Hebrews (5:8) tells us, Christ learned obedience by the things which he suffered. The writer did not intend to convey the idea that perverseness and disobedience was corrected by suffering. Christ was never imperfect in the sense that he was improper. The apostles are very emphatic in their statement of his life, "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth;" "Holy, guileless, undefiled, and separate from sinners," are their testimonies.

He did no sin! The godly man has here a matter for his consideration. He that has been free from sin for a little season, let him consider a lifetime of sinlessness. Jesus defines sin in the sense I use it here when he says, "He that hateth his brother is a murderer," and "Whoso looketh after a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery."

His whole life was the subordination of all the elements of his every day life to a constant obeying of his Father's desires. If we contemlpate him as mechanically willing and spontaneously following the path of life, we can see no suffering in learning obedience, and no virtue in his life, neither could he be touched with the feeling of our infirmities.

Jesus was given the Spirit of God without measure (John 3:34) by which he read the thoughts of men. His divinely inspired perceptions gave him a knowledge of the thoughts, actions, and destines, of those whom he loved. He knew the outcome of the lives of relatives, friends, and enemies. Some may call these the meditations of a sentimentalist, or a weakling, but the apostle reveals them unto us as a part of that love which passeth all understanding. If we could not ponder and realize the emotions and affections and the power exercised to restrain them. Yet he never once under the strongest influences of such elements, manifested that super-emotional disposition which effaces the sight of right judgment, and sets aside just reason. He was perfected through suffering by being built up thoroughly. He carries through to its bitter end that manner of life which was approved by the Father.

He was a mortal man, however, and a finite creature. Finite power attached as it was to a destructible energy had an end to its endurance. So when the Holy Spirit forsook Christ on the cross of Calvary he cried with a broken heart, "My God! My God! why hast thou forsaken me?" Then the perfection of obedience through suffering was accomplished.

Thoughts on "Chance"

A GREAT deal is written about "chance," fair and otherwise in these times, and maybe it would be well to analyze the ideas of the word. To begin with, the modern scientists, the theoretical scientists have based the whole theory of creation on chance. According to them all the expanse of the limitless regions of space is filled with fragments of flying matter that accidently spun itself into suns and planets that keep on rushing regardless, and how they have chanced to avoid running into each other is indeed something of a wonder. Lately our attention was called to the fact, by an ever hysterical press, that all the minor planets of our solar system had got into line in a great tug of war, all on one side of the sun, and the chances were that something in the celestial universe would be pulled out of gear then what? Some went crazy, some committed suicide, and the rest of the ignorant were much perturbed. But the weather has been about the same, and so we doubt this chance theory that keeps us on tenter hooks with a "Damocles' sword" hanging over us in the shape of bomb planets and grerade comets pelting round and menacing us, adding so much more to our other worries.

As a mater of fact, there is no such thing as chance. Everything that has happened is happening or will happen is the result of cause. If a person puts his heel on a banana skin and sits down suddenly with great surprise, his calamity is the result of the law of gravitation, the same law that holds him up and allows him to walk straight in ordinary circumstances. This deviation from the plumb line was on account of his limited knowledge with regard to the location of the banana skin, and so forth; there was no chance in the result. The same cause, or combination of causes, will again produce the same results. All real science applied science as distinguished from theoretical science—is founded on the fact that there is no result but with sufficient cause. Whether an earthquake or a bee sting causes discomfort or calamity or peace and good weather brings prosperity and joy, from our limited point of view it may look like luck, good or bad; but cause and effect is the universal law, and we must work according to that law as a sailor trims his sails to the wind, for the wind won't trim to him.

To those who place confidence in the Bible as the revelation of God, the idea is presented from another angle, from a higher standpoint, namely, that God the maker, maintainer and controller of the universe fills the whole area with his intelligence and power, and nothing can happen outside of his recognition or direction, even to the "falling of the sparrow" and the "numbering of the hairs of the head." From our point of view the things that happen do look all disconnected, at odds and evens. Ours is the outside view; but from the other side where the " potter's hand" manipulates the clay, where the engineer directs the key board and throttles the engine, it must look an altogether different thing. To him it is merely a question of production. "He maketh all things for himself." A chance would necessarily be a mischance.

If I read my book anything like correctly, the object of God on this planet is to ultimately produce a race of beings that have been trained and educated up to companionize and love him, being filled with his Spirit and inherit the "long life" of the future ages. According to my reading, there is no more chance in regard to the world to come than there is in regard to this. The plans have been drawn and exposed for our general inspection. The times and seasons revealed, nothing can go amiss any more than the planet can fly out of its orbit.

To talk of fair or unfair dealing of the Omnipotent God with any particular human being, or set of human beings is not reason. No human being has any more claim to extra bounties of the Creator than any of the other animal races have. A dog can have no complaint that he did not chance to be a lion, or a horse to be an elephant. One man dwells in the shadow all his life, and another in the sun or the "lime light" what cause of complaint? The man in shade may be the best off: where is the difference? The Creator of all things has put all manner of animal life at our service with their energies as well as their flesh. DO we ever thinking of their servile condition as being unfair to them? We milk our cattle and eat them; we raise chickens for eggs and eggs for chickens. We who ourselves have only a borrowed right to the control of these wonderful processes of life, the dark sources of which are hidden deep in the secrets of the living God and can we who take upon ourselves the option of life and death of creatures practically in the same physical plane of existence as ourselves; dare we criticize the infinite God whose very existence is so exalted as to be far removed beyond our ken, who could not possibly owe us anything, and to whom we owe all and everything.

Some concoct a theory of eternal salvation from passages of Scripture oblivious to all common sense. Thus we have salvation by syllogisms. Thus again we have salvation on general principles simply because human beings are humna beings, therefore they have a right to the tree of life and enter in by the gates to the city; but if I read my book anything like correctly the salvation of the human race to be, is of God by divine selection and not by chance. "As many as the Father draweth, cometh." As to the lost—what did they lose? We came with nothing—we go with nothing; but God in all ages has deigned to reveal himself to test the "affinity" of those who will follow his lead, and promises to direct and instruct them by his spirit. How much there is in human volition is a question, but you have only to walk down any street in any town to hear the name of God blasphemed continually; you have only to read of the wars, tumults, and crimes to know and easily comprehend that there is no affinity in a large bulk of humanity toward godliness, and what is lost is a result—not a chance. Create in me a clean heart: God, renew a right spirit within us; for the pure in heart shall see thee, and thou dost pity the broken spirit.

The Kingdom Opportunities

THE LITTLE flock will inherit and possess in jointure with Christ, the kingdom and will live in the immortal glorified condition to which Christ has already attained, and refavored and redeemed Israel will be missionary evangelists to the nations of the world, and all will work in harmony for the gathering together of all things even in him, to the full accomplishment and consummation of God's plans and purposes. Glory to his holy name! But the little flock must be careful they do not fall into the same pit that the Scribes and Pharisee did, and not be ready to render the work they will have to do as God's stewards. As Auntie Wince says, "God is not taking out a people for nothing," only their own salvation. The great work of Christ's victory comes after the marriage of the Lamb and his bride. Christ is only in his courtship now. The great work for which marriage was instituted, that of producing children, comes after the wedding. If the figure holds good, the production of God's great spiritual family through Christ is to be accomplished after he comes and takes to himself his bride and sets up housekeeping in the establishment of his kingdom in the earth. A barren woman is not a very good helpmeet in the fundamental function of matrimony. Neither will a church, as the helpers of God through Christ, be a very good helpmeet in the spiritual household of God, unless they understand and are willing to assume the tasks that await them after marriage.

I am glad Brother Lyon is not so much worried over differences of opinion. It is an evidence of increasing faith in God and the success of Christ. The Father delegated all power in heaven and on earth to the Christ, and he will not fail to do the Father's will to its full completion. Our God is not a chance God. The world is not a chance world. People talk about a first chance and a second chance when there is no chance work about it. It is simply because of our shortsightedness that we think things just happen. God is not hampered. He has no competitor. He is supremely free. All we need to do is to yield ourselves to him in the name of his dear Son, and the spiritual life develops and we are enabled to bring forth the fruits of the spirit and become a sweet smelling savor to our God, like the soil that yields itself to the rootlets of the rose and is taken up and transformed into a beautiful flower and sheds its fragrance all around.—D. E. Van Vactor. Selected from the Circuit Letters, by Auntie Wince.

Jerusalem

ARE YOUR windows open toward Jerusalem? Set your face toward the hill of Zion to catch the first gleam of the dawning day of everlasting joy and peace. "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come." The rightful heirs of the land of promise have been homeless wanderers, apparently forsaken and forgotten, all these years, but it begins to look hopeful now. Their faces are turned Zionward with longings for home. "Yea, the set time to favor Zion is come." "For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof."

The heathen shall fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create; for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in her people: and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her: all ye that love her rejoice for joy with her all ye that mourn for her.

When we see the agitation and shaking up of the whole house of Israel (wherever they be scattered) for the coming together in their homes and to build up the waste places, well may we rejoice with Jerusalem. All this foreshadows the most glorious event of the ages. For we are told when the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory. "To hear the groaning of the prisoners; to loose those who are appointed unto death; to declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem." Then, violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls salvation, and thy gates praise. The sun shall no more be thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.

The man who violently hates or ardently loves, cannot avoid being in some degree a slave to the person he detests or adores.

Censure is most effectual when mixed with praise (Rev. 2; 3); so when a fault is discovered, it is well to look up a virtue to go in company with it.

The habit of resolving without acting is worse than not resolving at all, inasmuch as it gradually sunders the natural connection between thought and deed.

Dating Aug. 1st, Brother R. H. Judd writes: "I guess it will be some time before they ask me to preach in the Baptist Church again, as I gave some pretty straight remarks concerning death the last time I took the service. They are having two women there this morning. One person told me that had she been there when I last took the service she would 'have walked out.' It is a marvel to my mind the attitude they adopt when Bible teaching and everyday experience is so definitely against them. God surely has sent them a strong delusion --you know the rest."

Immoral Results of War

CHRIST FORBIDS his followers to use the sword. That orthodox ministers are chief factors in leading young men into military service only shows how apostate Christendom is. Moreover war is positively immoral. If you doubt this fact, you only have to open your eyes to the war-made evil eveywhere, and you cannot but believe. The press reported August 1st that more than one hundred girls in Boston, ranging from twelve to twenty-five years of age, were missing. Twelve were reported missing during one week. To show how present immorality is linked with the late war, and is directly a product of it, we need only quote the words of a European authority:

"When the end of the war came the minds of men, led astray by militarist passion, were exasperated by the length and bitterness of the conflict, and aggravated by famine on one side and accumulated riches in the hands of a few on the other. The war brought about two other evils—the diminution of conjugal fidelity and the diminution of respect for constituted authority. Licentious habits followed, even among young women and there arose the fatal doctrine of communism, with the absolute destruction of dutiful relation between nations and between fathers and children. Terrible consequences ensuing have already been experienced."

A Friendly Word for Larger Hope

Number Five--Concluded

"V. Finally, it must be shown that the same people who have died without a chance will be given a chance to be saved after they are raised from the dead." The proof of this is found under No. III.

To me the above is the presentation of what God has promised in his plan of salvation, what he has fulfilled of it, and therefore, of what he has yet to fulfill, without considering his actions from the standpoint of justice, love or sentiment. The future probation of the unenlightened class of this and past ages depends upon whether or not God had the whole human family in mind when he formulated his plan of salvation, or only a selected few. It will not change things one bit for us to charge him with weak sentiment if he had "all" in mind, or with injustice and lack of love if he had only a few in mind.

If we consider the question in this way we are sure to learn the truth whatever it is. After we have learned the truth I am sure we will see that, whatever it is, it is in accordance with justice based on perfect love and and violates no principle of righteousness through weak sentiment.

In your recent criticism of foreign missionary work, you made the statement that God had banished the gospel from India 1800 years ago and gave as proof Acts 16:16. I am sure the reference must be a mistake. Will you please give the correct reference?

Yours for truth,

ALTA KING.

Editorial Comment

WHEN ASKED pointblank for proof of Larger Hope we are merely told that "the proof of this is found under No. III." If the reader will look up the numeral he will find the number but not the "proof." Larger Hope always slinks away from the task of proving itself. It shuns demonstration. It dreads analysis. It fears criticism. It likes to ingratiate itself into emotional natures privately, and then to screen itself from scrutiny by a pretence of sanctity.

LARGER HOPE AND FOREIGN MISSIONS

FOREIGN MISSIONS, according to the dictum of Larger Hope, are doing a work of supererogation. The "due time" for the salvation of the heathen, according to this broad way leading to life, is the great beyond. To save them now is to save them "before the time"; and to the extent the work is successful, nullifies "the plan." To join Larger Hope and missionary interprise into holy wedlock is a contradiction too great to express in words. To mix the two is as absurd and foolish as if a pharmacist were to try and mix fire and water. Why should they disturb their present repose by trying to save people in this age that are to be saved in the next? Having had exprience with this dogma all our life, we must say calmly and deliberately that it is the most self-defeating and self-stultifying piece of theology with which we are acquainted. It bears bad fruit every time.*

*The immoral tendencies of the doctrine are invariable. The Editor was once visiting a farmer friend in Illinois who was infatuated with Larger Hope. During our conversation we asked him if the "damnation" of unbelievers consisted with their probation and salvation, alluding specifically to the Greek word "krino," translated "damned" in 2 Thess. 2:12, and "katakrino," translated "damnation" in Mark 16:16. He replied unabashed, "Their damnation is to them a blessing. It merely signifies they are to have a grand and good chance." In the afternoon he became provoked at the stock in the barn, and repeatedly called upon God to "damn" them. To people who have not dived into "the depths" of Larger Hope (Rev. 2:24), and to the Editor who is ignorant of Greek, this imprecation sounded like he was swearing; but theologically he was blessing the cattle and horses, calling down upon them the blessings of heaven. Anyway, our friend practiced what he preached!

As to the wrong verse being given in Acts 16, the whole chapter may be read, as it has a bearing in a most intimate way upon foreign missions. Also read the messages to the seven churches in Asia in the Revelation. The Son Man threatens to "come quickly" and remove the candlesticks (the churches) if they did not repent. Soon after the candlesticks were removed, and since then Asia particularly and the East generally, has languished in darkness. We do not here go into this matter fully, as we intend soon, the Lord willing, to expound the Scriptures relating to political geography for the readers of The Restitution.

The Compassion of Christ

Pemmican Notes of the Editor's Sermon

"Behold my servant, whom I have chosen: my beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased: I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall show judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets. A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory. And in his name shall the Gentiles trust (Matt. 12:18-21).

THE OLD Testament is the life of Christ in prophecy while the NewTestament is the life of Christ in history. 700 years before Christ was born in Isa. 42:1-4 we have practically the same words of Matthew declared. This duplication may become tiresome repetition to some who may not be able to understand why God tells the same thing twice. There are chapters in Exodus which are a series of detailed specifications for the tabernacle with these words, "And thou shalt make." One would think enough had been said, but there follows another series in which all specifications are repeated, and this time with these words, "And he made." I shall quote in passing Gen. 41:32, "And for that the dream was doubled unto Pharoah twice; it is because the thing is established by God and will shortly bring it to pass." Acquainted with the constitution of our minds God acts wisely in duplicating words. Adapting himself to our finite minds by the mouth of two or three witnesses, he brings with the certainty and explicitness of repetition his word to us as no other way would do.

I. Our attention is drawn to the commission God gave to Christ as the servant, the chosen, the beloved one upon whom the spirit rested; "and he shall show judgment to the Gentiles." An emphasis should be placed upon the word "my" to recognize God's superiority and Christ's subordination. My servant, my chosen, designating a chooser and the one chosen; my beloved, expressing the thought of one who loves and the object of that love. But it is not only Jesus Christ whom he text subordinates, but the spirit of God. "I will put my spirit upon him," showing the spirit as belonging to God and under the fiat of the Almighty. According to John 3:34 God possesses the spirit and gave it to Christ without measure. "And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of the fear of the Lord: and shall make him of quick undersanding in the fear of the Lord. And he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes,. neither reprove after the hearing of his ears" (Isa. 11:2, 3). "Behold," says God; and thus we are called upon to look at Christ and the commission given to him.

II. Let us pause to study the manner in which and by which Christ was to execute this commission: "He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets." In Christ, after he had received his commission, there was nothing ostentatious or clamorous, but within him was absolute calm and quiet. He executed his work silently, tenderly and successfully, although his life was jeopardized (Matt. 12:14). In following Christ we must in nothing be clamorous, noisome, ostentatious. Although written to the sisters the men must also hear what Peter has to say in 1 Pet. 3:3. Here is not a matter of an external fineness but rather an inner quiet spirit which God loves. In quietness is strength.

"A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench till he show forth judgment unto victory." How tenderly he did his work. A reed was a slight, frail, grassy stalk used as a musical instrument by the shepherds. Flax was the wick of the lamps used then, and a smoking flax was one just about extinguished and evil smelling. Thus are brought to our attention the feeble things and offensive things. But Christ is to deal with men and women weak, debased, offensive, and easily broken. The reed grew in marshy places (Job 40:21), and was a thing of vain support. "Thou trusteth upon the staff of this bruised reed, on which if a man lean it will go into his hand and pierce it" (1 Kings 18:21). Hear Christ questioning the multitude about John: "What went ye out in the wilderness to see ? a reed shaken with the wind ?" (Matt. 11:7). Not by any means. He was a rustic and austere man, one who led a strenuous life. Christ's dealing are not only with reeds, but "bruised" reeds; not only with flax, but "smoking" flax. Under the magic touch of Jesus Christ no man so mean, so weak, so sunken in inquity but he can reach, renovate, and elevate, and cause to emit melodies to God precious to the very ears of heaven. Judgment must finally result in victory.

III. "And in his name shall the Gentiles trust." This is our duty towards him as Jehovah's servant. Receiving and executing this commission with the highest wisdom, we Gentiles, the very dogs in Jewish estimation, must trust Jesus Christ for instruction, acceptance, and victory. Read Luke 1: 77-79 and 2:32. Jesus Christ is emphatically the day star, and the primary and fundamental purpose of Christ is to bring light to the Gentiles, to those sitting in the darkness of death. There is no case too hard, too debased, for this same Christ who is to be the light (Matt. 11:25). He condescends to the lowest. Eph. 4:20-32 tells us if we have been taught by Christ to put off all former conversation, and be renewed in the spirit of our minds. In this day of apostasy when science and philosophy are adored above Christ, and people are prostrating themselves before these things, it is good to go to the Bible and read that the sole instructor, the way, the truth, the life, is only Christ Jesus. He represents a race, a federal head. Being a multidudinous man our acceptance is absolute (Eph. 1:16), with no appendages of science. We do not have to mope through life as to whether God loves us or not (Eph. 1:10, 11), as an orthodox song suggests, "Am I the Lord's or am I not ?" Look to Christ solely, for in Christ God does not see one blot, not one sin (Eph. 5:27; Jude 24). When we walk out on these promises and see our duty in relation to him in this marvelous work we see him as instructor, and recognize that in him alone is our acceptance, "Christ, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. For ye are complete in him which is the head of all principality and power: for in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. 2:3, 10, 9). Now "beware," says Paul in verse 8. This sounds the warning note, the signal of impending danger. "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the elements of the world, and not after Christ" (Col. 2;8). Through philosophy, wisdom, science, oriental cults, and a thousand and one pretentious things the fulness of Christ in the Godhed might be compromised. So "beware"! Don't let any man meddle with your liberties, even though he be a philosopher, a man of science. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit" (Rom. 14:18). He shall show judgment to the Gentiles; for this reason we are to give ourselves wholly to him. As Rom. 8:37 reads, "In all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us." Paul sees the natural body and the corruption in the grave, but he also sees judgment given over to victory; for he says, "But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 15: 57).

Foundation and Building

FOUNDATION: The basis or groundwork of anything. In this study we are not considering an earthly house or structure, but an heavenly one. As the basis of this house see 1 Cor. 3:11. Here Paul, speaking of the wise masterbuilders, says: "For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus." By whom was this foundation laid ? Turn to Isaiah 28:16: "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a percious corner stone, a sure foundation." In Acts 4:10, 11 we find that this precious corner stone is Jesus Christ of Nazareth. Thus we see that God himself laid the foundation, and the foundation was Jesus the Christ of God. We find in 1 Cor. 3:9 the brethren are called the building of God. How can one be built upon this foundation, or in other words, become united to Christ ? For one cannot build without joining the foundation.

As the first step one must die to sin (Rom. 6:7); then be buried in water, and be raised out of the watery grave. Paul tells us in Rom. 6:4, 5 that we are thus in a figure buried with Christ, and in a figure we are risen with him, and being dead before our burial, in our resurrection we become new creatures in Christ; our old relationship is broken, and we are placed on a new foundation, becoming a part of the seed of Abraham, which is to bless all nations (Gal. 3:29). Now we are united to the only foundation stone of righteousness.

Does this insure our salvation ? No: for we have this command, "walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4; Col. 2:6). How do we walk ? By faith. But faith, or doctrine, without works is dead. Thus you see we may be joined to the foundation stone, and yet be broken off if we fail to do the works of righteousness. What are the works which we must do, if we become a part of the finished building of God ? The very first thing is love, then follows peace, longsuffering, gentleness, meekness. None of these fruits or works of righteousness will follow nor can, unless we first have godly love. We read in Prov. 10:12; 1 Pet. 4:8 that love covereth all sins. How is this ? Why, love is kind even through suffering: love does not envy or desire that which is another's; love does not puff one up, that is, make one self-conceited so that he sees no virtue only in himself; love seeketh not her own, that is, one who has the love which was in Christ Jesus will not be continually seeking his own comfort, but will in honor prefer others before himself. Such an one will love mercy and walk humbly before God (Mic. 6:8) He will love the brotherhood (1 Pet. 2:17). Thus we see without love there can be no works of righteousness, and if no love manifested, then no glorification of God. Love is the fulfilling of the law (Rom. 13:10).

SUMMARY

Christ the foundation.

The brethren the house or building of God.

This building is fitly framed together.

By continuing in the faith and doing works of righteousness, we become a part of the framework, and love fitly joins us together, and the finished building becomes a habitation of God through the Spirit, which Spirit nature is given at the resurrection. Therefore beloved, strive to build yourself up in the most holy faith. Keep yourself in the love of God, waiting for the manifestation of the Life Giver.

An Exhortation

PHILIPPIANS THIRD CHAPTER

"FINALLY, MY brethren, rejoice in the Lord: To write the same thing to you to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe."

Yes, safe for us all to be warned of all evil, and to be reminded that only in the Lord can we be kept in Christ. Paul says it is not grievous for him to write. We find in every letter that he has written to the different churches exhortations to stand fast in the faith and rejoice in the Lord. Every day that Paul preached the gospel of the kingdon his life was in danger. By faith we can see the fulfilment of the glory of that kingdom promised. Paul says, "Rejoice in the Lord, and again I say rejoice." Then the peace of God that passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

Brothers and sisters, we need today these same exhortation. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without moving, and not forsake the assembling of ourselves together. Let us rejoice in the Lord. Keep in mind the hope, the glory to be revealed in the day of Christ; press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Rejoice in hope, for hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of Christ will fill our hearts and give us strength and grace. Paul rejoiced to know that through Christ he had a hope of the resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection. They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign a thousand years.

This blessed promise was the promise that sustained Paul through all his years of suffering. He could say, "Rejoice in the Lord alway; and again I say rejoice." All who are looking for the fulfilment of the same promise are filled with gladness. We know that through Christ the same promise of a resurrection will be given to all who love his appearing. Let us strive daily to count the things of this life as nothing. The signs of his coming are surely plain to those who are waiting. The times of the Gentiles are almost finished. The Jew is hoping soon to be a nation again in their own land; and as we see all there things let us lift up our heads and rejoice. The Lord is coming.

GOLDEN TEXT: John 3:16

AT THE WHIPPING POST

BEFORE THE Elmsford meeting house
  A whipping post was set;
Around it on a cheerful morn
  The countryside was met.
They left their wonton chores undone,
  They came from miles away;
A fellow-man of Elmhurst town
  Was to be whipped that day.

At stated worship with the saints
  For more than three month's space,
This fellow in despite of law,
  Not once had shown his face.
Most of the saints had little cared
  Whether he lived or died,
But now they came with happy zest
  To see the lash applied.

The culprit to the post was bound,
  Uplifted was the thong -

When suddenly a horseman rode
  Among the gazing throng.
Unknown to them the high gray horse,
  Unknown the rider foe;
The rider reined his horse and asked,
  "What are ye here to do?"

Up stepped the solemn constable;
  The law he justified.
The stranger in his stirrup rose,
  "Ye Elmsford folk," he cried—
"Vain zealots who believe that ye
  Now heaven's praises win—
When sinful pride is thus your guide—
  Are rather serving sin!

"Think ye to force men to the ranks
  By fine and stocks and rod?
Into men's hearts shall men thus seek
  To whip the face of God?
A brother ye can never win
  By flogging or by fears;
With force and craft men press and draft—
  Heaven calls for volunteers!"

He turned his horse's head about
  And vanished as a ghost;
They bade the constable unbind
  The culprit from the post.
And as the crowd went slowly home,
  A voice was heard to say;
"Lo, with the Lord's own scourge of cords
  Were we rebuked this day."

THE STORY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST

By Ethel May Howard, 15 years, 11 months
Chinook Cove, British Columbia

In Competition As Per Conditions Printed
May 28th 1920.

SIX MONTHS before our dear Lord Jesus was born, a wee baby boy came to a couple in the hill country of Judea named Zachariah and Elizabeth. God told the parents to call the baby John, so this became his name. John grew up to be a servant of God. When he left his father's house he went into the wilderness and stayed for a time. Here he lived on locusts and wild honey. He wore clothes made of camel hair.

After a while John left the wilderness and went towards the Jordan River. He taught the people many things and rebuked their sins. Some people thought John was the long-promised Messiah, but he told them he was not. He said he was the "voice of one crying in the wilderness."

When he came to the river he baptized many people and this is how he came to be called John the Baptist. His fame spread all around and many people came to hear him. One day as he stood by the river he saw Jesus coming to him desiring to be baptized. John did not want to baptize Jesus, for he thought he was not worthy the honor. He said to Jesus, "I should be baptized by you instead of my baptizing you." But Jesus desired him to do it, so he consented. When Jesus came out of the water, God's Holy Spirit came down from heaven in the shape of a dove and rested on him. God told John that Jesus was to be the Savior of the world.

As I have said John told the people that they must stop being wicked to please God. Now the king of Judea whose name was Herod, was a wicked man. He had even married his sister-in-law! John said to him one day, "It is against the law for you to marry your brother's wife." Herod was so angry at this that he put John in prison, but he was afraid to kill him because the people thought John was a prophet. The woman Herod had married, Herodius, by name, was also very wicked. She hated John and wanted him put out of the way. On Herod's birthday a great feast was made to all the chief men of Galilee. Herodias's daughter danced before the king and pleased him so much that he declared by an oath he would give her whatever she asked. The maid went to Herodias and asked what she should request. Her mother told her to ask for the head of John the Baptist! Wasn't that a terrible thing to ask for? But the maid did as she was told. Herod was greatly shocked, but because he had promised her whatever she asked, he ordered John to be beheaded! When they heard that John was dead his disciples took the body away and buried it.

MORAL

This story shows how a wicked person will scheme to accomplish his (or her) ends. It also shows the consequences of a rash act that the doer is ashamed to repent of. Herod killed John because he was ashamed or afraid to break his promise!

A TRUEISM

THERE ARE many things which a grown man may properly do, but which an immature youth may not and should not.

O, CHRISTIANITY: WHAT QUEER THINGS ARE DONE IN THY NAME!

RECENTLY I received by mail a pamphlet with the caption

"To Our Brotherhood No. 4"

in which one man who styles himself a Christian minister, tries to belittle another in the same calling. With no little impatience and a certain amount of disgust I read the pamphlet through. My only answer is, If this be Christianity, count me a heathen!

THE CHRISTIAN DUTY

RIGHTS AND privileges go hand in hand with responsibilities. This is especially so in the Christian life. Where there is a right and a duty to perform, it must be performed.

A man who does not sacrifice all to do his full duty—the best he may to his Creator and his Christ is unworthy the name of Christian. He does well, but not extraordinarily well, if he makes whatever sacrifice is necessary. But should he not make the sacrifice he shows himself to be an abject creature without the proper conception of his relationship to God.

What we need to hold before our eyes is not the incidental sacrifice, but the high honor and privilege of being permitted to render service. Every young man of the right temper will eagerly long for the chance to render such service, and will count himself thrice fortunate if he wins the great prize of securing the chance to render it, no matter what price he may pay in the scoffs and jeers of his own Christian companions.

The above is not original; it is part of a patriotic speech delivered by the late Theodore Roosevelt on June 8, 1917. We simply have removed country and placed instead the name of Christ. O that the people would be as patriotic to their God as they are to their flag! What a country of full blooded, stalwart, vigorous Christians we then would have! Will you do your part?

TOBACCO HARMFUL TO YOUNG MEN

FROM TIME to time I have referred here to the use of tobacco by boys. I have told the plain facts: that tobacco in any form decreases a boy's physical endurance and therefore renders him unfit to compete successfully in athletics; that is, definitely lowers mental efficiency and therefore insures the boy a poor class standing in school or in college, and that it tends to impair the moral fibre of youth, which is none too strong, as we all know.

A boy is a boy until he is old enough to vote.

Tobacco undoubtedly does grown men a good deal of harm, impairs their mental and physical efficiency, shortens life, predisposes to serious arterial, heart and kidney diseases, sometimes produces alarming optic nerve degeneration or partial blindness, apparently (no one can say positively) excites many cases of lip, tongue and throat cancer.

The trouble with youth today is that it is entirely too sophisticated. It wants to be old before it has attained its growth.—Wm. Brady, M. D.

JUST FRIENDS

I would be true, for there are those who trust me;
I would be pure, for there are those that care;
I would be strong for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave, for there is much to dare.

I would be friend of all the foe, the friendless;
I would be giving and forget the gift,
I would be humble, for I know my weakness;
I would look up, and laugh, and love, and lift.
Help thy brothers' boat across and lo!
Thine own has reached the shore.

DAILY THOUGHTS

Be kind one to another . . . for Christ's sake	Eph. 4:32
My expectation is from him	Psa. 62:5
To do good and to communicate forget not	Heb. 13:16
The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him	Ps. 147:11
My soul waiteth for the Lord	Psa. 130:6
The steps of a good man are ordered	Psa. 37:23
Be filled with the spirit	Eph. 5:18

THINGS THAT COUNT

Not what we have, but what we use,
Not what we see, but what we choose;
These are the things that mar or bless
The sum of human happiness.

The things near by, not things afar,
Not what we seem, but what we are;
These are the things that make or break,
That give the heart its joy or ache.

Not what seems fair, but what is true,
Not what we dream, but the good we do:
These are the things that shine like gems,
Like stars in fortune's diadems.

Not as we take, but as we give,
Not as we pray, but as we live—
These are the things that make for peace,
Both now and after time shall cease.—Sel. by Sister H. E. Russell.

A CHILD'S PRAYER

FORGIVE ME, Lord, for thy dear Son,
For all the ills this day I've done;
Help me to walk that I will be
A shining path that leads to thee.

WAS IT YOU?

SOMEBODY DID a golden deed;
Somebody proved a friend in need;
Somebody sang a beautiful song;
Somebody smiled the whole day long;
Somebody thought, "'Tis sweet to live";
Somebody said, "I'm glad to give";
Somebody fought a valiant fight;
  Was that somebody you?

Teach me to feel another's woe;
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy, I, to others show,
That mercy show to me.

To be a strong hand in the dark to another is the time of need, to be a cup of strength to a human soul in a crisis of weakness, is to know the glory of life.

Kind Words

Drop a pebble in the water,
  Just a splash and it is gone,
But there are a hundred ripples,
  Circling on, and on, and on;
Spreading, spreading from the centre,
  Flowing on out to the sea.
And there is no way of telling,
  Where the end is going to be.

Drop a pebble in the water,
  In a minute you forget,
But there are little waves aflowing,
  And there are ripples circling yet,
And those little ripples flowing
  To a great big wave have grown,
And you've disturbed a mighty river,
  Just by dropping in a stone.

Drop an unkind word, or careless,
  In a minute it is gone.
But there are a hundred ripples,
  Circling on, and on, and on;
They keep spreading, spreading, spreading,
  From the centre as they go,
And there is no way to stop them,
  Once you've started them to flow.

Drop an unkind word, or careless
  In a minute you forget,
But there are little waves aflowing
  And there are ripples circling yet,
And perhaps in some sad heart
  A mighty wave of tears you've stirred,
And disturbed a life that's happy,
  When you dropped that unkind word.

Drop a word of cheer and kindness,
  Just a flash and it is gone,
But there are a hundred ripples
  Circling on, and on, and on,
Bearing hope and joy and comfort
  On each splashing, dashing wave,
That you wouldn't believe the volume
  Of the one kind word you gave.

Drop a word of cheer and kindness,
  In a minute you forget,
But there's gladness still a-swelling,
  And there's joy a-circling yet;
;And you've rolled a wave of comfort
  Whose sweet music can be heard
Over miles and miles of water
  Just by dropping a kind word.—Selected by Sister Letta Morgan.

Prophetic Signs of the Times

Time Periods, Dates, "Times of the Gentiles," and the Final Consummation

SEVEN TIMES OF REV. 26:18

THE NEXT period for consideration in connection with our deductions is the antitypical "Jubilee cycle" outlined by dates and events given in Ezekiel's prophecy. This phase of the times is so important that it will be readily seen, after a thorough examination of any arrangement of the times that may be presented, if they do not fit in harmoniously with Ezekiel's times, they must necessarily be incorrect. It may be added here that the starting of the "1290" in A. D 637 does not harmonize with Ezekiel's dates. But the marked degree of harmony between Ezekiel's times and the other periods should lend considerable weight to proving the probable correctness of our present deduction of the prophetic times reaching to our day.

It had been assumed formerly that the reference to the "thirtieth year" in Ezek. I. 1, was to the "thirtieth year" of a jubilee cycle having its beginning with Josiah's great passover in B. C. 622. We now believe it can be proved that the passover was held in a jubilee year, but in order to show this we shall have to refer to two of the most difficult periods given in the Scriptures, namely, the periods reaching from the "Exodus to the Temple" and the "Temple Era;" also taking under consideration the number of years that constitute a jubilee cycle. Tables in connection with, and their explanation of, these periods will be found in articles yet to appear.

Oregon Bible College
Oregon, Illinois

It may be gleaned from these tables that from the invasion of Canaan, B.C. 1553 to 622, the year of the passover, was a period of 931 years, showing that the passover was held in the nineteenth jubilee year. Therefore, the statement of Ezek. 1:1, "the thirtieth year" may be taken to mean the 30th year (B.C. 593) of a jubilee cycle that began with the passover. While this cycle was not completed, since in its 36th year (587) David's throne was cast down to the ground, Jerusalem and the Temple destroyed, and the Babylonian captivity began, it evidently was highly typical, and was to have a future fulfilment; for in its 50th year, which was the 25th of Jehoiachin's captivity (Ezek. xl. 1), the vision of the future temple was given. So while Josiah's passover was one of the greatest efforts to re-establish a strict adherence to the "Law of Moses," we are beginning with it the "seven times" of Lev. xxvi. 18, as it was the last jubilee year of the unbroken cycles beginning with the invasion B. C. 1553.

By moving this typical jubilee, as deduced from Ezekiel's dates and starting it with the end of this long period of punishment, the "seven times.. forms a connecting link between the jubilee cycles inaugurated with Israel's commonwealth at the invasion. Accordingly 1897, when the first Zionist Congress was held, which was the real beginning of the Zionist movement, would end these "seven times" and begin the antitypical jubilee cycle.

ZIONIST MOVEMENT MARKS BEGINNING OF NEW JUBILEE CYCLE

Can it be a mere coniacidence that the departure of God's glory from Israel in the 31st year of the typical cycle, B. C. 592, should be just "seven times," counting forward to the 31st year of the ensuing jubilee in 1927, when, according to these deduction, Jesus of Nazareth, "The Glory of God" and the "King of the Jews," should return and deliver the Jews and Jerusalem out of the hand of their enemies, and those that hate them (Luke 1:68-75; John 18:37) ?

The 50th year of this jubilee cycle would be 1946, and from 1927 to 1946 would give a space of nineteen years for the erection of the "House of Prayer for All Peoples." The period would correspond with the time it took to build a former house under the decree of Cyrus, B. C. 535-516 (Ezra 1:1; 3:8, 11; 6:15). Cyrus, whose name means "Like the Heir," was a type of Christ with respect to the biulding of a house (Zech. 6:12; Isa. 60:13, and Ezek. 40:48).

THE TIME OF DEDICATION OF THE NEW HOUSE OF PRAYER

It will be seen by the chart of the "Times of the End" that there are eleven years from 1946 to 1957 terminating with "the end of the days" of all the prophetic times. These eleven years may be, and it would seem appropriately, the antitypical day for the dedication of the house, since it would give each tribe of Israel an opportunity to present its offerings on a set time of the year that might be chosen for the purpose. It is figured in this case that it would require eleven full years and a day or two additional for the dedication of the house by the twelve tribes of Israel. For a basis of such an arrangement, read Num. 7:10, 78, 84, concerning the dedication of the tabernacle, which took twelve days.

ANIMAL SACRIFICES TO BE RE-INSTITUTED

The re-institution of animal sacrifice is a feature of prophecy that meets some opposition because it is stated in Heb. 10:12, that Christ had offered one sacrifice for sins forever; but we should not lose sight of the truth expressed in the 11th verse where reference to the former animal sacrifice is made, stating that they "can never take away sins.". The statement is just as applicable to the future sacrifices, for neither will they be able to take away sins. They will figuratively point back to Christ, while the former pointed forward to the only effective sacrifice made "once for all' (10th verse).

After Armageddon, "It shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, The Lord of hosts and to keep the feast of tabernacles" (Zech. 14:2, 3, 16).

Jesus taught that he would again keep the passover, for he said to his disciples, "I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer: for I say unto you I will not eat any more thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God" (Luke 22: 15, 16). It is in the future age that God will "be pleased . . . with burnt offerings" (Psa. 51:18, 19). Again, Ezekiel saw, in the vision of the temple, "upon the tables the flesh of the offerings" (Ezek. 40:13). Again, it must be conceded that the faithful of all ages are to rewarded with eternal life at the resurrection; then as the Levitical priests, the sons of Zadok that kept the charge of God's sanctuary, being faithful, will have eternal life; yet they are to come nea: to God's altar of the future house and offer "the fat and the blood, saith the Lord God" (Ezek. 44:15, 16). So it will be seen that it is clearly predicted that animal sacrifices will be offered in the future age, that is, during the 1000 years. They will be incentives to meditation exercising faith of the subjects of the kingdom as well as being necessary, being a typical sacrifice, to cleanse the future House of Prayer for all People, which will be typical, material, and an inanimate house, whereas Christ's sacrifice directly affects a multitude of accepted living persons.

It is just "seven times" from the vision of the temple, which was given in the 50th year of the typical jubilee cycle B. C. 573 to A. D. 1946, which is the 50th year of the ensuing and antitypical cycle.

THE 2400 PERIOD

The last period for consideration is the 2400 day-years of Dan. 8:14. This verse reads 2300 in the accepted version, 2400 in some early manuscripts, while smaller numbers are given in some other texts. The 2400 is doubtless hte correct reading, as the ends of the lesser periods wound now be years in the past, while the event associated with the period is still in the future, namely, "The justification of the sanctuary": an event which will take place after Armageddon (Ezek. 39:12-16). Again, it will be seen that the vision was of a day, "evening-morning" (Dan. 8:26). There is no account of any nation dividing a day into twenty-three parts.

As yet there has appeared to us no good reason for abandoning Doctor Thomas' conclusion in considering the two visits of the angel Gabriel to Daniel, as recorded in the 8th and 9th chapters, that they are both associated with the ... which is just as Daniel ... whom he had ...

... same vision; ... seems to infer to "Gabriel," ... seen in the vision "at the beginning" (Dan. 9:21; 8:16, 17).

the "sufferings . . . of Christ" was not, though the event was clearly referred to (Dan. 8:11). This lack of information evidently caused concern which finally caused Daniel to confess "that ... understood the vision" (verse 27). The ... ites: "The prophets searched diligently . . . what ... did signify, when it

ONE VISION AND ONE PERIOD

Since 1866, when Doctor Thomas wrote, sufficient time has elapsed to allow that starting of these two periods together, the 2400 of Dan. 8:14, and the "seventy weeks" of Dan. 9:24. We do so believing them to be parts of but one vision and period, and therefore having but one common beginning, namely, B. C. 458, ht e7th year of Artaxerxes' reign; the seventy weeks, or 490 years, accordingly terminate with the crucifixion (Ezra 7:7; Dan. 9:24).

THE MANNER OF TIME SIGNIFIED

Further, it is worthy of note that on the occasion of Gabriel's first visit, though the time reaching to the justification of the sanctuary and the glory associated therewith was given, the time of testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow (1 Pet. 1:10, 11). We have here an instance where a prophet's inquiry was gratified, Gabriel being sent the second time, that Daniel might "understand the matter" (Dan. 9:23). Daniel on this occasion was informed that "seventy weeks were determined" (Heb.—"cut off" from the beginning of the 2400), "to make an end of sins and to make reconciliation for iniquity"; which was accomplished at the crucifixion. Again, as on the first visit, reference to the removal of the daily sacrifice and the down treading that was to follow, was made (Dan. 9:26), but the time of its duration was not repeated, it having been given on the occasion of Gabriel's first visit; so it will be seen that what was added to the vision by the second visit was the period, or "the manner of the time," that was "signified" to the sufferings of Christ.

It is quite true that there are just 2400 years from Xerxes' invasion of Greece to the taking of Jerusalem in 1917, but to so place that period of Daniel, which ignores the relation of Daniel's 8th and 9th chapters, seems inconsistent. It was also 2400 years from the flood to the Christian era; also, it is a coinicidence that there were 1335 lunar years of the Hegira era to 1917, when the Turks lost Jerusalem, yet Daniel is not standing in his lot according to Dan. 12:12, 13.

THE CLEANSING OF THE MOST HOLY

Now let us note the marked degree of harmony which exists between the 2400 period and the other times when started with the seventy weeks. It ends in the epoch for the cleansing of the Most Holy of the future house, which would be, as we have shown, in or about 1946, the 50th year of the antitypical jubilee and "seven times" from when Ezekiel saw in vision the offerings on the tables, as well as the glory that filled the house (Ezek. 40:43; 43:4, 5). Daniel was given the period to Christ's sufferings (seventy weeks) and the period (2400) that reaches to the approximate time for the manifestation of "the glory that should follow" at the dedication of the future temple (Psa. 24:7-10).

Daniel says: "Until two thousand and four hundred days (evenings-mornings), then the sanctuary shall be justified." Can it be a mere coincidence that these 2400 day-years end with the 2520th year from the temple vision? Ezekiel saw the offerings on the tables, and Daniel says, "Then the sanctuary shall be justified."

The Rich Man and Lazarus

HAVING READ many so-called expositions of what is termed the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, and finding none of them exactly satisfactory to myself, I have often thought of giving to the readers of our paper what appears to me to be a reasonable and scriptural view of this portion of the inspired word of God. To begin, we read, as per the Diaglott: 'Now there was a certain rich man, who was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day."

This verse being taken at its worth, teaches that this man was clothed with the best and most expensive clothing of ancient times, and had the best of fare so far as food was concerned, so he must have been a man who enjoyed the best of the present life. Next verse, "And a certain poor man, named Lazarus, was laid at his gate full of sores." We are not told that this rich man had anything to do with the laying of the poor man at his gate, but must infer from this that he did not "And longing to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table; but even the dogs came and licked his sores.' If he "was a stranger," he "was not taken in," as is required of the righteous; and if he "was not fed;" for he only desired the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table, but the dogs that were there were given the crumbs. All the comfort this poor man received at this gate was the soothing from the dogs' tongues. The dogs were more merciful than the rich glutton. Such a character as is here pictured most certainly is one who is to go into everlasting punishment, as per Matt. 25; or aonian kolasin, as the Greek expresses it, and is in nowise promised any good in the world to come; yet I have seen expositions of this Scripture that have tried to make it appear that nothing bad was accredited to this rich man.

"And it occurred that the poor man died, and was carried away by the angels to Abraham's bosom. And the rich man also died, and was buried." It is certainly reasonable to suppose that a man so sorely needing food would soon die; hence we need not make his death a figure of speech, as some do. That wicked literal men also die, rich as well as poor, is also a self-evident fact, and caused often by sumptuous fare. It may be that the rich man killed himself eating what should have been given the poor. But the poor man "was carried by angels," his death is generally assumed, while God does not so state. The rich man "was buried," we are told; but it is not usual for dead men to be buried the day of their death, and especially the rich; they must await burial several days in most instances that their relatives and friends may be permitted to gather unto a pompous funeral. If time could elapse between the time of the death and burial of the rich man it could between the death and carrying of the poor. But if time is to elapse between the time of the death and the carrying, God should mention the fact somewhere in his word just as to what he has done. Listen: "And he (God) will send his angels with a loud sounding trumpet, and they will gather his chosen from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matt. 24:31). This is to take place when the Son of man is seen coming in the clouds of heaven (Matt. 24:30), hence the gathering time is located and the angels are the managers, as per our parable.

Bible writers often speak of things that are far apart as if they came together. Thus Paul, "It is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the judgment" (Heb. 9:27). The judgment as all know is after death, but not immediately after. Jesus quoted Isaiah, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; and hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord" (Luke 4:18 19). Here he closed the book. Why? because, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears" (Luke 4:21). If he had continued to quote farther he could not have so said for the prophet goes right off into future events just as though there was not a whole dispensation of two thousand years between the events. Again Jesus says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (Jno. 3:5). When is one born of water? When he arises from the water in which he was baptized. When is one born of the Spirit? When he is raised from death with a spiritual body. But the word "and" in this passage is no larger than the same word in the parable. If it can span the Christian dispensation in this instance, it can in that; hence we need not make the parable teach something not mentioned in it.

But the rich man "lifted up his eyes in hades," and is not hades the place dead men go to immediately after death? Yes, there is a passage that tells us, "The dead" are in hades, and another that "There is no wisdom or knowledge" there, and a third that says, "Let the wicked be silent" there. (See Prov. 9:18; Eccl. 9:10; Psa. 31:17). But there is to be a resurrection of both just and unjust, and the wicked are reserved to that time to be punished (2 Pet. 2:9; Job 21:29, 30; 2 Pet. 3:7). If you were to walk into your cellar, and see lying at one side a small pile of extra nice potatoes, you might inquire of the lady "What are those doing here?" She would reply, "I am reserving them for Sunday dinner." If they were left in reservation till Sunday they would not be eaten before that time; and so with the wicked. If they are "reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished" they are not punished before that time, and hence man does not go into punishment immediately after he dies. "The wicked shall return to sheol" (Psa. 9:17). As people are not now punished in sheol hades we conclude it is in the return of the rich man that he lifts up his eyes in punishment there: and it is no more impossible for the wicked to be cast alive into sheol after judgment than it was to cast Korah and his crowd alive there while in the wilderness. And Jonah lived three days in the belly of hades, long enough to have done all that rich man is represented as doing and suffering. The wicked Jews will see Abraham and others in the kingdom of God, and themselves thrust out weeping and gnashing their teeth (Luke 13:28, 29). This is after judgment too, for the context shows judgmnet is being executed.

We agree that the rich man is a Jew, and the parable is given to teach the Jews, and as all expositors agree here we offer no proof. Tribulation, wrath, anguish and indignation are to be rendered, at the judgment unto them that do not obey the truth (Rom. 2:8, 9) just what is here given the rich man. God predicts through Moses a fire to be kindled in his anger, that shall burn to the lowest hades (Deut. 32:22). Thus we see flames are possible even in hades. The rich man begs for mercy, saying, "Father Abraham, pity me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue; for I am tortured in this flame." Will the wicked plead for mercy at, and after judgment? Yes. (Matt. 25:11; Matt. 7:21-23; Luke 19:21, 22). Nothing has ever happened in Jewish history to fulfill this part of the parable, and it is as reasonable to believe that a Jew would call on Abraham, as Christ. This fellow is requesting that Lazarus, the poor fellow who was laid at his gate, be sent to do the small favor of dipping the tip of his finger in water that his tongue might be cooled. The little asked would show that the rich man after he had spent the former life in sin was not like future probationists of today; for they contend that God owes mankind so great a debt that he must give all an opportunity for escape from the penalty, now threatened them, in the future life. Abraham said, "Child, recollect that thou in thy life time (the first life is here alluded to) didst receive thy good things, and Lazarus in like manner his evil things; but now, here he is comforted, and thou art tormented."

The new state has changed affairs; Lazarus is comforted. He no doubt mourned here, and shall be comforted there (Matt. 5:4). Notice the Bible does not state that this torment is to continue forever which it must do to prove endless suffering for the lost. "And besides all this, a great chasm is situated between us and you; so that those wishing to pass over hence to you are unable; nor can those pass over thence to us." This text is what to my weak vision spoils the generally accepted opinion of conditionalists: for we all know that Christians do now go to the assistance of their Jewish friends in many instances, and have been the means of converting many to their faith, or bringing them over to their side; but when the wicked are returned into hades and are dying the second death, hope vanishes; some might desire to assist them, but it is too late. It is with them as Jeremiah said, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and they are not saved" (chap. 8:30). They never can get across the chasm; but must perish for ever (Heb. "lanetsach," eternity, perpetuity) "like their own dung" (Job 20:7). The doom of the rich man is sealed, and he has reached the time "when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind. Then shall they call me early, but they shall not find me" (Prov. 1:28, 29). This proves that the "distress and anguish," mentioned by Paul, is not chastisement, to drive the wicked to salvation; but on the contrary brings them to destruction, and thus we see after death probation is out of the question.

The next entreaty is, "Send Lazarus to my father's house: for I have five brethren; that he may testify fully to them also come into this place of misery." Resurrected man will be unaware of the length of the sleep of death, but the rich man, or the wicked resurrected may not know but what their friends are still alive, and living on earth, and hence what is said here is no proof that the resurrection has not taken place. But Lazarus is not sent. Why? Because they were like their brother Jews unto whom the oracles of God were committed, and hence if they had failed to take heed to them nothing else would benefit them, and this proves after death probation would be a failure, if attempted. The rich man said, "No, father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead, they would reform." Abraham replied, "If they hear not Moses and the Prophets, neither will they be convinced, though one should rise from the dead." This shows that immortalsoulism is not taught in the parable; for to come back to earth one who has died must have a resurrection and for Lazarus to come back is for a resurrected person to come, and hence proves the scene to be post-resurrectional, and makes prima-facie evidence that this interpretation of the parable is correct. Abraham, while dead, "Is ignorant of us," as one of the prophets declares (Isa. 63:16); and hence resurrection is past in his case also. All the twisting and squirming of immortalsoulists can never make Abraham speak, while dead, of those of whom he is ignorant. Thus we see how completely the Bible refutes that theory. J. J. HECKMAN.

Editorial

If you would be pungent, be brief, for it is with words as with sunbeams—the more they are condensed the deeper they burn.

The fool is willing to pay for anything but wisdom. No man buys that of which he supposes himself to have an abundance already.

The church has sustained a great loss by the removal of Brother and Sister George A. Mowery to California. All are hoping their removal will only be temporary.

A diseased mind turns every chance accident to its own distempered view, and makes the terror, or the sorrow, which exists but in its own imagination, a very reality of evil.

It is the first rule of oratory that a man must appear such as he would persuade others to be; and that can only be accomplished by the force of his life.

Every man should study conciseness in speaking; it is a sign of ignorance not to know that long speeches, though they may please the speaker, are the torture of the hearers.

Death and Personal Identity

AN ARGUMENT against the truth of man's mortality in this community takes the following form: "If man dies, is unconsciouss, and is raised from the dead, how can he be the same man? There can be no tracing of any special identity in the atoms of charcoal, lime, iron, phosphorus, and the other ingredients that compose a body: the immortal soul establishes the identity of the future body with the present." A few words in reply is what we want.

Editorial Comment

PROBABLY THE truth in the case may be better understood by looking at the constitution of another body. We will take the house of Congress. That is a body of men; these men are the constituent atoms of that body. By death and resignation occasionally some atom (member of Congress) ceases to form a part of the body, and some other similar atom assumes his exact place, without in the least affecting the fact that the body continues the same body. In seven years, by deaths and resignations, this congressional body has undergone considerable change. Finally, it "dies." That is, there is "a dissolution" of Congress. Until the next general election the body is dead and gone to dust; for the atoms of the body are dispersed north, south, east, and west: they cease to be "members of Congress"; they revert to their normal condition as ordinary men, and if they ever form parts of Congress again they must again go through the process of being re-elected. When the house is re-elected, the body is re-constituted; it has risen from the dead; but it is still the same house, the same body. It is not made of the same atoms (or men), but it continues the functions and existence of the original body, and bears the responsibility of the past actions of that body.

We may legitimately carry this illustration still further: suppose that a revolution in the United States interrupts the existence of the body of Congress for a century. On assembling again we would have the same body, though entirely new in its composition, since the various atoms would reproduce the original body by taking up the work of that body just where it was left off by their predecessors. It would also be animated by the same "spirit," although of course that spirit would not have been existent meanwhile as "a disembodied house of Congress." Just so with our bodies: we remain the same individuals in all the changes our bodies go through, not because we have an "immortal soul" dwelling within us, but because we are animated by a portion of God's spirit. At death that spirit is taken from us and we are resolved into our original elements. Clearly then all that is required to reproduce the original man, with the original consciousness of good and evil deeds done in the past life, is to replace every atom just exactly in its former position, and then life being infused into the body the man stands again exactly where he stood before death. He is raised from the dead. If people would only perceive that what comes on us by the disobedience of Adam is death, then they could more easily be induced to accept the remaining half of Paul's declaration, namely, that "by man came also the resurrection of the dead" (1 Cor. 15:21).

Who may Immerse?

WHO MAY INDUCT CONVERTS INTO CHRIST?

SISTER McCLELLAND, of Boise, Idaho, has sent me a letter earnestly beseeching me to write upon this subject, and others have at various times asked the same question; for no one, when seeking the way that leads to eternal life wants to make any mistake. It is too serious a matter for a mistake, even ignorantly made, might mean the loss of everything that is sought. God is very particular.

Nadab and Abihu found this out to their cost when they put strange fire in their censers, and put incense thereon and offered it before the Lord. The thought, "what difference is there in fire?" Fire is fire wherever you find it. But God showed his people that he had made a difference, and that they must use only that which he had commanded them to use; that to use any other was to disobey him, and to face loss of life.

And it was the Levites, the teachers of the judgments and laws of the Lord to Israel, who were to put incense before him and whole burnt sacrifices upon his altars. Arguing from this, as the ancient laws are types of "the new and better covenant," must it not be men who believe and are teaching the laws and judgments of the Lord, who must lay the whole burnt sacrifice upon his altars? For when a minister says, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit," he presents the person so baptized to God to be a living sacrifice to him for all the remaining days of his life. How then can a baptism be valid when the officiating minister does not even believe that Jesus is the Son of God? It puzzles me to understand. For I know of no other doctrine, save the one for which there is no forgiveness here nor hereafter, that is more dishonoring to Jesus or blasphemous in God's sight; for to believe it is to "deny both the Father and the Son"—give their testimony the lie. We cannot feel nor write too strongly on this thing, nor contend too earnestly against it, nor show too plainly to the dear household of faith the danger of fellowshipping in any way, shape, or manner, these false teachers; for some whom we tenderly love have already ignorantly and innocently allowed them to baptize dear ones. My warning voice ought to have been lifted long ago. Pray take heed, brethren and sisters.

And another thing: if God in olden days accepted only the sacrifice brought to him by those who believed and were teaching his judgment and laws, are baptisms valid in these days when performed by one who does not believe the gospel? I used to think the faith of the officiating person did not at all affect the validity of the act, because his faith had nothing to do with the faith of the convert; but I think now we had better be careful; better go a thousand miles than to make a mistake.

With thought of the meekness and gentleness of Christ I have written this.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Christian Hope

BRETHREN: THIS is a question of which all men should have a knowledge and especially the body of Christ. Let us hope unto the end. On hope our future life depends. How fearful it is for one to die without hope! Then let us be very careful, my brethren, and ever look by faith with an eye single unto God to the end of our hope, because no man shall reign with our Lord who dies without hope. Do you ask why? I answer, they have no God.

Let us now turn to 2 Cor. 5:14. Listen to Paul for a moment: "For the love of Christ constraineth us because we thus judge that if one died for all then were all dead." Then do you think we can take the Lord by the hand with one hand and the world in the other and still have hope? I answer, No. See the record, 2 Cor. 4:18: "While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." Again, let Paul lead us a little further. We find in 2 Cor. 3:12-18 he says: "Seeing then that we have such hope we use great plainness of speech, and not as Moses who put a vail over his face that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished. But we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord."

We must have the spirit of Christ, otherwise we have no hope. We must be adopted see Rom. 8:9-15: "But ye are not in the flesh (or in other words ye are not of this world), but in the spirit, if so be that the spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." Why? Because he is in the flesh; he is fo the devil. Study 1 John. You ask, how do you know? Let us read the 15th verse of Rom. 8: "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father." Then we have hope and can receive of God's spirit by asking him in the name of our Lord.

Let us hear Paul again, 1 Cor. 15:19-22: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Why? Some preachers tell us we must get on our knees and seek God to get saved. Well, Paul, how is it? "For in Adam all die: even so in Christ shall all (all in Christ, not out) be made alive." Then, my brethren, where do the sinners and the ungodly appear? Read 1 Pet. 3:15, 16: "But sanctify the Lord God in your heart, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear, having a good conscience that while they speak evil of you as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ."

But some say, "We are saved now; we have something better than a hope." What saith the Scriptures? Gal. 5:5: "For we through the spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith." Again in 1 Pet. 1:3-13 the apostle speaks of the blessed God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, "which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again into a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Some one may say, "Why do you put us to such trouble as to be baptized into Christ?" That is the only way of getting into Christ. You are dead and have no hope. How do I know? Because we are told in Luke 20:38, "For he (God) is not a God of the dead but of the living." Who are they? Where now is my hope if I be dead and have no God? I answer, There is none for such a one.

"Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, comfort your hearts and stablish you in every good word and work" (2 Thess. 2:16). Jesus is coming. May we all serve God acceptably and wait and hope unto our journey's end, and receive a crown of righteousness that fadeth not away in the kingdom of God, is my desire through Christ.

Salvation Before Abraham

God had not made any promise of any life beyond this life, nor any plan of salvation until 991 years after Adam's death. All that died prior to this time (the time God made the covenant with Abraham) having no hope and without God in the world.

I READ the above words in an article entitled "Destiny of the Ignorant." Now while I believe that the Scriptures teach most positively that those who understand not are like the beasts that perish, and those who die without law, perish without law, I do believe that God made provision for redemption and a promise of a Redeemer as soon as there was a sinner who needed redemption.

Proof: Rev. 13:8. Here we find that the Lamb (the Son of God) was slain from the foundation of the world; and in Eph. 1:4 we find the saints were chosen in him before the foundation of the world.

What do these Scriptures mean? Turn to 1 Pet. 1:20. Here Peter tells us that Christ was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifested in these last times for you (the elect). Foreordain, to predetermine. What does it mean? Just what John tells us: "In the beginning was the word" (a purpose). God predetermined Christ as a Savior for all who sinned, who would receive the salvation offered; and all who did receive Christ and walk to the end in him were likewise foreordained to salvation, being in Christ. Adam being a sinner needed a Savior inasmuch as no mere man could save himself. What does the record say? Adam disobeyed God's law; therefore he was not of those who perish without law. We find Adam then trying to hide his nakedness with a covering of his own making, just as many in this day seek to cover themselves from the judgment of God with a robe of righteousness manufactured by themselves.

The fig leaf robe failed to shield Adam from the eye of the Deity. God being merciful, not willing that any should perish, clothed Adam with the skins of animals. And to comfort and give hope to Adam and Eve, God made a promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. Here do we not find a promised seed who would ultimately destroy the author of sin? And as God clothed Adam with the skins of animals, are we not justified in believing that those animals were slain and their blood poured out as an offering for Adam's transgression, and that God instructed them how to offer a sacrifice of blood before him. For later we find their two sons, Cain and Abel, bringing an offering to God. Abel brought an offering of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof, and God had respect unto the offering of Abel. Why? See Num. 18:17; Deut. 15:19. These were commands given to Israel as a law of sacrifice. We may be sure that God gave a like command to Adam, and Adam thus instructed his sons. How else could Abel offer just according to the command of God? Cain offered of the fruit of the ground, and God did not respect his offering. Why? Because an offering without shedding of blood does not remit sins (Heb. 8:22).

What is sin? Transgression of the law of God. Where there is no law there can be no transgression of law (Rom. 4:15). As God charges Cain with sin we know he must have had a law given to him which he transgressed by not bringing an offering of shed blood. Now to prove this. Turn to Heb. 11:4. Here we are positively told that Abel had faith and that Abel was a righteous person. Now what makes a moral man righteous? Faith and obedience to God (James 2:21-23). Again, we find a man named Enoch that pleased God. How did he please God? By faith (Heb. 11:5, 6). There can be no obedience or disobedience where no law is given. Hence we conclude that God gave a law to Adam, and a few here and there down the line to Abraham obeyed God's law, and were thus made righteous by faith in the atonement made by blood.

Theories and Facts in Exposition

A SINGLE fact is worth a ton of theory in the department of expository teaching. Sometimes a single fact will upset a very plausible theory. An example of this came to the attention of the writer while examining a Greek lexicon recently, and he purposes to pass it on to the reader and the expositor as useful an illustration of certain expositions of Scripture current among conditionalists.

The word which suggested the above remark is the word asbestos, which in the exact equivalent of the Greek word occuring in Matt. 3:12, Mark 9:43, 45, and Luke 3:17. In its modern English use it is exactly opposite in meaning to the Greek. The literal meaning of the Greek adjective is inextinguishable, unquenchable, while the word as now used applies to a substance which is not inflamable. Thus the word has completely changed its meaning from that which cannot be put out if ignited, to that which cannot be ignited at all.

Theologically, the term seems to have followed a similar course, and to have stood upon its own head, and like the small boy who performs that feat, its stability as a religious term is similarly precarious. And so, consequently, is the theory dependent on that term, which the reader will remember, is in regard to the destiny of the unregenerate.

As popularly interpreted, the passage in Mark, the 9th chapter, is supposed to refer to a person who has incurred the penalty of gehenna, which is translated "hell," and interpreted to mean a place of endless torture by many theologians. There are no warrants for that view, either here or elsewhere in the Scripture. In the first place, the conception of the verses themselves has reference to the body, and to nothing else. The contrast here held up is very clear. A man would be far better off if he were to enter into life, or into the kingdom of God, minus a hand, a foot, or an eye, than he would be if, with his member all entire, he were to be cast into Gehenna, where the fire being unquenchable, would burn not merely the offending hand, or foot, or eye, but the whole body. And then as though to complete the picture of destruction, the worms of Gehenna are referred to not the worms of the body or of the soul, but of the place of punishment. And these worms will complete the destruction of that which the fire cannot consume.

How completely has the popular view of this passage reversed the facts. The theologian would have us believe that the body is not cast into Gehenna. Then he would have us believe that the fire is unquenchable, and that the soul is unburnable, hence the asbestos soul exists eternally in an asbestos fire, in which sense the soul is asbestos in the modern, and the fire asbestos in the ancient sense of the word. To put it a little more clearly, we have an unburnable soul in an unquenchable fire. And it is as unscriptural as it is self-contradictory. PERCY E. OSBORNE in "World's Crisis."

Canon Gell on Intermediate State

THE PARABLE of Dives and Lazarus must of course be interpreted on the figurative principle of all parabolic instruction. A very little consideration of its terms must convince us that it cannot be interpreted literally. All who die pass into the unseen condition, and the words hades and sheol do not indicate a place, but a state of existence.

"Some see in the anxiety of Dives for his brethren the proof that suffering was doing its work in him and awakening the slumbering germ of good. With this view, were it the right one, would be connected his own ultimate restoration, and the whole doctrine of future suffering not being vindictive and eternal, but corrective and temporary—a doctrine which will always find favor with those who have no deep insight into the evil of sin, no earnest view of the task and responsibility of life, especially when, as too often, they are bribed to hold it by a personal interest, by lurking consciousness that they themselves are not earnestly striving to enter at the strait gate, that their own standing in Christ is insecure or none. But the rich man's request grows out of another root. There lies in it a secret justifying of himself and accusing of God. What a bitter reproach against God is here invoked! If only I had been sufficiently warned, if only God had given me sufficiently clear evidence of these things, of the need of repentance, of its place as the goal of a worldly life, I had never come hither, but though I am not sufficiently warned, at least let my brethren be so."

These words of Archbishop Trench are well worth the consideration of those who are caught by the glamor of the "larger hope." I would respectfully ask those public teachers who so confidently predict a second probation as necessary to meet the common case of those who leave the world unprepared, have they fairly considered the effect of their doctrine? Are they not really demanding what is, in fact, another gospel over and above that preached by apostles and evangelists? Have they a sufficient scriptural authority for such a demand? or for condoning neglect and rejection of the one gracious offer which is now made to us in the gospel? and I venture to ask are they not misleading the multitudes who will be only too glad to believe them? "If the blind lead the blind shall they not both fall into the ditch?" From "Notes on the Intermediate State."

TRUISMS

Work is the healthiest play I can find.

A man may smile yet not mean to be a friend, but a dog's tail is on the level.

The misuse of power is a common weakness; the use of power, common sense.

To acknowledge a flagrant fault is quite common, but to plead guilty to some ridiculous or foolish action takes courage.

GOLDEN TEXT: Luke 10:40-42

CHRIST OUR, STRENGTH

Let us rejoice in Christ the Lord,
Who claims us for his own;
The hope that's built upon his word,
Can never be o'erthrown.

Though many foes beset us round,
And feeble is our arm,
Our life is hid with Christ in God
Beyond the reach of harm.

Weak as we are, we will not faint,
Or, fainting, cannot fail;
Jesus, the strength of every saint,
Must in the end prevail.

As surely as he overcame,
And conquered death and sin,
So surely those that trust his name
Will all his triumph win.

DO YOU STUDY YOUR BIBLE?

The Ashute Family

I WONDER how many of you dear ones would answer "yes." I am very glad there are some, but wish there were many more.

Our dear Savior once went to visit Lazarus and his two sisters, Martha and Mary. They loved Jesus and were very glad to see him.

Martha hurried to and fro preparing a nice dinner and serving it while Mary sat at Jesus' feet listening to what he said and gazing lovingly at him.

Martha didn't like it because Mary was not helping her with the work, so she asked Jesus if it were right, and he replied, "Martha, thou art a good woman, but Mary has chosen the right."

To sit at Jesus' feet and hear his precious word that will teach us to love each other, be patient, humble, and true, and help others, is much better. Do you not all agree with me?

We are to be industrious, but not neglect our work and study for Jesus, as today only is ours. So loved ones, let us study our Bibles and be prepared for Jesus if he should come today and he will give us eternal life. You young lambs who are preparing to join the "body of Christ," study hard so that you may be baptized, for the only way you can join is by understanding and obeying from the heart that form of doctrine that Jesus taught.

Dear little ones, seek earnestly for Jesus and you will find him.

THE WISE KING

ONCE THERE lived a very wise king; his name was king Solomon. His wisdom was known over all the world. How do you think he got his wisdom? Well, I will tell you. God asked him if he would rather have wealth, honor, or wisdom, and he chose wisdom. This pleased God, and he granted king Solomon his desire and Solomon became very wise. When the queen of Sheba heard of Solomon and his wisdom, she went to talk to him to find out if he was as wise as she had heard. So she talked with him and asked questions. Soon she said, "King Solomon, you are wiser than I was told you were. Your servants are happy and you seem happy." Then she gave him gifts and returned to her own land. Do you suppose the queen of Sheba ever forgot king Solomon and his God? No, I don't think she ever did.

AT SEVENTEEN years of age, Ralph Elsman was a cadet engineer with the Westchester Lighting Co. at $17.50 a month, and his employers often thought he should pay them rather than they pay him. Today he is the vice-president of the Kings County Lighting Co. The third largest gas company in New York State.

Cyrus H. K. Curtis, millionaire head of the Curtis Publishing Co., was a newsboy in Portland, Maine. His first capital was three cents.

At 16 years of age Cyrus W. Field, the promoter of the Atlantic cable, left his home in Stockbridge, Mass., to seek his fortune in New York. He had exactly $8.00 and this not his own savings; his family scraped it together for him.

Thurlow Weed, like Lincoln, had an insatiable thirst for knowledge. He was so poor he had to walk miles in the snow with rags for shoes to borrow books to read. He became a great editor.

And in the United States there are thousands of others who day and night work hard and long to win world success. We are told to spend our lives in the vineyard of God, doing his will, reflecting his light, and if we do this, "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear we shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." They who worked for earthly success did so "to obtain a corruptible crown;" but we as children of God, living in faith in Christ shall obtain an incorruptible crown." Which is the more worth having? Which do you want?

Your friend is wise who knows when to speak his mind and when to mind his speech.

BIBLE STORIES

Today we have with us the Ashute Family of Syracuse, New York, Miss Marion, aged 12, Master William, aged 10, and Master Anthony, aged 7½, who ahve submitted Bible stories in competition for the prizes offered by Sister Walker, as per conditions published in this department May 25th, 1920.

THE STORY OF JUDAS

Marion Ashute

JUDAS ISCARIOT was one of the twelve apostles chosen by Jesus. He followed him from city to city and did all that Jesus bid him to. He had charge of the money, and the love of it caused his death. He knew the pharisees, high priests, and rulers as well as many of the people were seeking Jesus to kill him because he said he was the promised King. So he went secretly to the high priest and said, "What will you give me if I deliver him to you?" and they said, "thirty pieces of silver." So he brought them and the soldiers to the garden of Gethsemane, where Jesus and his apostles often went to pray, and betrayed who he was by a kiss. The soldiers took Jesus and hung him on a cross.

Afterwards Judas was sorry that he had betrayed Jesus, and he went to the pharisees and told them that Jesus was innocent, and they scorned him, and, filled with remorse he threw the money at their feet and rushed out and hung himself.

MORAL

Judas loved Jesus, but he loved money better, and it brought him death. We all should love Jesus more than money or anything else.

THE STORY OF JONAH

William Ashute

NINEVEH WAS a very wicked city, and Jonah was told by the Lord to go up and tell all the people that he was going to destroy them and their city because they were wicked; but Jonah was afraid of those people and did not want to obey God. So he went to Joppa and went on a ship to run away. God caused a great storm to come up and all the men on the ship began to pray to their gods for deliverance, and one of them finding Jonah asleep, woke him and told him to pray to his God as they were going to be lost. They all agreed that the storm was very bad, and one of them must have offended their God, so they cast lots to see which one it was. The lot fell on Jonah. So they asked him who he was and where from, and he told them he was a Hebrew who feared the Lord, the God of heaven who made the sea and dry land. Then he told them what God wanted him to do, and how he had fled, and they were afraid and said, "What shall we do to you that we perish not?" And Jonah said, "Cast me into the sea and it will be calm."

The men did not want to do it, but as the storm was so bad and land far away, they decided to do it. So they threw Jonah into the sea, and a big fish swallowed him and the sea became calm. Jonah knew he had done wrong, and he prayed to God "out of the belly of hell," and God listened to him and caused the fish to spit him out on dry land. Then he was once more told to go and tell the people of Nineveh that they were going to be destroyed in 40 days. He went and told them and they all put on sackcloth and sat in ashes and fasted and prayed to God to forgive them. He forgave them and Nineveh was saved.

MORAL

Jonah tried to flee from God but there was no place on land or sea where he could hide. The punishment for disobedience is death; but earnest repentance and prayers saved him as it will all of us who repent and obey.

THE STORY OF THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM

Anthony Ashute

THERE WAS once three wise men who studied the sky and the prophets. One day they saw a large beautiful star in the east and they packed their things and started out to find where it led to, as the prophets had said that he King of the Jews would be born when the star appeared, and they had many gifts for him and wanted to worship him. So they came to Bethlehem and found the baby Jesus in a manger, and rejoiced, and it was the wonderful star that led them to where Jesus was.

MORAL

The wise men were watching and waiting for the star perhaps for many years and were ready. "Be ye also ready." Watching and praying.

He looks abroad into the varied field
Of nature; and though poor, perhaps compared
With those whose mansions glitter in his sight,
Calls the delightful scenery all his own.
His are the mountains, and the valleys his,
And the resplendent rivers; his to enjoy
With a propriety that none can feel,
But who, with filial confidence inspired,
Can lift to heaven an unpresumptuous eye.

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, O., SEPTEMBER 7th, 1920. NUMBER 33

Even As We Are

If I were you
I know what I'd do
In all this world of living:
How calm I'd be in danger,
How kind to friend and stranger,
How gentle, how forgiving
If I were you!

If you were I
How hard you'd try
To be a little sweeter
How strong would be your holding
Life's tangled threads unfolding
The puzzles surer, fleeter
If you were I!

Yet each is each;
Why should we preach
If you can show me kindness?
If I for you can sever
Some thread of hate forever
If love can scatter blindness
Why should we preach?
Let each be each! Selected by Sister Letta Morgan.

Christ in Us

EVERY MAN should guide his course through life in the light of spiritual and moral value. In short, the supreme issue is that of our attitude to Christ. And that is something we must consider, and consider for ourselves. No one can take our place; no one can intercede for us. It is an individual matter between ourselves and the Savior. It must be regarded and acted on as the very greatest of all issues in this life. As the poet has said

Though Christ a thousand times
In Bethlehem be born,
If he's not born in thee
Thy soul is all forlorn.
The cross on Golgotha
Can never save thy soul.
The cross in thine own heart
Alone can make thee whole.

The Parables of Jesus Christ

A Discussion of the Parables in the 13th Chapter of Matthew

AFTER A careful and painstaking study of the parables for several years, we undertake to put in tract form our thoughts concerning them. It is our purpose to give what we understand to be a reasonable and logical exposition of each parable showing the relation they sustain to all of the same class. We have recently examined a pamphlet on the subject by an old writer of the Christadelphian faith in which he seems to forget or ignore the importance of Israel's gathering and judgment after the Lord's return and the Armageddon battle, which must take place in and around Jerusalem. The only judgment that he recognizes is the judgment of the saints to determine the position due each in the kingdom of God. The cause of this to our mind is wholly due to his views on what constitutes the resurrection. The doctrine of mortal emergence leads him into error. The truth is obscured through this error.

Before taking up the parables we wish to give a few preliminary thoughts on them as a whole. The parables were spoken to Israel, and many of them to declare the unsound doctrine of the scribes and pharisees of the time in which Jesus taught and performed miracles in proof of the justness of his claim to the Messiahship. If Jesus was correct in his claim, they had no status in the kingdom of God. Because of this they became his inveterate enemies and sought to put him to death. There is no evidence in the Bible that the parables were addressed to Gentiles. Jesus and the apostles preached the gospel first to the Jews. They were the first that must eventually become the last. They must accept or reject the Son of God before their judgment could be announced. In Matt. 23:

Oregon Bible College
Oregon, Ill.

38, 39 this judgment is announced: "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, ye shall not see me henceforth till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." When this judgment was rendered its severity all Bible students know. This nation still remains under this judgment and will not be relieved until they shall say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." The prophetic word plainly teaches another and future judgment under the phase of "Jacob's trouble." The present movement towards Palestine is to close Jehovah's judgment of his people whom Paul says, "are beloved for the Father's sake" (Rom. 11:28). The prophet Ezekiel gives a clear view of the future judgment of Judah and Israel in the 20th chapter of his prophetic word. Read verse 33 to 39. No Bible student can reasonably claim that this judgment is rendered immediately after the coming of Jesus. He will come with the reward due the faithful who have gone to sleep and those who are still living. These rewards are determined at the judgment seat of Christ (2 Cor. 5:10). None but the righteous have a standing in this judgment. Mortal emergence is an error of the latter days. It necessitates a mixed judgment of the righteous and the unrighteous. The judgment seat of Christ is for the righteous, as Paul did not address himself to the mixed people, but to "the church of God and to them that are sanctified in Jesus Christ and called to be saints."

We have elaborately given our thoughts thus far as to the true meaning contained in the parables spoken by Jesus. To conclude our remarks, we can truthfully say that the past judgment of Israel implies a future judgment to this same people to render them beloved subjects for the kingdom of God. There is no place in this judgment for a Gentile. First the judgment of the saints: then destruction of the Gentile armies around Jerusalem: third, the acceptance of Jesus as the Messiah by the saved of Israel out of "Jacob's trouble," and the gathering of the dispersed of Judah and Israel. The setting up of the kingdom and the law sent out from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. These are coordinate incidents in connection with the kingdom of God. The law sent out from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem is for the disciplining of the nations (Isa. 2:1-6). Get these incidents well fixed in your minds and then follow us in our exposition of the above subject.

Parabolic teaching is a method devised to conceal the truth or subject taught, requiring the learner to enquire of the scribe the true meaning. This method was followed by those who made the word of God of none effect through their traditions. When Jesus began his ministry he taught in the Jewish synagogues and preached the kingdom of God. This style of teaching is evidenced in the sermon on the mount. The three chapters (Matt. 5, 6, 7) in which this sermon is recorded, show the method used by Jesus in speaking to the multitude. When he was persecuted for his doctrine he resorted to the parabolic method and more severe attack on his enemies, the scribes and pharisees (Matt. 12:34-46).

To get a clear understanding of the parables we must be able to classify them and apply them to the subject and time. We herein give the grouping as given by Smith in his Bible dictionary. There is a group which have for their subject the laws of the divine kingdom. Under this head we have

1. The sower.
2. The wheat and the tares.
3. The mustard seed.
4. The leaven and the meal.
5. The treasure.
6. The goodly pearl.
7. The drag-net. The above parables are found in Matt. 13.

Before announcing another group we [illegible] to give our thoughts on the seven as a wh[illegible]nd the relation existing between this group and the two following groups. We wish to examine these parables separately and glean from them the divine truth hidden therein.

The subject of the first parable is the sower. This parable has for its scenery an open field. The sower is the Son of Man; the seed is the word of the kingdom; the field in which the seed was cast was the world. The sower reveals the fact that in this field are four different conditions of soil.

1. The wayside.
2. Stony places.
3. Among thorns.
4. Into good ground. Without any explanation he says, "who hath ears to hear, let him hear." These words no doubt astonished his disciples who demanded that he declare the parable to them. To them his gives his reason for resorting to this kind of teaching. Then follows his explanation

The four conditions of soil is now declared to be four classes of society that existed when the parable was spoken. These, to a certain extent, exist today. Jesus declares that he who receives seed by the wayside, is he that heareth the word of the kingdom (the gospel) and understand it not, then comes the adversary, the fowls and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. He is an indifferent listener. His mind is not formed to reason. His understanding is darkened by the follies of darkness. He that represents the stony soil receives the word with joy. He is influenced by his feelings and not his judgment, and abideth but for a season, having no root in himself. When tribulation and persecution ariseth, because of the word, by and by he is offended. He that receiveth seed among thorns is he that heareth the word, but the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches, chokes the word, and he becometh unfruitful. But he that receiveth seed into good ground, heareth the word and understandeth it, and beareth fruit and bringeth forth, some an hundredfold, some sixty, some thirty. This parable is applied to the gospel age, beginning with Jesus preaching the gospel, and will continue until Jesus will come as the heir to the promises made to the fathers. The understanding is darkened by religious error and traditions. That the word may abide the understanding must be enlightened by the gospel. You must add to your faith the seven Christian graces given by the apostle Peter (2 Pet. 1:5-11). He who is controlled by his emotion can not retain the gospel truths in his mind. He who abides must control his emotion. When man was created he was blessed with all the traits that would render him a perfect man. These were weakened by disobedience, therefore we are required to restore a normal mind. A careful study of this parable and the numerous admonitions of Jesus and the apostles will aid us in this work. To read constantly is of little help. Reading and meditation will enlighten.

The Goodness of God

The Lord God . . . will by no means clear the guilty (Exod. 34:7).

THESE WORDS were spoken to Moses, when he went up into the mount with the tables of stone in his hands like unto the first. "And the Lord descended in the cloud and stood with him there and proclaimed the name of the Lord. And the Lord passed by before him and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation."

I quote the context because I want the dear readers of The Restitution to see that our God was the same dear loving God in those olden days that he is now, just as merciful and gracious and long-suffering, and just as ready to forgive; but that to taste of his mercy and graciousness, the offending one, the law-breaker, the sinner, must come to him according to law; whatever he had bidden that sinner to do, must be done; he would "by no means clear the guilty," until the appointed offering was brought, whether bullock, lamb, kid, turtle-dove or young pigeon.

And who dare say his commandments were grievous; that he was a severe and cruel God? He was far from that. All his attributes and acts can be summed up in the one word, Love. He gives us laws, because he loves. He requires obedience to those laws because he loves. The wrong things that we do, not only bring unhappiness and suffering to us as individuals, but are inwrought as it were into the very brains and bodies of our children to weaken and destroy them. Oh I love the God that wants to keep me from doing such things as that. I love him for not wanting me to commit sins that would fill my body with disease, dull my brain and ruin my life.

I love God for making a way whereby I could be pardoned. For dear sinners, I too have sinned, sinned perhaps even more grievously than you, because of greater knowledge. No one but God knows how I grieved over my sinful words and acts, what floods of bitter tears I shed, how I tried to be set free from the chains that bound me, how I wanted to do something, as they did in the days of Moses, so that I, the guilty one, could be cleansed. But I could not bring even a turtle-dove. Bullock, lamb, nor kid would not atone for my sin. But thank God! there was an offering that I could make. I could do something. I could bring something. My high priest stood ready to accept my offering and to become "the author of eternal salvation" to me. He said, "Give me thine heart"; "thy body a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God." Obey me if you want eternal salvation. Be buried by baptism into my name, and rise to walk in newness of life, to live and to work for me.

I can feel for you, dear sinful ones, can speak to you from actual experience. God will not clear you unless you obey. You must come to him in his appointed way. You cannot escape if you neglect so great salvation, cannot escape the just recompense of reward for sins. Will you come? I plead with you from my very heart. It is not a vain thing to serve God, it is peace and rest and happiness and sure and eternal bliss in the ages to come.

Give yourselves to God.

Remarks

AFTER LEAVING Brother Courtney's where we enjoyed a few days of Brother and Sister Courtney's hospitality, we started on our way to Phoenix, our next point. Upon arriving at Atkinson we found no one to meet us, so we were compelled to go to the hotel—quite a disappointment when one is expecting some one of like precious faith to meet him. None but those who have gone through it can tell just how we feel when we get off the train and see none but strange faces. We then know there has been a slip somewhere, and proves to us that things have to be done right. I had forgotten the brethren there only get their mail three times a week, and this mistake made a lot of difference in results. But I trusted in the Lord and he brought it out right after all. The next morning I found someone from Phoenix who said he would take me to his place about half way, and another man picked me up and finished my journey. Upon arriving at the half-way place, the lady had dinner ready, and having learned that I was a minister, I supposed of course when we sat down at the table they would ask me to give thanks. They had a daughter about 14 years of age, and judge my surprise when we were all seated, she stood up at the corner of the table and gave thanks, and by all crossing thesmelves I knew they were Catholics. Then I began thinking: these people were in gross darkness, connected with the old mother of harlots, yet consistent beyond those who know the truth. How far would you have to travel before you could find one of our young sisters returning thanks and showing the devotion to the cause she had espoused. While we can teach them the truth, they can give us a lesson on devotion. Is it not true we should be as devoted and consistent as they, and much more. Paul says in every thing give thanks: do we do it? When I returned home one day my niece said: "Uncle Almus, will you write off a little prayer for little Mary to say at the table? She thinks we ought to give thanks. I thought of the Catholic girl, I said yes, I will. In the afternoon, she and my little grand-daughter and another little girl came over to my home. I wrote it and gave it to them. They thanked me, and as they went I saw them looking it over. Now if they carry that out, we will see in later years a devotion that nothing can ever destroy. Brethren, you perhaps wonder some times how you can get your boys and girls through these days, and preserve their characters. I believe the solution is to begin in early youth while their minds are tender and teach them against the evils of the day, and they will grow to abhor it. If they are taught the fear of the Lord and to be devoted and prayerful, it will be a safeguard from the evils of the world.

As I write I look away out on the hills and plains, and see here and there dark shadows, and all around bright sunshine. As those shadows move along, I think they are the grasses and flowers standing in the hot sun, that for the moment welcome the shadow that wards off the heat of the sun; and when they again come out in the sunshine are refreshed, and are all the better for the shadow. Just so in our lives: the clouds come and we must pass through the shadow and it looks dark to us; but after a while the clouds pass, the shadow has gone, and we once more move out in the clear sunlight. We feel all the better for our experience. The Lord that made the sunshine also made the clouds. It is when clouds become dark and ominous, foreboding a coming storm, that we seek shelter. So when we see the dark threatening clouds of these days and also in our individual lives we should seek the shelter of God's love.

Well, to resume, I arrived at Brother Storjohn's, and how they were surprised. I thought I had not been there for a couple of years, but they soon convinced me that it had been five. I could hardly believe time had gone so fast. Here we had an old time congregation; only about two evenings we were able to get all the people into the house. On Sunday a picnic had been arranged south of where we were holding our meeting, and a Lutheran minister was to speak in the morning, and they invited me to occupy the afternoon. The Lutheran took for his text, "I will make you fishers of men" and while he only talked 18 minutes he quoted his text much as half a dozen times, but he invariably said, "I will make you fishers of immortal souls." After he got through he proceeded to baptize a baby. I wonder how much longer our heavenly Father will allow this mockery to continue. The signs say not much longer. Our two weeks stay with Brother Storjohn seemed short, as they know how to make one feel at home. At the close of the meeting Brother Spindler's three youngest boys came forward for baptism, after which we started the Berean class, that had been neglected the year before. So now they are in active work again. After the night meeting Brother August Storjohn and Brother Willie Spindler drove me to the train, a distance of 25 miles; and the next day at eleven found me once more at home, but only for a few days. My next trip, which has been very profitable, I will, the Lord willing, tell you in my next report.

The following paper was read at the Berean Conference and it was requested that it be published in the church paper:

BEREAN TRAINING AND WHAT IT DOES FOR THE CHURCH

THIS IS not a question in its experimental stage. It has gone beyond this crucial period. It has proved its advantageous merits by its effective results. It is no longer a question to be considered as to whether a Berean Society is advisable. Neither is its work a duplication of the church's allotted field of conquest. It is the last link of the completion of a successful and progressive forward movement.

It does not contest any of the church's privileges and advantages; neither does it claim any of the praise deserved by the church as embodied in the many unreasonable objection of would-be opponents of this merited and worthy cause.

It has a field of its own, heretofore left undeveloped by the church. It does not work in opposition but in true accord and harmony. Its aims are the same, and working for the same goal only through different channels. It is the academy of more efficient church workers.

It is the church preparatory department, biblically speaking. We have had too few trained workers in the past, inefficient, and unable to instruct the young minds in paths of truth by their old course of dry sermons relative to everything except those necessary to the systematic and consecutive doctrinal growth. This was realized and seen by the foresightedness of first Berean organizers. The benefits derived from the Berean Society in the past are an inevitable conclusion of its tasks well accomplished. Every church that has a live Berean Society is a progressive factor in religious circles. It never is lacking for workers to perfom anything in the church's field of occupation.

They are prepared, whether it be speaking, taking charge of a meeting, or prayer. They are familiarized with the Bible, have overcome embarrasement, and can rightly divide the word of truth in clear and unmistakable terms.

It has been stated by some pastors that the Berean Society was their greatest source of help in the church work and a much needed encouragement during trying and discouraging times.

A Young Peoples' Bible Society is the only hope of the future church, meeting the urgent demand that is increasing hourly for a protection and a safeguard of the moral and religious life of our young people. They are being enticed and led in paths of evil by the social and educational paths they must follow. The only safe method the church can employ in keeping abreast of the many, many temptations facing our young is to bring them under Bible instructions. In so doing they not only perfect them and keep them from going the way of the world, but they prepare the leaders of the future.

In short, Berean training does what the church should do but cannot. Hence it has strengthened its weak points and as time goes on the church will be able to do more if Berean training is kept up.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL BEREAN CONFERENCE

THE SEVENTH Annual Conference of the National Berean Society of the Church of God, met at the North Salem Church, in Indiana, July 15, 16, 1920. The meeting was opened Thursday evening by song service, followed by a helpful sermon by Brother Siple.

At the business meeting the next day, encouraging reports were given by the Chairman of the different committees.

Forty literary articles were received during the past year: an increase of twelve over last year; 3351 tracts were sent out, an increase of one thousand over the previous year; 865 social correspondence letters have been written; and 253 letters have been written to the isolated. The corresponding secretary reports 336 letters written, and 1076 lesson books mailed out.

Reports of state societies showed that Nebraska has ten societies; Illinois, seven; Michigan, three; Indiana, four; Minnesota, five; Iowa, three.

The following officers were elected: Leila Whitehead, of Illinois, President; Frank Siple, Illinois, First Vice-President; Clyde Randall, Minnesota, Second Vice-President; Evelyn Harsch, Illinois, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. F. V. Blakely, Michigan, Recording Secretary; Mrs. Grace Marsh, Iowa, Treasurer.

It was voted that the National Society be called upon for money for tracts, but not to exceed twenty per cent of is income.

It was also voted that the states be asked for contributions for charity work.

The literary part of the program was as follows:

Berean Training
(a) What it does for the isolated. David VanVactor, Indiana.
(b) What it does for the class member Mrs. F. V. Blakely, Michigan.
(c) What it does for the church Clyde Randall, Minnesota.
(d) How the church should co-operate in this training Anna Drew, Illinois.

Payment of dues, Local, State, and National, and the use made of them Frank Siple, Illinois.

Three minutes talk were then given on Berean work by delegates from the different states.

An invitation to meet with the Illinois Conference next year was accepted.

We all felt that our meeting was a successful and profitable one, and all agreed that the Indiana people were royal entertainers. We hope to see our cause grow during the coming year, even more than it has in the past year, and let us all work for this end.

Since last issue we have lost Sister Weed, who fell asleep very suddenly. Our Sister was greatly beloved by all, and we shall miss her genial ways, kindly help, and faithful deportment. "How long, O Lord?"

———o———

Sister Ashute enquires: "How much should one understand and believe before baptism? I have in mind my oldest daughter Marion. I want to give her proper instruction." The gospel, according to Mark 16:15, 16. A fuller statement in Acts 8:12 is: "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." "Bible Lessons on First Principles" codifies these "things," and helps the memory to retain them.

Here and There

LITERALLY, WE have had no "certain dwelling place" for the last two weeks. We have already told of being in Canton and Salem, Ohio. After this we journeyed west and spent about two weeks more in the sweet fellowship of the saints at different places.

HARTFORD CITY, INDIANA

Here we had headquarters at Brother and Sister Cantwell Drabenstott's, but as occasion permitted we visited others of the faith. We had pleasant and profitable calls with Sister Alexander, Brethren Long and Hodson, and Miss Emma Ryall who, although she is not in the truth, has a good knowledge of the gospel and considerable zeal in its interests. At Brother and Sister Drabenstott's a week went swiftly by; but before we said good by they gave us an automobile ride to

PIERCETON, INDIANA

Although our friendship and love for Sister S. Roxana Wince have been most ardent for many years we had never had the pleasure of seeing her face to face. Eighty-three years old, she is singular for physical strength and mental vigor. Her writings today are as racy and vivacious as ever. She is a giant in the faith and is a comfort unto many. Two hours were too short for a visit with such a veteran of the faith and so distinguished a sister; but as our "hour had come" to go Auntie Wince kneeled down and in language simple as a child she addressed Him in prayer who sits upon the throne of grace, after which we went to

HUNTINGTON, INDIANA

With burning hearts we reluctantly took our leave of Sister Wince. The same evening we reached the home of Brother and Sister Ernest Drabenstott near Huntington, Indiana, where we pleasantly spent a few days. Many of the brethren and sisters in Cleveland know and love these two believers, as they have been visitors among us. Indeed, they were baptized here, and we love them as our own souls. We enjoyed their Abrahamic hospitality very much and then departed for

MONROEVILLE, OHIO

Brother B. F. Smith met us at the depot and conveyed us to his home by automobile. Here one always finds Abrahamic hospitality. Sister Smith, Alfred and Mary all help to give you that "home feeling" so essential to ease in another's home. Brother Newman Smith, a son, and his wife Marie, both in the truth, live near by. Only five in number yet they "hold fast" the narrow way of life in a most refreshing manner. Prematurely it seemed to us, we had to bid adieu to these people whom the Lord had blessed and we were off for

MANSFIELD, ILLINOIS

It had been several years since we were under the skies of Illinois. "And what were you doing at Mansfield?" perhaps the reader asks. Well, we went in response to the following letter from Brother Grubbs:

Mansfield, Ill., July 18, 1920.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

As I know of no other way to get help, I am coming to you to help me out. I have a daughter who wants to be baptized. I am the only living soul here of the one faith. But that does not make me weak. I search the Scriptures and read so many interesting pieces in your paper that I am growing stronger all the time.

Some say it would be all right for some preacher here to baptize my girl. But I do not think so. Now what do you think? I believe in one Lord, one faith, and one baptism. I am trusting in the Lord to spare our lives until we can get help.

Thanking you very kindly,
Your brother in the one faith,

A. J. GRUBBS.

This was an appeal to which we could not close our ears. By Brother Smith's kindly helpfulness we suddenly left for Mansfield, where we arrived without mishap. Brother Grubbs met us and we were soon enjoying the hospitality of his home. The daughter we found to be, in the temporary absence of Mrs. Grubbs, equal to the emergency of entertaining "company." Mrs. Grubbs returned home from a visit before we left, and although a Methodist, we soon became good friends. She is an amiable lady, but takes the easiest view of religion possible—"that it does not make much, if any difference, anyway." On no other subject of importance would she take such an indifferent view. Time works wonders, and we hope to hear sometime before it is too late that Mrs. Grubbs bestirs herself truthwise, and makes her calling and election sure.

We spent several days instructing Brother Grubb's daughter in the way of the Lord more perfectly. In compliance with her desire, on Tuesday night, August 24th, while a cloudless sky revealed the glory of the moon, Miss Elsie Grubbs was baptized in water, confessing her sins and the gospel of life in Christ. And now to believers everywhere we introduce our new sister waterborn, and pray that she may be among the spirit born in the day of glory.

Judgments of Righteousness

IN YOUR conflicts with a Larger Hope I see you have turned their guns upon them with deadly effect. You have used Exod 34:6, 7 against them in a very thrilling way; but may I ask you how God came to be justified in visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children? I admit the fact, understand, but enquire, Is it right?

IMPORTANCE OF PRESENT JUDGMENT

TO SEE the fact that God visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, without being able to see the righteousness of God in the racial judgment inflicted, must be a very uncomfortable state of mind. To extend to our distressed correspondent a helping hand, we begin by observing that the popular way of thinking of judgment as entirely future, lays the first stone of stumbling for the contemplative mind. "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ" (2 Cor. 5:10). "Phaneroo," the Greek word here translated "appear," means to make manifest, and is translated accordingly in 1 Cor. 4:5; 2 Cor. 2:14; Col. 3:4. Indeed, after Paul says in 2 Cor. 5:10, "we must all be manifested at the judgment seat of Christ," he says in the very next verse, "we ARE made manifest (phaneroo) unto God" (vs. 11). "Whatsoever doth make manifest (phaneroo) is light" (Eph. 5:13). By the light of the gospel God is making manifest the hearts of men today. One man hates the light and will not come to the light. He never learns the truth at all. Although ignorant, he manifests himself to be a beast (John 3:20; Ecc. 3:18). He needs no "chance" to show what he is; he has demonstrated that already. Another man doth truth, comes to the light, and obeys the gospel. In doing these things he manifests that his deeds are wrought in God (John 3:21). He is a manifested son of God. People who are always talking about the future judgment had better pause and talk awhile about the righteous judgment of God which is revealed from heaven at the present time (Rom. 1:18). Future judgment cannot invalidate present judgment.

RIGHTEOUSNESS OF PRESENT JUDGMENT

ONE FUNDAMENTAL error of Larger Hope is to assume the badness of Adam and the goodness of his descendants, and then to charge God with moral obliquity for not giving the race a fair deal. Paul dulls the edge of all this skeptical reasoning in Rom. 5, where he shows that Adam committed but "one offence," while his descendants have been guilty of "many offences" (vss. 16 17). The children of Adam are worse than their father, yet God in mercy hath "not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities" (Psa. 103:10). Take this morsel of mercy and go to Exod. 34:6, 7; Deut. 5: 9, 10 and see how the mind will be satisfied with the mercy and justice of God as they are manifested in present adjudications.

TWO DIFFERENT GENERATIONS

SO LONG as we feel that the fathers were exceeding sinful and incurred severe penalties, while their children inherited these penalties in innocence, resentment of such obvious injustice will wrangle in the heart. But the supposition that the children who suffer are in a better state morally from that of their parents is exactly the reverse of what God says. The words of the threatening purposely guard against such an idea, by describing the third and fourth generation, on whom the penalty of evil was to fall, as those who "hate God"; just as, on the other hand, the mercy which was pledged to thousands was promised as the dowery of those that "love him." Only such children are intended as imitate the impiety of their progenitors. Their fathers hated God. Now just as the imitation of the good secures the blotting out of their sins, so the imitation of the bad renders them obnoxious to deserved punishment. In other words, the Lord contemplates the existence among men of two entirely different kinds of generations: the one, haters of God, and manifesting their hatred by sin; the other, lovers of God, and manifesting their love in dutiful obedience. To these last, though they should extend to thousands of generations, he will show mercy, and cause it to flow on from age to age in a perpetual stream of blessing. This does not mean, as some interpret his beneficence, that he will "clear the guilty." Our gracious God has no delight in anticipating the day of evil, however sinful men may be. He shrinks, textually, from contemplating the possibility of thousands being in this condition, and only suffers himself to mention more than a third or fourth generation rendering themselves objects of his displeasure. Still the wholesome truth must be declared and the just warning uttered. He punished the "fathers" by taking vengeance on their inventions. If, after seeing this, the children hate him as their fathers hated him, their iniquity would be more aggravated; justly and in love their punishment should become more severe; the entailed and accumulated curse would deepen as it flowed on, increasing with every increase of depravity, till, the iniquities of the fathers being "filled up," the wrath of God should fall on them to the uttermost. Man's sinfulness is thus manifested and God's lovingkindness declared in his destruction.

DEAR BRETHREN:

I AM interested in the letter written by Brother S. H. Thomas, of Proctor, Mont., in the July 29th number of The Restitution, and I am wondering how many have written and promised him their support in publishing the book he mentions.

We who read the paper know his writings are very good, and some of us are fortunate in being personally acquainted with him, and know his greatest desire is to have people come to the knowledge of the truth. I feel sure this book will be interesting to us, and one that we will be grateful for the opportunity to give them to our friends.

Now if any have laid their paper aside without writing Brother Thomas, let me ask you to find it, and read his letter again, and write him at once.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

IF YOU will allow me I will try and answer two questions in The Restitution of August 3rd. The writer states he asked me a couple of "pertinent questions," and then misquoted the one question he wanted answered, and ignored my answer to the other question.

If he will reread my article of May 4th, he will see a large array of Scripture that to my mind is positive proof that no one can obtain eternal life through ignorance. But I will add further proof from Paul. He speaks of those that would not receive the love of the truth, that they might be saved, and "for this cause" God shall send them strong delusions that they should believe a lie. Why? "That they all might be damned who believe not the truth" (2 Thess. 2:10-12).

Reader, did not Noah preach for one hundred years to the people in his day and only eight were saved? Did not God promise Abraham to save Sodom and Gomorrah if he found ten righteous? And did not Christ warn the people that those the tower of Soloma fell on and slew were not sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? "I tell you nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13:45). "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Why? Because this life or chance is the only one promised, and there is no life out of Christ. If perish does not mean perish, why deny that death does not mean death, and all believe in the "immortality of the soul?"

Yours for truth and righteousness.

TO THE CHURCH OF GOD, GREETING:

SOME WEEKS ago I expressed in our paper a wish to publish a little booklet upon gospel subjects, especially designed and calculated to interest the young and the alien, and attract them to a more complete study of the purpose of God as revealed in the word, and asked the brethren who are able to assist by purchasing a few copies each for distribution among friends, and relatives. Who can tell, but by so doing you may become the happy instrument in God's hands of leading some dear one into Christ? There has been some response, but as yet hardly sufficient to justify me in going on with the undertaking, and I await further expression of your wishes in the matter. As previously announced, the booklet will be entitled "Good Company," and I shall spare no effort to make it all that its name implies. It is my purpose to tell the old, old story in language and by methods that can hardly fail to attract and hold the interest of the reader. Please do not send money at this time, as something may yet occur to arrest the work. If you desire to assist, just drop me a card stating how many copies you can use, at 25 cents per copy, and notice will appear in The Restitution when the book is ready.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

On Monday, August 2nd, we left home for Guthrie Grove, S. C., and arrived Tuesday evening in time for service. The meeting began August 1st, with a program carried out by the children. The meeting continued till August 9th. We met each forenoon at 10 o'clock for a social meeting led by Brother B. Z. Chandler, preaching at 11, and in the evening song service at 8 led by Prof. Paran Guthrie, and preaching at 8:30. The writer was assisted by Brother A. N. Durham, pastor of the church, M. O. Williamston and Harper Stone. Sunday August 8th Brother A. N. Durham baptized his daughter Edith, Brother B. Z. Chandler's daughter, Ruth, and Sister J. L. Browning, wife of Brother J. L. Browning.

On August 9th Brothers James Pack, B. Z. Chandler, P. A. Guthrie, Caleb Shipman and the writer motored some thirty-five miles to Travelers Rest where we began a meeting that night and continued till August 15th. It rained all the time we were at this place, but we were able to hold every service. The interest and attendance were very good. On Sunday August 15th we baptized into Christ Geo. M. Ranes, Susie Ranes, Ola Radford, Hazel and Ethel Elrod, Mr. and Mrs. Baxter Stamey, Mr. and Mrs. Layton Bridwell, Mrs. James Terry, W. H. Stamey, Eva Stamey, Tom Stamey, and Oria Stamey. After the baptisms we reorganized the church and elected Brother A. N. Durham pastor and M. O. Williamston assistant pastor. A building committee was elected to see about building a house. The people are poor, and here is a good place to help. Now brethren, no need of sending money to India; send some to help put up this house. I know of no better place for work than this. Money may be sent to Elder A. N. Durham, Williamston, S. C.

May God help the work here. Will say to those who have helped me reach this place and N. C. that we want to continue the work here if we can get expenses.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

I ENCLOSE manuscript taking issue with Brother W. L. Crowe in The Restitution of July 13th on the Jew and Arab problems. His writing has not the teaching of the Bible. Will you favor me by publishing this in the next issue of The Restitution.

The first question, who is Israel? Israel that is spoken of in the word of God shall inhabit the whole earth. Israel is not pertaining to the so-called Jews. As the writer spoke about the Mohammedans, Roman Catholics, and Protestants being false and corrupt. Who are pure? Only the church (Matt. 5:5; 1 Pet. 1:22). The Lord has promised the land to his people, not speaking of any particular race (Acts 10:34, 35). The only segregation the Lord requires is righteousness. Hence it is not from a national or racial standpoint. Read 2 Cor. 6:14, 18.

Who are the sons of Adam (Gen. 11:1-9)? All the human family are sons of Adam. Since the Turks are the descendants of Esau, why are they dark, and who are the Edomites? We ask the writer to give us biblical proof from the word of God.

Secondly, the people whom you call negroes, will not have to migrate to their own home for the simple reason they are a God-fearing people. God has promised the whole earth to those that serve him (Matt. 5:5). Dear brother, as long as there is segregation of races that speaks in itself there is no change of heart; and while there is no change of heart love to God cannot dwell among us, for we whose hearts have been changed know by the word we are all one in Christ Jesus. (1 Cor. 5:16, 17). Dear brother, Christianity is not hatred or segregation. As Brother Paul said, there is neither Jew, Greek, nor Pagan; we are all one in Christ. Christ does not know us by color. We are his when we are saved by grace. God is no respecter of persons.

Thanking you in advance for your favor.

Yours in Christ,

A. LEWIS.

DEAR RESTITUTION:

I AM an isolated member of the Church of God, and your weekly visits are indeed a joy to me. As I have not the opportunity of hearing the true gospel preached I go with my family to a Methodist Sunday school and church.

Should one of the "house of faith" hold themselves from the churches that teach not the true gospel and deny the faith of Abraham? Have I not a chance to tell the "glad tidings" to some who perhaps would never hear it if I did not tell it to them? I believe it is the best I can do.* I have been teacher of the Bible Class for three years, and last spring they elected me Superintendent of this Sunday School, but I refused to accept it, because of our difference in belief. As teacher of a class I write out a list of questions and topics for discussion, proving all things by the Scripture. The plan of salvation is so plain and simple and so new to them that they often seemed amazed at the truth, but dislike to give up the "kingdom in the heart" and the "reward at death."

A short time ago our lesson was from 1 Sam. 15, and some one asked the question, "Had Saul a second chance?" It is my opinion Saul had not a second chance, while members of my class claimed he did. Will some one please give me some light on this question.

*Sister Hunt is in isolation, and the Editor knows from experience that the loneliness of isolation demands social recreation. To go occasionally to a sectarian church as an outsider helps to confirm one in the faith; as the truth is more clearly seen by contrast. But to go as a habit to churches "that teach not the true gospel and which deny the faith of Abraham," as Sister Hunt puts it, is another question. The chance to tell the glad tidings of the kingdom to others, as a reason for going, is discounted by the fact that you never hear of any good being actually accomplished. You may teach the truth with such plainness and force as to "amaze" the Methodist, as long as you stop at amazement; for the fact that you go to the Methodist church reduces what truth you can set before them to "opinions" of no moment. The Methodist church is the bushel under which you are trying to shine. "Come out from among them and be separate" is the voice of the loving Father to his children. Editor.

Why does not The Restitution issue Sunday School Quarterlies? If they were published they would be a great help to those situated as I am.

Pray for me that I may teach aright the story of our Redeemer.

Your sister awaiting the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ,

CLARA M. HUNT.

GOLDEN TEXT: Isaiah 1. 10

THE LIFE THAT COUNTS

The life that counts must toil and fight:
Must hate the wrong and love the right;
Must stand for truth by day by night
This is the life that counts.

The life that counts must hopeful be;
In darkened night make melody;
Must wait the dawn on bended knee -
This is the life that counts.

The life that counts must helpful be;
The needs and cares of others see;
Must seek the slaves of sin to free -
This is the life that counts.

The life that counts is linked with God;
And turns not from the cross - the rod;
But walks with joy where Jesus trod
This is the life that counts.—Sel. by Lawrence Gibbs.

UNIONISM

Written in Name of Young People's Society
Cleveland, Ohio., by Bert Meermans.

FOR THE past several years we have heard a great deal regarding unionism or the combination of power, business and clubs, to put across things which in the popular belief were big and would be profitable to every one.

This thought has been in my mind also, but in a very different way, so I will express it to all the young people of the the various churches of God throughout the country.

Unionism, as explained by Webster is, "The principles, or system of combination among those engaged in the same occupation." Here we find a very good definition, as it can be used for our thoughts as well as for many others.

We are all no doubt working along the same line as far as the truth is concerned, but we are doing it in our own way, and the result will no doubt be the same, but it has very often occurred to me that we could make much better headway and profit a great deal more if we used some of this unionism used by our friends out in the world.

Our Societies, wherever they are located, no doubt all have corresponding secretaries and through this medium I think we could get a great many good ideas as to the workings, doings, and results of our brother societies in different parts of the country. In this way brothers and sisters, we could help each other; and we all know unionism brings about greater feelings of harmony and good feeling than anything else.

The truth in our great country still has many places and souls it can reach, so let us put forth our best efforts to get it there while yet there is time. The signs and the times, dear brothers and sisters, behoove us to put forth extra energies along this line, so let us start at once by getting in touch with each other and then concentrating our forces for the glorious gospel.

ANOTHER LAMP LIGHTED

THE BRETHREN in Elizabeth, New Jersey, have opened another meeting at 127 Jefferson Avenue, between East Grand St. and East Jersey St. The Sunday morning meeting is at 10:30. If any reader of this article is interested and desires futher information, the writer will be pleased to furnish it.

WILLIAM K. VANDERBILT

RECENTLY THERE died in Paris, France, an American known the world over for his business sagacity, deeds of charity, success in sports, and social influence. His wealth was estimated at one hundred million dollars. At the time of his death William K. Vanderbilt was seventy years of age and although his cup had been filled and running over with worldly success, he was quoted a few days ago as saying:

"My life was never destined to be quite happy. It was laid along lines which I could not forsee almost from earliest childhood. It has left me with nothing to hope for, nothing definite to seek or strive for. Inherited wealth is a big handicap to happiness. It is certain death to ambition as cocaine is to morality."

Strange as this may sound to some, it is the universal experience of all those who wholly spend their lives in worldly things. There is but one satisfactory way of spending our time and energy, and that is in worship of our God and his Christ. All things else but lead to disappointment and misery. Therefore, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

READ AND REFLECT

APPRECIATE YOUR own value, but do not under estimate the worth of others. We all are needed, but no man, nor group of men are wanted so much that the world cannot get along without them.

We grow toadstools and want them to be trees. As a people we are ambitiously insane. We do not want to take time, patience, and then more time. Often we fail to register the fact that a variety of virtues do not excell the one great Christian asset —faith. Remember that "without faith it is impossible to please God." Do you ask, "What does this mean?" It means that of ourselves we are nothing, that Jesus is all in all, that we must entirely forget self and self righteousness and accept God through the merits and sacrifice of Jesus who is the Christ the Son of God. Have we this faith?

DAILY STRENGTH

WE SEE with our vision imperfect
  Such causes of dread or fear,
Some that are far in the distance
  And some that may never be near;

California Conference Report

THE FOURTH Annual Conference of the Church of God and Believers in Christ's Second Coming which was held at Pomona, Calif., became history when it came to its close with a big service Sunday, July 25th, 1920.

The Bible studies and sermons given by Jas. A. Patrick of Minn., and J. W. Williams of Ill., were big points in each day's meetings, besides the talks and study classed by O. J. Allard, of Ia., and J. E. Adamson and William Adamson both of Pomona, which filled in every program of the Conference with real live food for thought. A question box was held every afternoon which brought out many good points giving every one a chance to express his views on both sides of the questions brought up. Many comments were made on the good spirit shown by every one which permitted discussion which must always be carried on in a spirit of charity for others' views. Following requests from the members attending the Conference, three days of the week were given over to a study of prophecy, taking up history from the earliest Old Testament prophecy to present day signs of the times.

One feature of the week was the special music which was given on nearly every program, including solos, duets, quartettes, and choruses. Mr. and Mrs. Greenleaf Allard of Fort Dodge, Iowa, and Miss Ethel Stoffa, of Pomona, had charge of the music.

The programs were well attended in spite of the worm weather which prevailed during the week, there being an average attendance of about fifty, the evening meetings and the two Sunday meetings counting from one hundred to one hundred and fifty.

At the business meeting held the last of the week the next year's Conference was called to be held at Long Beach, Calif., about the middle of August.

This letter was misdirected and returned, so it is rather late for the report, but will send it anyway A. G. Adamson.

Our Life

OUR LIFE as a dream,
Our time as a stream,
Glides swiftly away;
And the fugitive moment
Refuses to stay.

Oh that each in the day
Of his coming may say
I have fought my way through;
I have finished the work
Thou gav'st me to do. Selected by Mr. and Mrs. A. Ashute.

—o—

Our life is hid with Christ in God.

A Contrast

GOD'S WORD	MAN'S WORD
And a voice came from heaven saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased (Matt.3:17; 17:5; Mark 1:11; 2 Pet. 1:17).	Not so, at that time he was the son of Joseph
And a voice came out of the clouds saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him (Mark 9:7; Luke 9:35).	At this time too he was the son of Joseph.

Which will you believe? As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord (Josh. 24:15).

Is Man an Immortal Being?

A Discussion of Man, Soul, Spirit, Death, Hell, and the Resurrection

SHEOL OF THE OLD TESTAMENT

IN THE Old Testament the only word rendered "hell" is "sheol." It is found sixty-five times in the texts and twice in the margin, making sixty-seven in all. It is rendered "hell" thirty-one times, and pit three times. In the Revised Bible the word "sheol" is left untranslated for sufficient reasons which will be found in the "Preface." The following are the usual theological definitions of "sheol": "The infernal regions of the dead;" The final and eternal receptacle of all the ungodly and impenitent;" "The eternal invisible state of the wicked." The latest authoritative definition will be found in the Preface above mentioned: "Sheol signifies the abode of departed spirits." Let us test these definitions by Scripture.

The first mention made by Moses of sheol will be found in Gen. 37:35, where Jacob mourns for the supposed loss of his son Joseph "And he said For I will go down into the grave (sheol) unto my son mourning." It would read strangely, were we to put "the infernal regions of the dead" in the place of the grave. The second mention is in Gen. 42:38. "And Jacob said, Benjamin shall not go down with you: for his brother is dead and he is left alone. If mischief befall him by the way in which ye go, then shall ye bring down my grey hairs with sorrow to the grave" (sheol). Did Moses understand by this that "grey hairs" went into "the abode of departed spirits" or that Jacob feared lest his "grey hairs" accompanied him to "the final eternal receptacle of all the ungodly and impenitent?" It is so easy with a Concordance to go through all the sixty-seven examples, but we will take one more, to show the utter absurdity of these theological definitions, Job 14:13, "O, that thou wouldst hide me in the grave" (sheol). Did Job wish to go "into the eternal invisible state of the wicked."

When the theory of the "immortality of the soul" is not involved, then our commentators write lucidly and sensibly. Take for instance Hosea 13:14, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave (sheol): I will redeem them from death." Dr. Adam Clark rightly remarks here, "Sheol, translated the grave, is the state of the dead." His whole comment here is well worth remembering especially by our preachers when making up their sermons.

Let us look again into that last definition given above by the eminent translators of the Revised Bible. They give the definition of sheol as "The abode of departed spirits and corresponds to the Greek 'hades' or the underworld." How did they arrive at this definition? Where did they get it from? From Moses or the prophets? Not a bit of it. We challenge one single text in proof. When points necessitating ripe knowledge or critical exegesis are involved, we gratefully accept and bow to our gifted and learned men, but in this matter of finding out the Bible meaning of sheol, they and we have the same material to work upon, the same obscure or lucid texts to examine. There is not the smallest scrap of evidence for their unwarrantable definition. Learned as they are in the classics, before ever they attempt the Hebrew or Greek of the Bible they are soaked and saturated with Platonic philosophy and the belief that man does not die at all, but "what seems death is only transition." Their embarrasment in dealing with this matter is very apparent.

We have already seen from the Scriptures that "neshamah" and "ruach" (translated breath or spirit of life, and breath) returns to God at death.' It goes back to God as the original receptacle. There is no disputing this fact. If our theologians then are prepared to accept that God is in sheol, then only may we concede that sheol is the abode of departed spirits, or the infernal regions of the dead! It is not very difficult to follow out the line of reasoning that lands them in this dilemma. With them "nephesh" and "ruach" are identical. That is, soul and spirit are made synonymous and interchangeable. Even the popular error (of course taught by them orginally) that "death is the separation of the soul from the body" proves unmistakably how they have confused terms. On the contrary, it has been clearly shown that souls at death go into sheol. Christ's soul went there—but as soul with them is identical with spirit, sheol becomes the receptacle of spirits! With a little jugglery of the Greek authors, sheol is further defined as the infernal regions of the dead and made alive with ghosts, shades, spooks, spirits, and other hallucinations of classic lunacy. That "sheol of the Old Testament corresponds to the Greek hades of the New Testament," is quite correct. This is proved from the quotations of the Old Testament made by the translators of the Septuagint. That is the 'underworld of ghosts, is a different story. The sensible way to get at the truth would be first, to get the meaning of the old Hebrew sheol and whatever they may mean in the Old Testament, to give to the later Greek hades of the New Testament the equivalent definition. For it is unseemly to hold that the Holy Spirit could have meant one thing of sheol and a totally different thing of hades. Now sheol in the Old Testament never means anything else than what we have already found it to be, which Adam Clark defines as "the state of the dead;" whether in the tomb or grave, whether burnt to a handful of ashes, or smothered or cast into the deep. "The state of the dead" is what sheol means in the Old Testament. Hades therefore must mean precisely this and nothing more or less. Sheol does not in the Old Testament convey the idea of an "underworld" of conscious beings of any kind neither should hades in the New Testament.

HADES OF THE NEW TESTAMENT

The Greek and Latin classics in song and poetry peopled hades with shades and spooks. Here is where Dante got his inspiration. Dante is the renowned Christian poet! whose writings alas, largely color the theology of the day. He is supposed to have had for guide and friend, who do you think? The shade of Virgil! that prince of spooks in manufacturing the infamous Cantos of his "Inferno." The climax of this untruthful production is reached when naming it "The Divine Comedy." We prefer Paul's guide. All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, funished completely unto every good work."

It was stated, that the translators of the Septuagint uniformly rendered the word "sheol" into "hades" in their Greek edition of the Hebrew Scriptures. A notable instance is Psa. 16:10, in reference to David's prophecy of the Christ: "For thou wilt not leave my soul (myself or me) in hades (sheol) neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." Peter thus comments on it in his address, Acts 2:25-34: "David seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell (hades), neither his flesh did see corruption." Notice the word "hell" which is used in the authorized version, for hades - this misleads the ordinary reader and turns his thoughts away to the "infernal regions." But hades is the Greek for sheol, and sheol, as we have seen, is hell, "the state of the dead." The meaning of the text then is, Christ's soul (i. e. himself) entered into the state of death but was not left there to go to corruption. Why? Because he was raised from the dead! This settles the point that Christ's soul did die, in spite of the teachings of a corrupted theology.

"HE DESCENDED INTO HELL."

The same truth is enunciated in the "Apostle's Creed," in the words, "He descended into hell and the third day he arose again from the dead." But why is it, that 99 per cent repeaters of this creed have a vague idea that, Christ's body was put into a tomb right enough but his "soul" went down into some "infernal region of the dead?" 1st because of the mistaken notion born of Plato, of the expression "his soul;" and 2nd, because of the chaotic confusion in our minds as to the word "hell." There is another reason which is not generally known. This creed originally did not contain this sentence, "He descended into hell." It originally read, "Was crucified, dead, and buried, the third day he arose again from the dead." See Parson on the creeds. The unfortunate interpolation was added about the 6th century; just when the church got fast hold of the Platonic fiction. It was then that this majestic confession of faith was poisoned and vitiated by the insertion of this misleading clause. The pity of it is, that our "Pastors and Masters," everyone of them, know this fact about it, and yet dare not put a finger to expunge the obnoxious interpolation Anything apparently to foster the Platonic falsehood that souls do not die!

In the Revised Version of the New Testament, hades is left untranslated. This is an advantage to the Bible student. The old word was "hell" which was utterly misleading, as we have seen. We will exemplify this once more. Matt. 16:18: "And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell (hades) shall not prevail against it." We shall not comment on the first part of this verse because it is not our business at present but on the latter sentence, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

ORTHODOX RUBBISH

This word "hell" opened the flood gates of our imaginative Platonic divines, and tons of rubbish and comments have been delivered and written of how devils and demons endeavor to assail the "church militant and the church triumphant," and the efforts of evil spirits and the powers of darkness and spiritual wickedness to do injury and harm; interspersed freely with references to "lurid flames," "damned spirits," "fallen angels," "agonies of imperishable beings," "ghosts," "spirits," and all the rest of Dante's infernal nonsense! All because they failed to see, or would not see, that "hell' is from hades and hades from sheol, "the state of the dead." With this light the text is clear. It means that the gates of the grave (a common expression in the Old Ttestament) shall not always retain sleeping believers, but will one day be burst open by God by the Lord of Hosts, the King of Glory, who shall then come in through the lifted gates (Psa. 24). The text as interpreted is a farrago of incoherency.

A Story that Ought to be Told

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE EDITOR

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

EVER SINCE Sister Ruth Mowery was here the 3rd of August I have been wanting to tell your story, right out in the pages of The Restitution, just as she told it to me. May I? It ought to be told. There would be less fault-finding if it were. I want to tell how much your church people love you; that the love they give you is as much as they dare give any mortal being; and that in their estimation, you are the kindest, most lovable man they ever knew. I want to tell of the Catholics you have brought into the fold of Christ, of other dear, eager seekers after truth of that same church that you have under training; of how you first gain the friendship of people and then win them to God. Please let me tell it, tell of the letters and literature you are sending out; of how busy you are all the while; so busy that the only time you get to prepare your sermons is after you come home from the Sunday night services.

I want to tell of the crowded place of worship; so crowded that people have to go early to get a seat; and then I want to ask if any of us ought to find fault with such a man even if he does speak out a little more bluntly sometimes than we think he ought to speak? Ought we not rather to ask ourselves "what would Jesus do were he in our places?" Would he hate Brother Huggins because in dealing with those who hold what he deems false doctrines, he sometimes uses strong words? Jesus used such words when dealing with those who "taught for doctrines the commandments of men." Paul did when dealing with dissembling Galatians.

HOW AUNTIE WINCE HAS BEEN SUSTAINED IN A LONG LIFE OF SERVICE

Do you not think that Brother Huggins could do better work if some of us would now and then send him words of appreciation, love and encouragement, such as Sister McIlrath and Sister Frances Chapman sent me this 9th day of August? Those letter put new strength in me. They gave me such an uplift that I said, "O I must do more for the dear ones; I must do more, and still more to win the lost to God."

My heart was filled with thankfulness and praise to him that he had seen fit to use poor unworthy humble me, to bless and help in some little measure the precious saints of God. Would I have so felt had you found fault with me? Far from it. All my enthusiasm and love for my work would, for the time being, have been chilled; and if I did not have the faith in God that I have I might have thrown by my pen never to take it up again.

READER, HOW WOULD YOU FEEL IF CONSTANTLY CRITICIZED?

How would you feel if people were constantly finding fault with you, dear brother and sister? Not very pleasant I think! Don't stop The Restitution because the Editor says something that does not plase you, or does not admit something that you think ought to go in. Don't try to kill it. I doubt if you can do that, for we who love it have put it into God's keeping. It is his paper now. He knows how much we have sacrificed for it, and how earnestly we are praying that he will use it for his glory and for the saving of men.

Be careful, dear ones. Do nothing that will displease the dear Father in heaven. Jesus will soon be here. Be found doing your very best for his cause when he comes.

AUNTIE WINCE.

The Story of Joseph

JACOB, THE son of Isaac, had many sons; but best of all he loved Joseph. Some of his elder sons were wicked and caused their father great sorrow, but Joseph was always kind and obedient, and being younger than the others, he was watched over more carefully.

When Joseph was about seventeen he was given a coat of many colors. No doubt he looked better than the others.

This present made the brothers very angry. They were already jealous of him because he was more clever and kind than they were. And they never spoke to him kindly but hated him, and decided to do him some injury if they could.

Joseph had strange dreams, and as he was very open and truthful, told them to his brothers. Once he dreamed they were all working together in a cornfield, as they often were, binding up sheaves at harvest time. The sheaf that he bound stood up in the middle of the others; and the strange part was that their sheaves bowed to his.

At this the brothers were very angry and asked him if he ever supposed that he would reign over them. At this the brothers were more angry than ever, but Joseph did not mean to offend them. But they hated him even more when he told them of a dream shortly afterwards in which the sun, moon, and the eleven stars would bow to him.

This dream seemed so strange that he told it not only to his brothers but to his father Jacob, who was displeased because he thought that the sun and moon meant him and Rachel, and the eleven stars meant his sons, ten older that Joseph and one younger, little Benjamin, Rachel's baby.

No doubt Jacob thought that the boy thought too much of himself. But when Joseph got to be a great man Joseph probably remembered the dream.

All the brothers were shepherds of flocks of sheep and goats, which were part of their father's wealth. One day soon after his last dream he was sent to Shechem to see about the brothers and their sheep. Then he was to go back and let his father know how they were.

Joseph went to Shechem, but his brothers were gone to Dothan a few miles away. He saw his brothers in a distance and hurried towards them. When he got to them they cried, "Let us kill this dreamer."

Reuben did not want to see his brother killed, so he suggsted to put him in a pit and let him starve. Reuben went away and intended to go back to the pit and let Joseph out and take him home.

While the brothers were eating some rich merchants came along and Judah being greedy decided to sell his brother for money. The merchants gave Joseph's brothers 20 pieces in silver for Joseph, which they divided among the ten of them. Then the merchants took Joseph to Egypt where he was sold to a rich man named Potiphar.

Potiphar made Joseph master over his other servants and riches. Potiphar had a cruel wife who tried to make Joseph deceive his master, but Joseph would not, so she made false charges against him.

Potiphar believed his wicked wife and put Joseph in prison where other guilty ones were punished. Joseph's only hope was praying to God for help. There Joseph met a friend (one of the jailors) who gave him charge of all the people in the prison.

In the prison was a chief butler and baker who had strange dreams that puzzled them. Joseph being their friend they told him their dreams. The Lord gave Joseph power to tell the butler and baker about their dreams, so he told them what they meant. He said the butler would be restored to the king in three days and the baker would be hanged in three days. That came true, and when the butler got out of prison he told Joseph he would remember him, but he forgot him. Joseph was in prison two long years before the butler thought of him.

As it happened Pharoah dreamed that seven fat kine came out of a river and seven this cows came out and devoured the fat ones. Pharoah was troubled over that dream, and not long afterwards had another dream. This time seven full ears of corn were devoured by seven thin ears of corn, blighted by the east wind. At this Pharoah was greatly distressed so he gave his dream to his wise men, but they could not tell him. As it happened the butler thought of his dream and how it had come true, so he told Pharoah of Joseph.

Pharoah sent for Joseph immediately. Pharoah told Joseph of his dream and asked Joseph about it. Joseph said that with help from the Lord he would tell him. Joseph at once said that the cows and ears of corn had the same meaning. They meant there would be seven years of plenty in Egypt, and seven yars of famine. Joseph being able to tell the dream was made ruler over all the people in Egypt.

When the seven years of famine came people came to Egypt for food. Among them that came were Joseph's brothers. Joseph filled their sacks with grain and put their money in the top of their sacks.

The next time they went Joseph told them Benjamin must come or they would have no corn. They took Benjamin and when they were ready to leave Egypt Joseph had one of his servants put a silver cup secretly in Benjamin's sack.

After they had gone a little way from Egypt Joseph sent a servant to enquire about his silver cup. When he found it in Benjamin's sack he and his brothers were very much surprised, and when the servant said they must return to the ruler they were very much confused. But this time when they returned Joseph told them who he was, and they fell down on their knees and wept. The next day they started home and when they got there they told their poor father about Joseph still being alive. It was not long till Jacob and his sons moved down to where Joseph was in Egypt.

When Joseph died he was 110 years old.

MORAL.

Joseph's brothers treated him meanly, so let us try and be different. Do unto others as you wish to be done by.

End of the World and Russellism

THE RUSSELLITES are blandly telling us the world has ended and that millions that are now living will never see death. This is like the Christian Scientists telling us there is no sin, sorrow, sickness, death, nor judgment to come, all is good. Or like the orthodox and spiritualists telling us there is no death we just pass out. Or like the profiteers telling us how they are losing money every day. You must believe that things are not what they are. Russell prophesied that the world would end in October 1914. His followers think he must have been right: therefore the world must have ended then. But the world seems still to be in evidence, even more worldly than ever. The Russellites seem to have stolen a trick from the Christian Scientists, for they tell us to ignore the testimony of our senses, and just believe the world has ended, for Russell said so. But this seems to be about as good a story as the rest of their stories: that the second coming of Christ took place in 1874, that the Christian dead were raised in 1878, that the door to the high calling was closed in 1881, that the ancient worthies were to be resurrected and reigning over the earth by 1914, that as soon as a full-fledged Russellite dies he is immediately resurrected, that Russell's seven books are the seven last plagues, and so on, till the world really does end and Russellism ends with it. -E. D. GIFFORD.

The Last Days

BRETHREN:

Surely we are living in the last days. Was there ever a time when the whole world was in such an unsettled condition as now. This condition is growing worse very, very fast. The impatience and unrest of the people is seen on every hand. The money-mad pleasure seeking spirit of the people; the great upheaval of the laboring masses and their oppression by the rich; the fear and trembling of the governments and their leaders, fearing the things that are coming on the earth, all point to the perilous times spoken of by Paul in 2 Tim. 3:1-6: "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, coveteous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having the form of godliness but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."

Brethren, in view of these stirring times we should awake to righteouness and sin not (1 Cor. 15:34). We are living in the eventide of the world when all things point to the second coming of our King. Are we living up to the faith we profess, and doing all we can for the cause we claim to love? Love signifies a gracious principle or habit wrought in man by God which inclines us to delight and esteem, and earnestly desire to enjoy an interest in God's favor and communion with him as our chief portion and happiness and the fountain of all perfection which likewise disposes us to do good to all. Jesus said in Matt. 24:33, "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the door." He had been answering the questions the disciples asked him as to his second coming and the end of the world. After stating the signs preceding he said, "When ye see these signs know that he is near." Brethren, let us all unite our forces for the glory of God, as in unity there is strength and go marching on to make our calling and election sure, "For if ye do these things ye shall never fall" (2 Pet. 1: 10). Let us all be faithful that we may be worthy of a place in his kingdom when he comes and changes our bodies like his glorious body.

MRS. MATILDA FENIMORE.

Who Offends?

"THE SON of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire" (Matt. 13:41, 42). Who offends? It is the living and they are in his kingdom. So his kingdom is established, and he is ruling over the nations of the earth. For all nations and languages shall serve him, all dominions shall serve and obey him (Dan. 7:14, 27). But the nation and kingdom that will not obey shall be utterly destroyed (Isa. 60: 12; Jer. 12:17). He is to have power over the nations and rule them with a rod of iron. Now if these nations are all destroyed at his coming before his kingdom is established, then there is no one to offend. We read the unjust are reserved unto the day of judgment (2 Pet. 2:9). And the angels which kept not their first estate are reserved unto the judgment of the great day (Jude).

When is the day of judgment? It is when the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books are opened, and the dead are judged out of these things which are written in the books. At this time all the dead that have had their names written in the book are judged. We believe this class are those that have had their names blotted out of the "book of life," and will be cast into the lake of fire This is the second death. The 20th chapter of Revelation is the only place in the Bible that gives an account of the second death, and the ones that are the subjects of the second death, viz., those not found written in the book of life.

Those that Christ sends his angels to gather out of his kingdom are living, and in their destruction they do not suffer the second death, but are destroyed for their offences as at the flood.

When we cease to love we cease to live. The heart sends out the tendrils of its affections after some object continually. But it can never be content with anything save God alone. Man is always longing for something new, but no sooner is the coveted object attained than it palls upon his taste.

When we were at Sister Wince's home recently she gave us a MS. by her lamented husband, Brother J. L. Wince. It is entitled "Questions and Answers." Upon reading it we find that it is a treatise on prophecy, dealing particularly with Daniel 2nd and 7th chapters and 2 Thess. 2. In the near future we shall give our readers these valuable articles on prophecy. They should be published in booklet form, as they are the only posthumous work by Brother Wince.

The desire of having something makes a man form idols for himself, which he invests with fancied perfections, and when all these fade away in his grasp, and he finds their unsubstantiality, he must either become a misanthrope or a Christian. When a man has learned to know the infinite love of God in Christ, then he discovers something which will elude his hold, and an affection which will not grow cold: for the comparison of God's long-suffering and repeated pardon with his own ingratitude, convinces him that it is an unchangeable love.

Cleaving to the Lord

Pemmican Notes of the Editor's Sermon

For he clave to the Lord and departed not from following him, but kept his commandments which the Lord commanded Moses (2 Kings 18:6).

THE CONTEXT of this chapter concerns Hezekiah, the son of David, who began to reign at the age of twenty-five years, and reigning twenty-nine years was called "Hezekiah the good." The fourth and fifth verses are descriptive of the good things he did, and then follows our text. But the most striking characteristic of this life was the permanency and stability of this good man in righteousness and in his devotion to God. The permanent attachment to God is called "stayed" in Isa. 26:3, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." In Psa. 37:7 it is called "resting" in the Lord; and Canticles 8:5 speaks of "leaning on her beloved." "Clave" in our text expresses even more intimacy than any of these, and means a fixed trust and confidence in God. David had such confidence, for in one place he asks, "What wait I for? My hope is in thee." Again, "For thou art my hope, O Lord God: thou art my trust from my youth" (Psa. 71:5). Encouraging parents to bring up their children in the faith David says further: "That they might set their hope in God and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments" (Psa. 78:7). Hezekiah was not religious by spells but as a habit, a fixture; reposing in God, his faith implicit and his trust fixed.

I. An ardent and constant attachment to God is one of the honorable and beautiful things of life. "And the Lord God will circumcise thine heart and the heart of thy seed to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live" (Deut. 30:6). The rejuvenating influence of the truth is here called "the circumcision of the heart." Perhaps we cannot attain to this high standard, but hear the prayer in Phil. 1:9: "And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and judgment." The standard of our love of God may be idealistic, but we must have growth, abounding more and more in love and judgment until Christ come.

II. There must be, even as with this king, an unremitting obedience to God's will. Hinging upon Israel's cleaving to God was their success among the nations: "For if ye shall diligently keep all these commandments which I command you, to do them, to love the Lord your God, to walk in all his ways, and to cleave unto him; then will the Lord drive out all these nations from before you, and ye shall possess greater nations and mightier than yourselves" (Deut. 11:22, 23). Joshua, in the 23rd chapter of that book, exhorts the Israelites to be courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses. They were to neither serve nor name nor bow themselves unto the gods of the nations, but were "to cleave to the Lord" as they had done that day. Josiah is claimed to have done that which was right in the sight of the Lord, turning not aside to right hand nor the left (2 Kings 22:2). In Luke 1:6 a standard is given which substantially we can attain: "And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." When Barnabas arrived at Antioch he found that the grace of God was visible, and he was glad (Acts 11:23). After reviewing Adam and the corruptions of this animal nature Paul sees the triumph over death through Jesus Christ, and is led to exclaim: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" (1 Cor. 15:58). When we read in our text that Hezekiah was a religious man there is no use looking at the things he did in detail; see his fixed trust in God, his ardent and constant attachment to God, his unremitting obedience to God's will — that is enough.

III. All this leads to the importance of such a conduct. Cleaving to God alone is the only true religion. Those who do not grasp the truth but cleave to side issues are quite apt to become side-tracked. Did not the Jews grasp Moses and the law and reject Christ? Paul upbraids those who, after his labor in the truth for them, were rejecting him for the observance of days and months, or to use his words those elements "whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage." Grasping the shadow and missing the substance; grasping accessories but failing to get hold of the truth itself.

IV. Cleaving to God is a security and support in the trials of life. It is even a saving environment. Read Deut. 1:31, realizing that every Israelite divorced from God suffered by this separation from the vital life of God. Hear David's thoughts on this: "For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in the pavilion, in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me up upon a rock"; "Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues" (Psa. 27:5; 31:20). Strife of tongues, pride of man, days of troubles these are the testings. These sound you to the very depth of the heart. "And a man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of waters in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land" (Isa. 32:2). Isaiah proclaims that amidst the winds of tempest, under the blasting rays of the sun's beams, the man of God must cleave to God and stand in the shadow of the rock else he shall faint.

V. Cleaving to God facilitates our entrance into the kingdom of God. "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things ye shall never fall" (2 Pet. 1:10). Read Heb. 6:18-20. We must have an anchor beyond the vail. The soul that cleaves to God, the individual who gives unremitting obedience to God, has a hope sure and steadfast. Turn back once more to Acts 11:23. The gospel had been preached, learned and believed, and the believers were standing in the truth. But they were in need of exhortation, and in these words: "That with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord."

Read Daniel the first chapter to see the import of cleaving to God. Surrounded by the treasures of the kingly palace and feasting and drinking Daniel was in the position to sell out for a million or a song. But in an environment inimical or friendly he reaches a serious conclusion contrary to the ethics of the palace. There was no force in Babylon, nor money enough in the palace to buy off Daniel. When we take on the name of Christ we have a lifetime ahead of us to reveal the depths of our confidence. If we do not establish an affiance with God, burning our bridges behind us, we shall spoil the present life for ourselves and injure the happiness of the future. Daniel "purposed in his heart" not to defile himself. Let us not be found wanting.

Recipe for Keeping Your Friends

REGARD FOUR simple rules, very clear, very precise.

I. Always leave your friend something more to desire of you. If he asks you to go out and see him three times, go but twice. He will look to you return a third time, and when you go he will receive you the more cordially.

II. Be useful to your friend as far as he permits you, and no farther. An over-anxious affection becomes tiresome, and a multiplicity of beautiful sentiments becomes almost unsupportable. Devotion to a friend does not consist in doing everything for him, but simply that which is agreeable and of service to him, and let it only be revealed to him by accident. We all love freedom and cling tenaciously to our little fancies: we do not like others to arrange what we have purposely left in disorder.

III. Be much occupied with your own affairs, and very little, very little, with those of your friend. This infallibly leads to a favorable result. In occupying yourself with your own affairs you will the more speedily accomplish them, while your friend is doing the same. If he appeals to you for help, go through fire and watetr to serve him, but if not, then you do both yourself and him the greater service by abstaining.

IV. Leave your friend always the liberty to think and act for himself in matters of little importance. Why compel him to think and act with you? Are you the type of all that is beautiful and right? Is it not absurd to think that because another acts and thinks differently to yourself, he must needs be wrong? You may not always be able to say, "You are right," but anyway you can afford to let him think it.

Try this recipe of friendship and your friends will be lasting ones. Selected by the Editor.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

OUR FAMILY has been reading the dear old Restitution for a number of years, and we find the letters of the different brothers and sisters very encouraging and helpful. We have bought and distributed a goodly number of tracts to those who seem interested in the truth. All we can do is to "plant and water," but "God giveth the increase." Let us pray that the seed sown in these perilous times may bring forth abundantly to the Master's honor and glory.

When the Adversary is Loosed

TEXT: And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went upon the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet (were cast Rev. 19:20) and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever (Rev. 20: 7-10).

FROM THIS it seems that the millennium ends like all previous dispensations, with the few saved, and many in rebellion; for the camp of the saints is about the beloved city Jerusalem, which would be impossible were the greater portion of humanity saved. Then the nations from the four quarters of the earth seem to be deceived, and a minority of the people of a nation are not usually considered to be the nation; but the majority. And thus we must conclude that a majority of the people who live during the millennium age will rebel against God's people at its close. It seems a little surprising to think that after Christ and the saints had ruled in righteousness a thousand years any sane person would care to go back under the dominion of the adversary; but such is here declared, and we must believe it to be truth; because a part of the word which "is truth." From such texts as the following we learn that during the thousand years all nations serve Christ and Jehovah.

"All dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:27).

"Yea all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him" (Psa. 72:11).

"All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindred of the nations shall worship before him" (Psa. 22:27).

Other equally strong texts could be produced; but these for the present are sufficient. But when will this take place? Under the reign, or in the kingdom of Christ, as the context abundantly proves. Such could not take place in our age unless Christ is now reigning, and the ends of the earth are not in existence to turn unto the Lord after mortality, or death is no more operative. There is no promise of another dispensation of probation after the thousand years have ended, and hence all opportunity for people to turn unto the Lord must cease at that time; and why burn those wicked up if they are to be raised for another opportunity? It cannot be said of them that they had not a chance, after they have lived under the reign of Christ; for then we would make that reign limited to a small portion of the earth. But Christ is to "rule in the midst of his enemies" (Psa. 110:2).

Under the beneficient reign "his enemies shall lick the dust" (Psa. 72:9). "All the fat ones of the earth shall eat and worship: and they that go down into the dust shall bow before him, even he that cannot keep his soul alive" (Psa. 22:29). If one worships in spirit and truth he will keep his soul unto eternal life, according to Jesus; and this brings us to another set of texts:

"Thou hast made me (Messiah no doubt) the head of the nations: a people whom I have not known shall serve me. As soon as they hear of me they shall obey me: the strangers shall yield feigned obedience unto me (Psa. 18:43; Young, Revised Version, and Common Version, Marg.). What will be the destiny of those strangers who yield obedience? They will rebel openly when they find a leader, such as the adversary, and be destroyed.

But another text: "Happy art thou O Israel: Who is like unto thee, a people saved by Jehovah, the shield of thy help, and that is the sword of thy excellency! and thine enemies shall yield feigned obedience unto thee" (Deut. 33:29, Revised, margin, Young). This is a sure promise with Israel, and will come to pass. Further still, "Through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies yield feigned obedience unto thee" (Psa. 66:3).

Thus we see when all nations serve Jehovah some are only serving with a feigned obedience, and that maks harmony where discord might be found in Holy Writ. God always explains himself; if we find the explanation one truth never contradicts another. Now who will diabolus deceive during the little season? Those who have yielded feigned obedience when they should have obeyed from the heart. They turn unto and serve the Lord but not from the heart: and when temptation to throw off the yoke he has put upon them comes undertake the task. But it will be too big a task for them; they will be destroyed as Sodom was. "For the day is to come when all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly shall be stubble and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch" (Mal. 4:1).

Here it is in the little season, and devours the whole Gogian army except the leader, who must undergo a process of torture before he comes to his end. It seems that every probationary period has and will end with the masses in rebellion. Man is inclined to get tired of righteousness. "Let favor be shown the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness; in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly" (Isa. 26:10).

The land of uprightness is surely the millennial age and onward, and there the wicked "will not behold the majesty (kingship) of the Lord." He will not see that the Lord is king for ever, but undertakes to overthrow his kingdom. How any one can teach the so-called Larger Hope in sight of the complete word of God is more than I can see, and especially in the light of the fact that many choose to yield feigned obedience. The man who in one life yields feigned obedience, would choose the same in another. So if given eternal life, would not heartily praise God for the gift.

The Parables of Jesus

Number Two

THE WHEAT AND THE TARES

ANOTHER PARABLE put he for unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field. While men slept his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way."

While this parable has some features much like the parable of the sower, it teaches a different lesson and has a different application. It continues the work of the previous parable, but under different conditions and environments. The period of tribulation of the nations and the time of "Jacob's trouble" has passed, and Jesus and the immortalized saints have fought the battle of Armageddon and gained a victory over the "mystery of iniquity" and the Gog power. This is a period not noted by many writers. They pass directly from the resurrection to he battle before Jerusalem, giving no time for the work of the mystery of iniquity spoken of by the apostle in 2 Thess. 2nd chapter.

With what we have written we are now prepared to discuss the parable and note its application. We have said, we can not apply this parable to the gospel age for several sufficient reasons. As proof we submit the following: "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto,' etc, etc. We must recognize that the kingdom here spoken of is the kingdom that God promised to set up and finally establish over the whole earth (Dan. 2:45; 7:27). We must remember that this kingdom is but prophetically spoken of, the kingdom of Israel being over turned and in no sense in an operative condition. We have our king, but the other elements are wanting. Note that in the parable Jesus is comparing the kingdom to a man who sowed good seed in his field. It is hardy possible to compare two things that do not exist They were just as real to Jesus as if they did at that time exist. Our faith must grasp them as firmly as did Jesus. We therefore conclude that this parable must follow the preceding parable having different work to do under different conditions.

We note that at the end of the kingdom age there is instituted a judgment that destroys the evil then existing, whereas in the end of the gospel age there is no such a judgment. The resurrection immortalizes the saints, and their judgment determines rewards (2 Cor. 5:10). "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every one according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12). No unrighteous person can stand in the judgment provided for the saints. After Jesus had uttered this parable he gave the same reason for speaking thus as he did in the parable of the sower. His apostles demanded of him an explanation of the parable. He declared that the sower is the Son of Man. The field is the world (the kosmos, or political arrangement). The good seed are the children of the kingdom. But the tares are the children of the wicked one. The enemy that sower the tares is the devil or the adversary. The harvest is the end of the world (age). The reapers are the angels, the immortalized saints. The scene brought to view at the close of this age is so distinctly different that we are puzzled to know how any student of the Scriptures can mix the two ages. Some will no doubt be surprised to know that we recognize the angels here spoken of as the saints. Our reason is that the saints are to be co-workers in disciplining the nations. He hath made us unto our God kings and priests and we shall reign on the earth (Rev. 5:10). Some may be troubled by our interpretation continuing the work of evil during the period of Christ's reign. No truth is clearer that that evil and the work of the evil will exist until the last enemy, death, is destroyed (1 Cor. 15:24-29; Rev. 20). After the execution of the judgment as given in the explanation by Jesus (verses 40-44), it is declared that the righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. A careful study of this parable along the line we have pointed out we think will convince the most skeptical. We shall have an occasion to refer to our proof and strengthen it in the following parables.

Obituary

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.--Psa. 116:15.

MARY C. McCLURE-POGUE was born Oct. 19, 1851, in Moreland County, Georgia, where she grew to maturity. She was married to W. L. C. Pogue, of Newman, Georgia, on Dec. 4, 1870, and became the mother of nine children. She came to Plymouth, Ind., several years ago and has lived in the vicinity since.

In her early life she united with the M. E. church at Moreland, but when coming to Indiana she united with the church of God at Plymouth, and has been a faithful believer in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

She was living with her daughter, Mrs. W. E. Leonard, at Richland Center, where she died August 10, 1920, at the age of 68 years 9 months and 22 days.

She was the last of her mother's family to pass from life. She leaves three children, Mrs. W. E. Leonard, Mrs. W. D. Reiter, of South Bend, and W. T. Pogue of Athens, Ga., and seven grandchildren to remember her many virtues.

Funeral services were held at the Plymouth Church of God, Aug. 12, conducted by D. E. VanVactor, and burial was made in Oak Hill Cemetery. Here Sister Pogue awaits the coming of Christ and his resurrection power.

GOLDEN TEXT: Psa. 103:4

OLD AGE TO YOUTH

SON, I have no choice to give you.
You're living in a universe that's new.
I'm but an immigrant, nay, less or more:
I am an alien from a foreign shore,
Bewildered with the customs of the age
In which I now reside and draw my wage.
You are a native of this world so new
Son, I have no advice to tender you.

You're living in an age of aeroplanes
That hurtle through the high, cloud pyloned lanes.
My time—though even yet my heart is young—
Was that in which, each side a wagon tongue,
A horse or ox was yoked to draw our loads
With patient slowness over rutted roads,
Your travel, swallow-swift, is through the sky.
What to you is advice from such as I ?

Your garments and your food, my growing lad,
Cost what had been a fortune to your dad.
Your yearly cost for schooling would have given
Me, in my youth, a vivid glimpse of heaven.
You sense a motor's whims with less of pride
Than was my own as first I sat astride
A "safey-bike" when that affair was new
What folly mine, to give advice to you !

Yet though an alien to your time, my son,
Regard me as a loyal, friendly one !
Yours is a sum I fear I could not do
Believe me son, I do not envy you !

Still, yours shall be a grander day than mine,
The Ruler of your day is as divine
As my day's Ruler. To the Right be true,
Here I begin, here end, advising you.

Still, should you ever ask advice from me
I would make it my business that you see
The things that's worth while in this life, my son,
That points the way to the world to come.
I would show you how God in forming his plan;
Sent Jesus here as a Savior to men,
That all who accept him, to them would he give
Joy and blessing in eternity to live.
John 3:16.

MY NEIGHBOR

"Who is my neighbor ?" (Luke 10:29).

GENERALLY IN speaking of "my neighbor" we refer to the person next door, or across the street. But if we read the definition as given by the Century Dictionary we will find that our neighbor is "a person in relation to his fellow men regarded as having social and moral duties toward them."

What are our moral duties ? How do they apply to you and me ? Why should I be considered as having a moral duty toward anyone ? We read that we are "made in the image of God." We have no control over our birth. We are placed in our respective spheres or environment for his own good purpose. God expects us to be kind, just, uplifting and helpful. Consequently we must have moral duties toward all men.

If we live entirely for ourselves, we feel but a small place in the world of love. When we go we soon are forgotten, and no one cares or thinks we ever existed, except our own people. We should think different. There is some good in every man; it is our business to see this good and make certain allowance for other virtues that may be lacking. We should love to meet God's children, giving them a word of cheer and a hearty Christian handshake of friendship.

In this world so many lose hope from sheer discouragement. Their ambitions are killed by selfishness and greed. In his word God tells us to love every one, for he created them and they are his. Why should I discriminate ? Christ, to show the love of God, mingled with all classes and conditions of men. Is it just for you and me to belittle or form unjust opinions ? If I can aid, if I can give hope to the discouraged, then that should be my mission. The world offers to us all so much to work for. Are you satisfied to be alone on your little island of self ? Do you enjoy bringing help or hope to anyone ? Are you known by your smile, by your handshake ? Have you ever heard the thankful one say, "God bless you for that" ? Are you used to it ? Are you familiar with the Master's admonition, "Do this in remembrance of me."

Yes, I know he said that regarding the supper, still there are many ways we have of remembering him. Has the report ever been circulated about you, "Oh, she is so kind and thoughtful;" "How I love him"; "He always thinks of little things"; "She is ever watchful, yes, she is God's angel"; Did you ever think how others judge you ? If Christ walks with you, if love is in your face, if you know God and his Christ as you should, then the world will love you too.

Our neighbor is any one to whom we can be good, show a kindness, be helpful or be of service, especially so in letting be known the love of God and the saving grace of his Son, Christ Jesus our Lord. Our love should be for all. Should others fail and grasp too many things, should anyone take from me, they can not take my peace of mind, built on my faith in Jesus, which prompts me to love all mankind, neither can they take God's record of my good deeds and intentions.

The world has become sordid and cold, I mean the people in it are so living that they have brought about this condition. Can we be happy under these conditions ? What would Jesus do ? Can you imagine ? What did he say on the cross ? "Father forgive them; they know not what they do." Do your best in becoming neighbor to every one. Show God's love to mankind daily asking for help and guidance, and he will suggest ways and means to defeat the foe. Be a man holy in heart, doing your best to cheer, bless and enrich your neighbor.

LOCATING GOD

PLACE AN atheist in danger of his life, and he will locate God in a hurry.

The statue of God is measured by space. He is the only foundation on which a mind can rest.

His magnitude is great, but it does not equal his minuteness. His massive mountains cannot compare with the perfection of an oak leaf.

Most men fear God, but all men fear the man more who does not reverence and respect God.

It was Voltaire who said, "If God did not exist, it would be necessary to invent him."

The inability of some men to prove that God is not, discloses the fact that he is.

God has an altar in every human heart, and this prompts me to say that it only is heart worship that God will accept. Outer shows and ceremonies are an abomination to God; but a true heart and a meek spirit is his delight.

A QUESTION ANSWERED

THE QUESTION was asked: What are the five essential qualities necessary to possess, for a person to be successful in presenting the gospel to non-believers ?

First, we must have a knowledge of our subject; for it is utterly impossible to impart to others something we do not ourselves possess.

Second, we must have that something about us that will gain the confidence of our hearer. If we cannot command confidence and respect there is no use of further trying.

Third in our statement of facts we must be clear. Many a person with a full knowledge of a subject has not the ability to impart that knowledge to others.

Fourth, We must be concise. With but few exceptions people tire of long statements or drawn out arguments. Briefness—as a general thing—is a winner.

Fifth, courtesy is just as necessary as any other element, in fact, much more so than some. Courtesy will open the doors of a man's heart and brain when cold facts will fail.

So my answer to the question is: knowledge, confidence, clearness, conciseness, and courtesy.

You might have a different conception of the necessary elements. If so, write me and let me know what they are.

DAILY THOUGHTS

Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you	I Pet 5:7
Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end	Matt. 28:20
Fear God and keep his commandments	Eccl. 12:13
God worketh for him that waiteth for him	Isa. 64:4
Return unto me; for I have redeemed thee	Isa. 44:22
He will speak peace unto his people	Psa. 85:8
Ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me	Exod. 19:5

Thank God for the Book of books. It makes us an heir to the spiritual life. It makes us acquainted with the prophets, the apostles, with Jesus, yea, even with God.

Remember the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO. SEPTEMBER 21st, 1920. NUMBER 35

Good Counsel

BE EARNEST then and serve your Lord,
He surely will your work reward,
Give him your heart, no less will do:
Remember thus he loveth you.

Give him each day the freshest hour,
His word will thus have greater power
To keep you in the narrow way,
And counsel you throughout the day.

With instant prayer and patience wait
The loving hand that guides your fate:
His confidence your life inspires,
He'll guide you as your need requires.

Make manifest your love in life,
No better cure exists for strife:
"Love one another" is his command,
None failing will before him stand.

Let everything be done as in his sight,
In foolish Gentile way take no delight,
Follow the Lord in truth, though hard it seem,
Fear not to sail with him against the stream.

Let only those your choice companions be
Who love the truth, in whom you saintship see,
And only such a brother choose to you,
As sets before you wisdom's end in view.

And now may he who asks us for his own,
Bless you and help you to his glorious throne:
Guide your feet into his glorious ways,
Fill your heart and mouth with joy and praise.
Selected by Mr. and Mrs. A. Ashute.

Why is it that some people always find the good in a person so quickly? It is just because their spiritual ears are trained by constant use. They have not kept them listening for the meannesses, the discords about them. They have tuned the strings of their minds until they are in harmony with the mind of Christ. In our daily life the spiritual ear may be spoiled by the habit of striking harsh and dissonant notes.—Selected.

Do good to thy friend to keep him—to thine enemy to gain him.

At first this proverb sounds like theory, but think it over; analyze it and see if you do not think there is a deal of truth in it.

Prophetic Signs of the Times

Time Periods, Dates, "Times of the Gentiles," and the Final Consummation

THE MARKED degree of harmony illustrated by the use of the "times" makes impossible the idea that the 1290 of Daniel 12:11, began in A. D. 637 instead of 622. It will now be readily seen that in order to secure the proper beginning of any one period, the period must be considered in its relation to all the other arches of time reaching to our day.

The fact that we may now prove that there was a time of the beginning of forty-five years, which bridged the interval between B. C. 607 and 562, is worthy of having brought to our attention again, as it fixes the "time of the end" as a like duration of time, which may be definitely placed in its relation to the time of the beginning by the use of the "seven times" of the Gentiles. The relation of these prophetic times, coupled with current events makes it certain that we are living in the "last days" of human authority.

The recovery of Jerusalem marked the year 1917 as a wonderful year in Jewish affairs. It marked the beginning of "the times of restitution." The significance of the taking of Jerusalem from the Mohammedan "Desolator" in the particular year of 1917 is not fully realized. It marked the beginning of the forty years of Micah 7:15, and the "generation that shall not pass away until all be fulfilled" (Luke 21:29-32).

Oregon [illegible] College

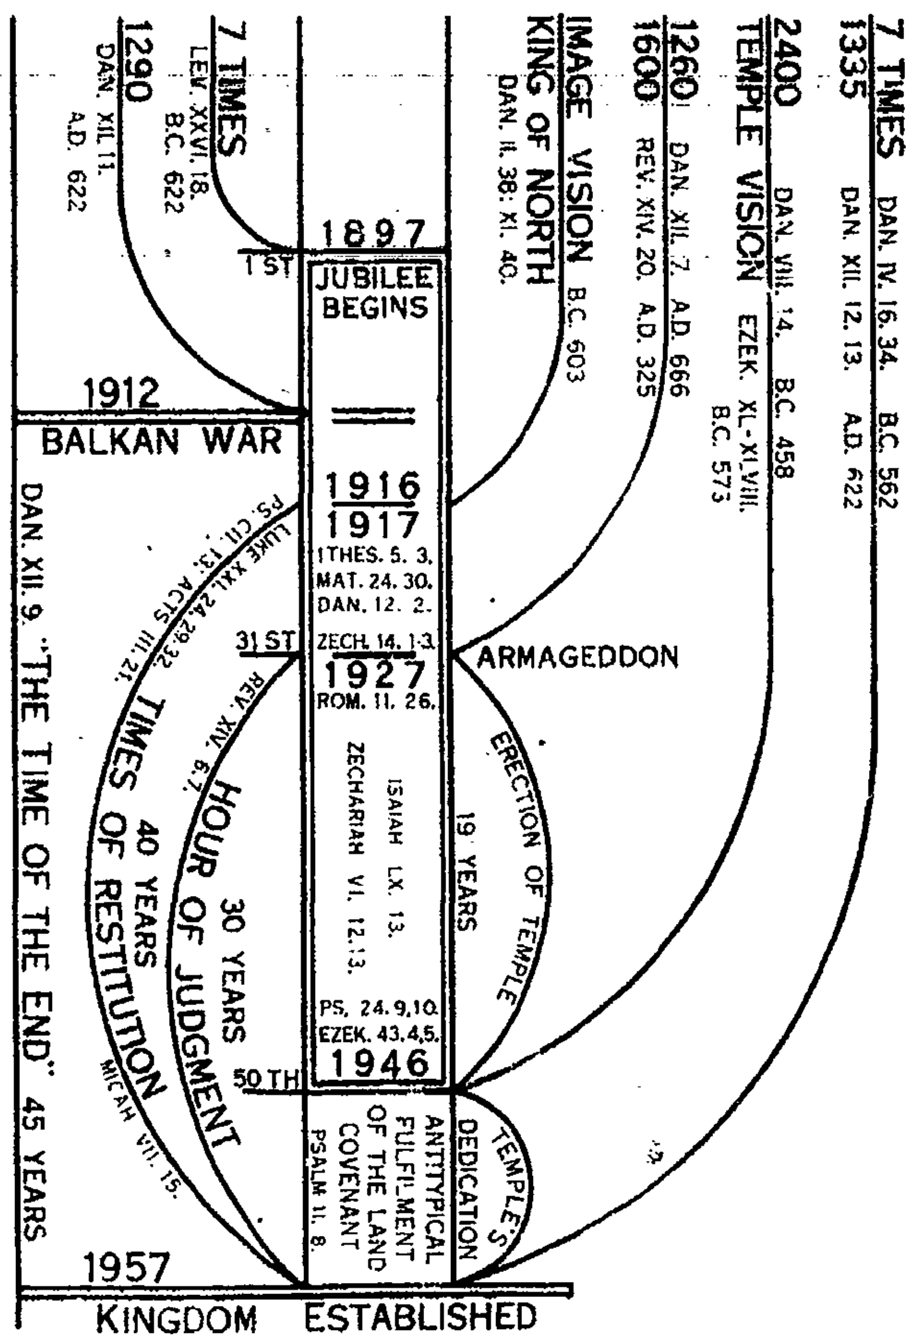
"HOW LONG"

The "Peace" sign has at last come and now must we wait to see the final development and the manifestation of the "three unclean spirits," in Constantinople, Vienna, and Rome, before the "Resurrection" takes place ? This would seem to be the case if the events predicted in Rev. 16:15, are given in their order. It would seem that the "Peace" sign is not the last sign to the household of the Lord's approaching advent.

Are we to remain to see Russia (Ross of Ezek. 38:2, Septuagint text), or the latter day Bear (Dan. 7:5) identified in 1916 as the Assyrian, occupying Constantinople instead of the Turk ? It might be added here that while Turkey has lost the name of the Euphrates river, she may still be called the King of the North while tarrying at Constantinople, the seat of the Dragon; but she is destined to lose the city which carries with it the name of the King of the North. Turkey's successor has already been identified, that is, Russia, but the question is how and when shall she take the city she claims ?



There is a question as to what the last sign may be. Would it not be appropriate if the last sign was the cleaving of the Mount of Olives as predicted in Zech. 14:4 ? It would certainly give some meaning to the prediction of Acts 1:9-11, that is, the place and the "manner" of the Lord's ascension would be involved in the event of his return. It should be noted that the events of Zech. 14, are not given in their order. The event of the 8th verse, though mentioned first, takes place after the event of the 14th verse. This is like many other passages of Scripture, that is, the main event is first brought to one's attention, then the following minor details are given, some of which take place before the main event.

A good illustration of such scriptural arrangement is found in Matt. 25:31, 32. The all-important event is the Lord's enthronement in glory in Jerusalem, then follow some details which, if taken in their order, would mean that the dead are not raised until Christ sits on his throne. But we know, as can be proved by other testimony, that the resurrection takes place first and in support thereof we will mention one passage—Dan. 12: There the deliverance of Jerusalem and the Jews by Christ as predicted in the 7th verse (also, see Rom. 11:26) is after the events mentioned before the 7th verse, as it reads, "all these things shall be finished," and one of the things mentioned before is the resurrection of the second verse. So the resurrection will be an event of the past when Jerusalem is taken by Christ, and the battle of Armageddon.

It will now be seen that the cleaving of the Mount of Olives predicted in the 4th verse of Zech. 14, could take place before the all-important event of the taking of Jerusalem, as predicted in the third verse. The cleaving of the Mount of Olives would be a clear and unmistakable sign that Christ had returned, though meaningless to the world and the unbeliever of the prophets.

The suggestion, for that it is, that the Olivet earthquake shall take place before Armageddon, is in opposition to our former convictions; but it should be remembered that the valley of Jehoshaphat at present is a very small valley, lying between Olivet and Jerusalem and seems quite inadequate for the accommodation of the "multitudes, multitudes," that are to be gathered there as predicted. But an extension of the valley for a distance of about thirty-five miles, "from Geba (north of Jerusalem) to Rimmon, south of Jerusalem," thus making "a very great valley" would seem to be a more commodious place for the "multitudes, multitudes" of all the nations to "come up to" (Joel 3:12-14). Again, is not the coming of Christ and the saints (Zech. 14:5), and the Lord's going forth to fight the nations gathered at Jerusalem (verse 3), one and the same event ? If so, it appears that it is to take place after the Olivet quake, because, after predicting the quake, it reads in a more proper translation of the Hebrew: "and then will come the Lord my God, and all the saints with thee" (verse 5).

CYRUS AT BABYLON AND CHRIST AT JERUSALEM

We read in Rev. 16:15, "Behold I come as a thief," that is, to the world, as we read in 1 Thess. 5:4, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." So it is evident that the believers of the truth should have some idea as to when the Master is to return.

While we may have a general idea of the structure of the "times" culminating in the "time of the end" (Dan. 12:9), yet "the day and the hour (of Christ's advent) knoweth no man." Some think that seven years will be used in judgment; others think only five years will be required; again, some think three and half years would be sufficient, while others think only one year will be necessary. We cannot offer anything like proof as to which of these periods is right; therefore, we believe that the statement that "no man knoweth the day or hour" will remain true to the end. All we now can say is that the great event is at hand, it being foreshadowed by the fulfilment of the prediction that "when they shall say peace and safety then sudden destruction cometh upon them." It will be interesting to see how short-lived the "League of Nations" will really prove to be.

Cyrus the meaning of whose name is "Like the Heir," had the honor of being called the "shepherd" and "anointed" and of having his troops called the "sanctified ones" (Isa. 13:3, 17, 19; 44:28; 45:1-4). It is evident that Cyrus was in some respects a type of Christ, who is the true "Shepherd" and "Anointed," and his redeemed saints being the true "Sanctified Ones." There is a type in the overthrow of ancient Babylon. Cyrus diverted the waters of the Euphrates river, which became dry, allowing the typical "anointed" "shepherd" and his "sanctified ones" to enter Babylon through the dried bed of the river, thus babylon was taken by surprise and overthrown in B. C. 539, the 70th year from the seige of Nineveh, B. C. 608 (Jer. 25:11).

The true "Shepherd" and "Anointed" with his "Sanctified Ones" are to surprise and overthrow the latter-day Babylon called the "GREAT." The way is now being prepared by the Jewish colonization of the Holy Land. The river bed of the Eupratean power (Turkey), with respect to Palestine and Mesopotamia, was dried up, having during the recent World War, lost both of these places.

The humble Nazarene will be the world's greatest Warrior. At first he appeared as a "Lamb," but he will return as a "Lion" and a Conqueror. The slain of the Lord will be from one end of the earth to the other (Jer. 25:33). He has the right to "make war" upon the non-submissive world dignities; they will be gathered and cast "into the great winepress of the wrath of God" (Rev. 14:19; 19:11; Psa. 2:2-5; 149:5-9). He will not willingly afflict, but those who will not submit to his rule must be routed out of the earth, and then, when the process of purging is complete, he will speak peace to the nations. It is the "Prince of Peace," and he only, who will have the honor of saying to the raging seas, "Peace be still." The League of Nations is doomed to utter and speedy failure; it can never accomplish the task intended for it. It is but a sign that is related and points to the present order of things and the coming of him who will accomplish, in God's appointed way, what the League will fail to do.

THE GLORIOUS CONSUMMATION

What a change will then ensue! Every vestige of the great and long unsatisfactory organization of human government swept away; the elements melted with the fervent heat of the righteous judgment of the then present Son of God invested with Almighty Power.

Satan in all his official workings bound under the iron chain of the Anointed and his "Sanctified Ones," who have had the honor of binding "their kings with chains and their nobles with fetters of iron."

Oppression of the poor and unfortunate brought to a speedy end. "The power of the oppressor broken out of the earth."

No more grinding of the faces of the poor as we see it today. No respect to the rich above the poor in judgment. Judgment shall be given to the poor without money or price. Lying, deceitfulness, stealing, murder, adultery, and excess will be extinguished by the unerring judgments of rulers with wisdom divine, who "shall not judge after the sight of the eyes nor the hearing of the ears." but with unerring justice.

Instead of de-generation will be re-generation of the human race. The physicians of that time will not simply experiment in the treatment of disease and infirmity, but they will be divinely instructed and their work will be assured of success until the happy condition will develop when it is testified: "The inhabitant of the land shall no more say I am sick." There will be "One Lord and his name One." One religion, and a man shall no longer say unto his neighbor, "Know the Lord. for they all shall know him from the least of them unto the greatest of them." "For they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion."

Can you imagine the present system of money exchange abolished, depressing taxation unknown, and every man dwelling under his own vine and fig tree, none daring to make him afraid ?

All the terrible and tremendous price that the nations now devote to measures of war and defence and internal policing of the lands is to be turned to measures of peaceful pursuit, pleasure, culture, beautification of the earth, increase of health, increase of learning, increase of glory, and praise to the Creator of all.

Human life will be lengthened as the prophet has foretold. "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days, for the child shall die an hundred years old (Isa. 65:20).

"Peace on earth and good will toward men," so long foretold, will then be realized in all its heavenly blessings.

"Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other" (Psa. 85:10).

"O let the nations be glad and sing for joy, for thou shalt judge the people rightously and govern nations upon earth" (Psa. 67:4). "Let the multitude of isles be glad thereof" (Psa. 97:1). "One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts" (Psa. 145:4). Yes, after God has terribly shaken the earth with his judgments, he will shower his blessings upon them. And "the desire of all nations shall come" (Hag. 2:7).

"They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks. Nations shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Isa. 2:4). "Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field, and the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever. And my people shall dwell in the peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places" (Isa. 32:16-18).

"The meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace . . . The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein for ever" (Psa. 37:11, 29). These prophecies are plain, and how can they be misconstrued ?

They describe so beautifully, simply and literally, God's great and glorious purpose. How fruitful and prolific the land will become when the curse is removed from the face of the ground and the land shall be made like Eden ! Listen again to the prophet: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall ovetake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed" (Amos 9:13). "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad thereat; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom like the rose; it shall blossom abundantly and rejoice even with song and singing" (Isa. 35:1, 2).

"I will make the place of my feet glorious" (Isa. 60:13). "And there shall be no more curse; and the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him" (Rev. 22:3). What a transformation !

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea, and I, John, saw (in vision) the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride, adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men and he will dwell with them and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be nay more pain; for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 21:1-4).

"Because of thy temple at Jerusalem, shall kings bring presents unto thee. . . . Sing unto God, ye kingdoms of the earth; O sing praises unto the Lord" (Psa. 68:29, 32).

"As surely as I live, saith the Lord, all the earth shall be filled with my glory." "The earth shall be filled with the knowedge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

"Eye hath not seen nor ear hear, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Cor. 2:9).

"Thy kingdom come." Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

The Parables of Jesus

Number Three

ANOTHER PARABLE put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like unto a grain of mustard seed which a man took and sowed in his field: which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.

WE NOTE one thing in this parable, namely, the disciples did not ask Jesus to declare it unto them. They evidently understood the nature of the kingdom spoken of in the parable. The preaching of the gospel embraced this kingdom, and the claim made by Jesus that he was the prophetic Messiah. To this claim the scribes and pharisees protested very strongly. Their opposition strengthened as the common people heard him gladly. They were so enraged against him that they sought to take his life. They could only see in Jesus an ordinary person, and awarded to him no greater claim than that he was the son of Joseph and Mary. His humanity was their stumbling block.

That this obscure person would become their future king was to the scribes and pharisees an impossibility. As we have previously stated, we again repeat, that the parables were spoken to Israel and can only be interpreted by understanding God's purpose and promise to the fathers which embraced their restitution and the possession of the land and the kingdom of God, which is the kingdom of heaven referred to in the parable.

This parable brings to mind the fulfilment of the declarations made by the prophet Daniel. The outline in this parable and the scriptural statements relating to this kingdom brings to our mind the future conditions of the kingdom of heaven. Note that the mustard seed is the smallest among all seeds. When it is grown' it becometh the greatest among herbs. It becometh a tree and the birds of the air lodge in its branches. The period of growth represents the expansion of the kingdom. That this kingdom could not exist until Jesus should come with power to set it up and establish it is evidenced in John 8:36 where Jesus stated, "My kingdom is not of this world (this kosmos or political arrangement) If my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence." Could testimony be stronger and clearer concerning the setting up of the kingdom ? The sowing of this seed is a future event, and can not take place until Jesus returns and prepares the field and the soil for its reception. We should keep in mind the statement that the gospel age must be devoted wholly to the calling out of the Gentiles a people for his name. The work of this age will prepare the saints who must become a part of the kingdom. When this work has been accomplished there will be an immortalized king and associate rulers. The subjects of this kingdom will be Israel restored. The mustard seed, to our mind, is planted when Judah and Israel have become "beloved subjects for the Father's sake." They are then the seed of the blessed of the Lord and their offspring with them. Thy shall not labor in vain nor bring forth for trouble (Isa. 65:23).

A perfect seed with perfect environments will enable the kingdom to grow and finally fill the whole earth with its fruitage. These conditions are implied in the parable. We will now give scriptural proof. We previously referred to Daniel's prophecy. Dan. 2:44 states very clearly that "in the day of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." The kingdom was to be set up. It can not be destroyed, shall not be left to other people, shall break in pieces, shall consume all these kingdoms, shall stand for ever. The parable is in perfect accord with Daniel's prophecy outlining the different phases given in the parable. In chapter 7:27 we have statements that aid us in our study of this parable. After the judgment referred to in the previous verses the prophet states, "The kingdom, the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

The testimony seems to be plentiful to prove that the kingdom of Israel has been in an overturned state since the days of Zedekiah, the wicked king of Judah (Ezek. 21:25-27). This kingdom restored will embrace Jesus as King, the immortalized saints as associate rulers. Each of the twelve apostles will be rulers over the twelve tribes. The subjects will be chosen from Judah and Israel who will accept the crucified Jesus as their King. These subjects will be mortal men and women when Jesus shall call many from the nations of the world (Isa. 66:18, 19). Thus we see that the material out of which this kingdom is formed with an immortalized king and immortalized saints and thoroughly converted subjects. These subjects will finally gain immortality. The Lord will so honor them that strangers shall feed their flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be their plowmen and vinedressers. They shall be named the priests of the Lord. Men shall call them the ministers of our God: they shall eat the riches of the Gentiles (Isa. 61:5, 6). No greater blessing could be conferred upon mortal men and women. They alone will possess and inherit forever the land and blessing promised to Abraham.

We close by reaffirming that this parable can rightfully be applied only to the coming age which we designate the kingdom age. This age will follow the gospel age or the age when Gentiles will be disciplined and prepare as rulers in that kingdom. "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment."

CHURCHES NOT GROWING

NEW YORK. June 26.—Dullness of summer has not prevented church authorities from asking local ministers for explanations why growths of church memberships in cities, showing extraordinary growths in population, have been exceedingly small, in some cities conspicuous by the absence of any growth. As far as yet announced by the census bureau five cities making the big jumps in population were New York, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, and Los Angeles. In none of them, in either Catholic or Protestant, was there any marked increase in church memberships, and in some Protestant bodies there was no growth at all.—Selected by Sister Letta Morgan.

Editorial

Sister Mattie Jeffrey, of Illinois, met with us at the Lord's table Sept. 12th. She was returning from a trip in Europe.

Visitors since last report: Brother James C. Thompson, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Brother Ellis Osborne, of Detroit, Mich.; Brother Franks, of Canton, Ohio; and Brother Chas. Moore, of Garrettsville, Ohio.

After several months of absence we note with pleasure the return home of Sister Frances Russell, from Florida; Sister Mott, from New Hampshire; Sister Annie Nutt, from New York; and Brother Paul Goss, from Southern Ohio.

September 5th, Mr. Carl Bleyl, formerly indentified with the Evangelical Association, was baptized into Christ. Brother Bleyl is a young man of promise, and we expect him to be strong in the word of God within a short time (1 John 2:14).

September 11th at about ten oclock in the evening, Mr. J. A. Buckmaster, from near Mount Vernon, Ohio, was baptized for the sake of Christ's name. Brother Buckmaster's attention truthwise was first arrested by sample copies of The Restitution being placed in his hand. For a year he has been a diligent student of the Scriptures, and reaching the point that Paul calls "full assurance of faith," he yielded himself to God in obedience.

Books Wanted

WE DESIRE to buy the following books. Any reader who has them to sell, please communicate with us immediately stating condition of book and its price.

The Gospel of the Kingdom, by Wiley Jones.
The Scripture Opened, by Robert Ashcroft.
The Mormon Waterloo, by W. L. Crowe.
The Word of the Kingdom, the Word of Eternal Life, and Bible Themes, by John O Woodruff.

The Deliverance of the Creation

WE HAVE a man in our community who is much devoted to the broader hope theory. I gave him some of The Restitutions in which you explained such texts as "God will have all men to be saved:" "God's ways are equal," etc. Being an honest man he acknowledged that your arguments are unanswerable; but before he can give up the theory he says you must explain Rom. 8:18-23 as satisfactorily as you have the other passages. To him this Scripture is the one knot you cannot untie.

Editorial Comment

THE LIBERTY OF THE GLORY

THE KNOT is easily untied. The apostle's meaning is partly obscured by the defective translation of the phrase rendered "the glorious liberty." "The whole creation" is also an ambiguous translation. Literally the first is "the liberty of the glory"; two nouns—not an adjective and a noun—being employed by the apostle. The construction is in beautiful antithesis to the phrase "the bondage of the corruption," with which it stands connected in the sentence. The deliverance of the creature, notice, is from "bondage" to "liberty"; not the liberty of the sons of God, but a liberty in some way related to the glory of the sons of God.

"THE WHOLE CREATION"

"THE WHOLE creation" is an expression of wide application. Probably this is the knot which our friend thinks cannot be untied. Larger Hope, except where it has reached maturity in Universalism, sees every individual of the race in the expression; while John Wesley, going beyond them at one leap, extended it to the lower animals, based upon this passage their resurrection from the dead. Others have embraced in it the inanimate creation; while others have limited it to believers in Christ. However, Paul uses the phrase to denote the human race as contradistinguished from the animal (Col. 1:23); for he says the gosepl, at the time he wrote, had been "preached to every creature under heaven." In the statement the apostle strictly followed the commission which Christ had given to the apostles when he sent them to "preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16:15). The Greek words translated "every creature" in these two passages are the same as those in Rom. 8:22 rendered "the whole creation." Now the gospel is not preached even to the Methodist, to say nothing of Wesley's cats and dogs; besides, "the whole creation" cannot refer to inanimate objects, because Paul speaks of it as "groaning and travailing in pain." The brute creature is also excluded, because he represents it as having "earnest expectation," which the beasts have not.

THE SONS OF GOD NOT THE CREATURE

THE GLORY spoken of in verse 21 is the exclusive privilege of "The sons of God." The privilege to be conferred on "the creature" is not "the glory," but the "liberty of the glory." Again, the evil from which "the creature" is to be delivered is not corruption, but "the bondage of the corruption." See here the distinction between "the creature" and "the sons of God." both as to present state and character, and as to future position and privilege. One inherits glory; the other is delivered from bondage into liberty. That "the whole creation" is destined to enjoy the identical privileges of the sons of God is the mistake into which "broad" people fall when they read the 23rd verse: And not only they, but we ourselves also, who have the first-fruits of the spirit . . . . groan within ourselves waiting for adoption the redemption of our body." The word "they," which misleads them, is not in the Greek text. The proper supplement is "so" "and not only so," meaning: "And not only does the whole creation groan and travail for this liberty, which we know God has connected with the glory to be revealed in us; but we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for that which God has specially promised to us, namely, the redemption of the body." Clearly here is a "redemption" for the sons in which the creation does not share. The similarity here predicated of both classes is that of desiring some prospective good, while the nature of that good is totally different in the two cases.

THE GLORY OF THE SONS NOT THE GLORY OF THE CREATURE

IDENTITY OF future privilege the people tied to future probation find again in verse 19: "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." But the reader will observe that this language is consistent with the distinction we have pointed out. The liberty to be enjoyed by the creature is not only at the same time that the manifestation takes place, but is dependent upon it. It is not said here or anywhere else that they are waiting for THEIR manifestation as the sons of God, but simply to wait for that manifestation. However ignorant the creature might be as to the means of its amelioration, the apostle was at no loss for a solution of the problem. He knew that the sons of God, after "redemption of the body," would reign as kings and priests on earth. "The whole creation," then placed under these incorruptible and glorified sons, shall be delivered from the oppression and misrule, that bondage of the corruption, to which corrupt human nature, in its individual and governmental relations, has so long subjected it. The proclamation of "liberty to the captives and the opening the prison doors to them that are bound," shall, in this "acceptable year of the Lord," have become the welcome reality to earth's remotest bounds. Milleniums of "earnest expectation" of what philanthropists have styled "the good time coming" shall have reached fruition, and "the gospel preached to Abraham"—"in thee shall all nations be blessed" shall then be enjoyed. "For the kingdom is the Lord's and he is the governor among the nations."

The Blessed and the Cursed

Pemmican Notes of the Editor's Sermon

If thou doeth well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doeth not well, sin lieth at the door. And unto thee shall be his desire and thou shalt rule over him (Gen. 4:7).

WE MUST remember in reading the first books of the Bible that the narratives teach great moral and spiritual truths in picturesque forms. We too must remember that words and language is an artificial invention We must never lose sight of the fact that men who lived in those early days did not have abstract conceptions. Now because the world was in its childhood, God spake to man as unto children; and we know that with us the education of the child begins with pictures and ends with words. Consequently, when we read statements in the book of Genesis, we have bold metaphors, and sometimes they are so striking that we hesitate to take them at their face value. In the verse before us we have the story of Abel who made a sacrifice to God that was well pleasing to the Lord. In the 11th chapter of Hebrews, Paul says that "by faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous" (vers 4). Cain's sacrifice was rejected, following which are the words, "If thou doeth well, shalt thou not be accepted?" As much as to say that there was nothing arbitrary in God rejecting Cain. If he did well, God would take him equally with Abel unto his confidence. Then follows the words, If thou doeth not well sin lieth at the door, and unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him."

Usually the view is taken that since Cain was the first born all the statement means is that by virtue of his being the first born, he was to have the ascendency over Abel. But notice, "if thou doeth not well." The whole statement hangs on an "if." Therefore, whatever the metaphors may mean, they are used to express consequences flowing from the disobedience of Cain. I believe that instead of referring to Cain as the first born, that the whole subject is sin. All that follows was a consequence of that sin. "If thou doeth well shalt thou not be accepted ? and if thou doeth not well, sin crouches at the door, and unto it shall be thy desire, and thou shalt rule over it" (Douay and Revised Versions).

The gist of the thought in the text pertains to the consequence of Cain's sin. The word "lieth" always means the crouching of a beast, and frequently a wild beast. Sin crouches at the door with a tigerous, murderous impulse to spring, and if it spring it is fatal. Sin will spring and destroy and kill you. Then we have a single individual transaction: "Unto thee shalt be its desire, and thou shalt rule over it." "Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee" (Gen. 3:16). The text has reference to the conjugal relation of husband and wife. If you do not well sin lieth at the door; and it will have a great desire unto thee. Just as the wife is linked to the husband, so will sin be wedded to you.

I desire this morning to apply the text to ourselves, and to see in the consequences of Cain's sin the consequences threatening us for sin. First then, let us think of the wild beast tethered to our door for wrong doing. Sin crouches at the door like the beast in the forest, ready to spring. We talk glidly about responsibility, guilt, and "the consequences that never can be effaced." Sometimes when responsibility for our act has been fastened upon a particular individual we say of him, that "it lies at his door," a form of expression that has probably been suggested by our text. We are prone to think that the passing evil thought is gone, that the deed of a moment is past. It is with difficulty we bring ourselves to see the permanency of sin. Doctrines of forgiveness and the love of God, etc., cannot destroy the permanency of sin. "Every man shall bear his own burden." "Whatsoever a man soweth," just exactly that, "shall he reap." If we sow murdock we reap murdock and if we sow wheat, we reap wheat. Forgiveness and the love of God and ten thousand other things are impotent to neutralize this everlasting law. Why, if just sinning were all, we might sin and be done with it; but the trouble is that after we have sinned, we are not done with it. The trouble is, sin committed is a fixture forever and ever. We have the witness of this stability in our conscience. Your memory holds all the past absolutely. In the landscape the mist will obscure it for a moment, but a puff of wind will clear the atmosphere and make the landscape visible as can be. There is no such thing as forgetting it. You forget nothing. There have been men rescued from drowning and they have testified that in an instant of time the whole panorama of their life was gone over.

Now notice the horrible longing of sin toward the sinner. "Sin crouches at the door, and unto thee shalt be its desire." Sin has a murderous and tigerous love for the sinner. One sin committed is just an introduction to another sin. We let in the small ones through the window and they open the door to let in the housebreakers. Sin has a tendency to multiply itself. Every seed of disobedience germinates. All sin is linked together in a slimy tangle like a field of seaweed. By sinning, we tether a destructive beast to ourselves, and these sinful beasts have a love for the sinner.

Lastly, we have a command and a promise: "Unto thee shalt be its desire, and thou shalt have dominion over it." I think this statement goes back to Gen. 1:26, where we have the beast of the earth, the fowl of the air, the fishes of the sea, all given to man for his dominion. Sin followed, and he lost his sovereignty. But under Christ the second Adam "dominion" is to be restored, even the "first dominion." To this distant triumph the text bids us look, and we can, if we but place our mind upon such a bright future, endure the cross and despise the shame of present conditions, "for the glory set before us."

"Hold Fast that which thou hast"

GET THE truth. Be sure it is the truth, then hold it fast with the grip of an iron giant, as a dear brother once said he was holding it. Don't sell it. Don't swap it off for some glittering falsehood. Paste jewelery may deceive the eye, but it will not stand the test of fire. It is truth that purifies it. It is belief of the truth that saves. Belief of a lie has no value. Consider those oft quoted words of Jesus, "In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

Believing what God says is the only safe course. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is death." Did Solomon know what he was talking about ? He was wise with the wisdom that God gave him when penning his part of the holy Book.

God has given but one way whereby the sinner can obtain peace and pardon: other ways may seem right, but dare we take them ? Dare we take the risk of losing eternal life by believing man-made gospels, and obeying man-made ordinances ? God is just. As the judge of all the earth he will certainly do right. But he is very particular when it comes to faith and obedience, as Saul found out to his cost. God had told him to utterly destroy the Amalekites, man and beast; but Saul did not believe that this was necessary. The people were sinners, of course, and their children would follow in their steps, if spared. He could see the wisdom of putting them out of the way. But those sleek, beautiful cattle, and those great herds of fine looking sheep; what had they done ? The people could use them for offerings, and what a saving it would be! They were not lame nor crooked, nor blind. Surely God would accept such perfect animals as these for offerings. But did he ? Listen to his words, "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." We have told you the story over and over again; take it to heart. Remember Nadab, and Abihu. What you think does not count, if it is not the truth of God. He "requires truth in the inward parts."

You may see little differences in the doctrines and practices of the various sects of Christendom; may imagine that a devout Catholic has as strong faith as a true Protestant because she never leaves Jesus out of her conversation; but question her as to the tenets of her faith and see. I doubt if you will agree in a single point; and so will it be with other sects though you may find more points of agreement.

The gospel has to do with earth and man, and not with some other planet; God did not sware to Abraham that he and his descendants should have Jupiter or Saturn, or Mars, or teh star Alcyone where heaven probably is. "The heaven of heavens is the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men." You will find the deed in the 15th chapter of Genesis and the bounds of the inheritance in Romans 4:13.

As to future life, God has made it depend upon Jesus and the resurrection. Jesus is the Life-Giver. Without him we have no hope of immortal life. If he had not been raised from the dead no one would ever have been raised. No one could by any means have attained to immortality and incorruptibility. Would this be gospel truth if we are already immortal ? It could not be.

Get the truth and hold it fast; and lend no support to false doctrines.

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.--Psa. 116:15.

Hattie May Hudson Weed, born in Cleveland, February 10th, 1875, lived in this city all her life, and died August 20th, 1920, at her late home, 3107 Warrington Road, Shaker Heights, after an illness of but a few hours. Burial was in Lake View Cemetery.

On October 28th, 1902, she married Arthur D. Weed. Three children were born, Albert, Frances, and Charles, all of whom survive her

Mrs. Weed, known to most as "Hattie May," united with church of God at the age of 16, and had been a regular attendant and consistent worker up to the time of her death.

She was a beautiful character, quiet and unassuming, led a pure Christian life, and her sweet disposition had its influence on all who knew her. Her life was devoted to her family, her neighbor and her church self never being a consideration.

Her home was unusual for its hospitality, her thought always being to do something to make others happy. Her great desire was to bring her family up in the nurture of the Lord, and to have them accept the truth she loved. Her oldest son Albert was in the faith at the time of her death, which was a great joy to her.

The love in which she was held was notably attested by the large number at her funeral and the many beautiful flowers sent by friends. We laid her to rest in a beautiful spot to await the summons of her Savior's voice on the resurrection morning.

CHAS. H. HUDSON.

Bennie A. Upton, son of David and Edna Upton, was born at Castle Rock, Wash., October 11th, 1884. When he was one year of age his parents moved to Sisson Creek on Gray's Bay where he lived until he was 14 years of age, when they moved to Hood River, Oregon. He made his home there until 1908, when he was united in marriage to Miss Lena Blair on July 1st, at Portland Ore.

On May 26th, 1915, he and his wife became obedient to the gospel of the kingdom at The Dallas, Oregon, being baptized by N. D. Tichenal.

In May 1916, they moved to Crooked Creek, Wash., living here and in this vicinity until the time of his death, which occurred on the 21st of July being accidently drowned while working alone on a boom of logs near the mouth of Crooked Creek. He leaves to mourn his loss his wife and five children, Evan, Chalmer, Walter, Myrtle, and Elizabeth; one infant son, Jesse Paul, having preceded him in death; also a father and mother, two brothers and a sister, and many other relatives and freinds. He died with a firm hope in the soon coming of the Lord, to give life and immortality to his people.

The funeral was held at the Crooked Creek School house on Saturday, July 24th, at 2:30 P. M. The large concourse of people attending the funeral bore witness of the esteem in which he was held in the community where he lived. Words of comfort and consolation were spoken from the word of God by the writer, and he was laid at rest in the cemetery near the school house.

No God in the Covenant

THOSE MORAL teachers who in their great yearning for universal peace hail the covenant of the League of Nations as the charter in fact of their goal do no great service to their dream when they refuse to analyze the contract, but accept the name given it as a true description of its probable effect, and argue therefrom that all who oppose it are enemies to peace and associates of the devil.

If this nation is walking the path of isolated selfishness, the record does not show it. If it has failed during recent months to associate itself whole-heartedly in general organized help for Europe, it is not because the nation has lacked either heart or courage, but because the condition laid down by President Wilson for such co-operation was the life of the United States. Even gladly, perhaps, this people, if essential to the preservation of civilization, might lay down its life for humanity, but in deeds of supererogation and needless sacrifice there is no merit. The President has asked that we surrender more than our associates have asked or would have us surrender. We have a trust to vindicate the system of government which makes and keeps man free. To subvert and subordinate the system, because noble words have been used to describe such a procedure, would be to betray that trust and to invite political as well as moral disaster.

No Godless covenant can ever bring the nations of the world into harmony. When the gentlemen in Paris decided to repudiate God and keep him out of the covenant, they made that covenant a thing of blasphemy. It has taken its place among the incunabula of human vanity and it will be a perpetual witness of the insecurity of human devices. There was no peace for Greek or Roman, for neither knew a god. Where are the compacts of yesterday and the great testimonials of accommodation which the heathen gathered together and wrote? The laws of the Medes and the Persians are no more, and the Babylon that towered over the world is the haunt of jackals. If humbly before God, invoking divine aid and inspiration, the gentlemen at Paris had written their agreements, there would be now conciliation of the nations and time would have ripened it into an enduring peace. But those who suggested that God be recognized were told that the diplomats had no time for such activity. There were heathens present whose feelings might be hurt. The great religious teachers present in this country ought to have protested then and have demanded God be appealed to. Those who cry aloud now for the covenant, Godless as it is, but waste their time when they assail the Senate. Where God is there is peace.—Manufacturer's Record.

GOLDEN TEXT: 2 Cor. 5:10

MILTON'S LAST POEM

I AM old and blind,
  Men point at me as smitten by God's frown,
Afflicted and deserted of my mind:
  Yet am I not cast down.

I am weak yet strong,
  I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong
  Father Supreme, to thee!

O merciful One!
  When men are farthest then art thou most near;
When friends pass by, my weakness shun,
  Thy chariot I hear!

Thy glorious face
  Is beaming toward me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
  And there is no more night!

On my bended knee
  I recognize thy purpose clearly shown.
My vision thou hast dimmed that I may see
  Thyself—thyself alone!

I have nought to fear,
  This darkness is the shadow of thy wing,
Beneath which I am almost sacred—here
  Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
  Trembling where foot or mortal ne'er hath been.
Wrapped in the radiance of thy sinless hand,
  Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go,
  Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng,
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
  Of soft and holy song!

PERSEVERANCE WITH PATIENCE AND SYMPATHY

NEVER FEEL badly when you cannot get your hearers to agree with you on everything you say, for the person that does so agree simply proves he has no mind of his own, has not the power to think for himself, or simply pretends to be with you in thought for the purpose of pleasing you. Where there are many people you will find many minds with various thoughts and different reasoning powers. If a man is honest with himself he will admit conviction when proper proof is shown; but let us remember this, that to what one person would be sufficient as proof of truth, to another—on account of early training, schooling and environment—would hardly make an impression on his mind.

Then another thing: a man who is too easily convinced has no thinking or reasoning ability. It once was said, "Where you find uniformity of opinion you discover that the greater part of the crowd is not thinking."

We hold truth that is precious, enobling and joyful. We are anxious to have others share our joy. We feel it incumbent upon ourselves to acquaint our friends and neighbors with the precious truth that "God is love," of "Christ and him crucified," of the coming kingdom and glory of our Lord and his soon return, how we can share in this glory and kingdom through faith in "Jesus as the Christ, the Son of the living God" and obedience to his will. But as a people we are impatient; we want others to see at once what has taken us a lifetime to find out and put together. We want others merely on our say so, to place behind them beliefs, traditions, and superstitions that have been instilled in them with their morning and evening prayers when at their mother's knee; beliefs, traditions and superstitions that perhaps we ourselves once held and fought hard against surrendering.

As before said, we hold precious truth, but most of us lack that sympathy, love, grace, pattience and meekness that enables us to present that truth in a manner that makes our hearers want to possess it. We cannot, we must not, expect others to simply swallow dry, cold hard facts, facts though they be. What we have to say must be presented in an interesting manner, and not only that, but we must live every word we profess to believe. We must show by our acts, our words, our manner and mode of life, that the love of God has taken possession of our very life and being. In other words, when we master ourselves then might we have influence over others. Never forget that at all times we must possess love, practice patience, showing meekness with perseverance, showing sympathy for those who differ with us.

DAILY THOUGHTS

Lean not unto thine own understanding	Prov. 3:5
Happy is the man whom God correcteth	Job 5:17
He shall cover thee with his feathers	Psa. 91:4
Blessed is the man that endureth temptation	Jas. 1:12
I will not leave you comfortless	John 14:18
A man of understnding walketh uprightly	Prov. 15:21
The same God worketh all in all	1 Cor. 12:6

HIS HABIT OF PRAYER

"AS FAR back as I can remember," said Dr. Charles Hodge, "I had the habit of thanking God for everything I received, and of asking him for everything that I wanted. I prayed while walking along the streets, in school or out of school. I did this because it seemed natural to do so. I thought of God as my constant companion, full of love and kindness, who would not be offended if children talked to him."

How happy all children would be if they were to talk with God as their Father which the Dr. did as a child, and had also the habit of thanking God! Too often when our prayers are answered we forget to give God thanks.

BANKS, CONFIDENCE — GOD, FAITH

BANKS ARE built on confidence. The cash on hand is but a material commodity. When a bank loses confidence, it can lose nothing more.

There is something captivating in gaining confidence; but it takes truth to hold confidence.

What is confidence, if it is not faith? To us God has unfolded his plan of salvation. He asks us to have confidence in him. He has sent his Son Jesus to be our wisdom, and righteousness and sanctification, and redemption. He asks us to have faith in Jesus. We show our confidence in banks by placing our earthly possessions in their keeping. Will we show as great faith in God by placing our eternal belongings with him? This is a serious question, and God awaits our answer. The time to decide is now. Tomorrow may be too late.

Adversity is often the forerunner of prosperity. One day in the school of adversity will teach a man more than a full term in the deceit of fortune.

The average man is a slave to suffering, and all the while he has, in his own hands, happiness. He will insist on dwelling on self when the world is full of work, work for others. To be happy forget self and in God's name relieve suffering in others.

Are we more inclined to find fault than to point out the good qualities in others? Can we be big while all the time looking for little things? We shall be forgiven just to the same extent as we forgive. Think this over.

LIFE'S VOYAGE

Hurrah! Hurrah! how we glide away
Afloat in a boat in a land-locked bay,
Nothing to fear of danger near,
Sea always rippling—sky always clear—
Soft zephrys to keep our path on the deep
And peacefully lull us to sleep.

But when morning dawns on the waking eyes,
And the winds and the crests of the sea arise,
And clouds rush over the ruthless skies,
There's a toss and a chill and a rude surprise,
When then is the helm, the oar and the sail
And the compass to pilot us through the gale?

As the heart may be stout to venture out
With a merry song and a hearty shout,
So the hand that is firm and the head that is clear
And the proper gear are required to steer
Through the kind of a world that we have here.

THEY KNOW IN WHOM THEY HAVE BELIEVED

THE MEN of faith—who are they?
What have they left to show?
What do they get from the life today
Where the flames of triumph glow?

They never reach the crowning mount,
They never come to fame,
But what they planned will some day count
In the growth of a greater game.

TRUEISMS

EARNESTNESS IS contagious. Whatever makes us think more will be the means of creating more and stronger faith. A stronger faith gives us a greater hope; and a greater hope makes us even more earnest. No man is great, nor will he ever be great, unless he is in earnest. The earnest man always interests and holds his audience—be that audience one or many.

It was a wise old Arabian who said, "The man who has health has hope; and the man who has hope has everything."

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, SEPTEMBER 28th, 1920. NUMBER 36

My School

I SAT in the school of sorrow;
The Master was teaching there,
But my eyes were dim with weeping
And my heart oppressed with care.

Instead of looking upward
And seeing his face divine,
So full of tender compassion
For weary sad hearts like mine.

I only thought of the burden
Of the cross that before me lay,
The clouds that hung thick above me,
Darkening the light of day.

So I could not learn my lesson,
And say, "Thy will be done,"
And the Master came not near me,
As the leaden hours went on.

At last, in despair, I lifted
My streaming eyes above
And I saw that the Master was watching
With a look of pitying love.

To the cross before me he pointed,
And I thought that I heard him say,
"My child, thou must take thy burden,
And learn thy task today."

"Not now may I tell the reason,
'Tis enough for thee to know
That I, the Master, am teaching,
And appoint thee all thy woe."

Then kneeling, the cross I lifted,
For one glimpse of that face divine
Had given me strength to bear it,
And say, "Thy will, not mine."

And as I learned my lesson,
And through the weary years
His helping hand sustained me,
And wiped away my tears.

And ever the glorious sunlight
From the realm of God streams down
Till the school tasks all are ended
And the cross is changed for a crown.

Is Man an Immortal Being?

A Discussion of Man, Soul, Spirit, Death, Hell, and the Resurrection

ANOTHER QUOTATION is Luke 16:23, "And in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom." If preachers would only stop to think that "hell" is from "hades"! The following are a few facts which should forbid the madness of our prophets when preaching on the "Rich man and Lazarus."

"Hades" and its corresponding "sheol" are mentioned 78 times in the Bible. In 77 instances they convey the idea of a place of darkness, silence, and thick darkness, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. In this single instance, hades is depicted as a place of life, activity and of excruciating agonies. What should be our attitude at this palpable contradiction? Force the 77 instances to the ruling of this one? No. Accept the account at what it really is a fable a parable! The whole account bears evidence in itself that it is not history. The best commentators call it a parable. (See Trench on Parables.) Certain codex's begin the account as a parable. It is not generally known that the Jews in the days of our Lord were well acquainted with this fable. Indeed Dr. Whitby states in his commentary that this very story is to be found to this day enshrined in the Talmud in that part of it known as the Gamara Babylonica.

Consider now the scriptural reasons against it as history. 1st Hades is not the place of punishment; 2nd. Punishment and rewards follow after resurrection and judgment; 3rd. The Rich man was not an unbeliever, neither was the beggar a believer. This is inferred; 4th. The word "soul" either of the rich man or of the beggar, is not mentioned; 5th. Abraham was, according to Scripture, asleep with his fathers; 6th. "Abraham's bosom" is only in this parable mentioned in Scripture—it is clearly a figure; 7th. Paradise is not in hades; it never was there. and it is not likely that it ever will be there because hades is sheol and sheol is a land of darkness and silence gravedom.

Clearly, then, the account is a parable: and being a parable, it must be interpreted according to rules regulating parables. It is not our intention at present to submit to interpretation. Our readers will have seen from what has preceded that to accept that the Rich man's "soul" was suffering "the agonies of the lost," may be Scripture according to Josephus and Dante, but it is not Scripture according to Moses and the prophets.

HELL, GEHENNA

It remains to be stated that there is another word translated "hell." That word is "Gehenna." It is found only in the New Testament and mentioned twelve times. In the Revised Version this word also is left untranslated: which is a decided advantage to the Bible student. Yet still another word also translated "hell." That word is "Tartarus" and only once mentioned. It is found in 2 Pet. 2:4 and refers to the casting down of sinning angels into Tartarus where they were reserved unto judgment. Our readers may now pretty well apprehend the confusion in the minds of our translators, in jumbling together and mixing up Hebrew and Greek words which vitally differ. Is it any wonder that gross darkness covers the people? This text no doubt started Dante on his monumental folly and it probably is the source also of that popular delusion, that "devils" are in hell.

The reprehensible but ready method (probably unwittingly adopted) of quoting a text where hell (hades) is mentioned, to prove something by quoting another text where hell (Gehenna) is mentioned, is now by the Revised Version made impossible. The trick has served its generation. It suffices now only for the densely ignorant or the careless Bible reader.

The word "Gehenna" refers to the valley of Hinnom where they originally offered human sacrifices to Moloch but which was in our Lord's day kept up as a burning ground for the filth of the city of Jerusalem. In speaking of the future punishment of the wicked (after resurrection, be it never forgotten) our Lord illustrates their destruction by referring to this valley where rubbish was "burnt up" and carcasses were eaten up by worms. No one ever thought of casting anything there for preservation. He used it as a type of the future awful hell for "the destruction of the ungodly." The site of this hell will doubtless be on the earth: and those who are saved from it will see it established and will also thank God see it wiped out from the "new heavens and the new earth."

It follows form all this that there is no Gehenna (hell fire) at present. 1st. Because the dead are asleep in sheol-hades; 2nd. Because punishment may not be until after the resurrection and judgment. No "devils" are in hades now tormenting the wicked, because there is but one devil and he does not happen to have ever been there except in Dante's imagination. It is astonishing how wide off Bible truths some of us are—Dante and some of the later century fossils reverently styled "Fathers."

It is perfectly scriptural to say of any dead man, good or bad, that he is gone to hell, meaning thereby hades—hell—where David and Isaiah, Job and Hezekiah expected to go and where our Lord also once entered; but "gone to hell" in popular conception is, gone to a place of torment—that is, the body is buried right enough in one hell, but his "immortal soul" is gone to hell fire. Well, whose fault is it that such is the popular conception? Educated as we are falsely as infants in Sunday schools and fostered in maturity in the same sad ignorance by pastors and teachers, what is to be expected? This may appear a harsh indictment, but we make it deliberately in the fear of God. If any one feels grieved and indignant over it, we cordially offer him that which every Christian gentleman is bound to offer, an opportunity to meet us in honest courteous debate, either privately or on a public platform, and point out wherein we are wrong and astray. In the meanwhile, we will summarize our conclusions derived from Scripture and leave them in closing to the consideration of our thinking readers.

THE TRUTH SUMMARIZED

1. A living man or a living soul is an organized being, made of the dust of the ground, having the breath or spirit of life. A dead man or a dead soul, is the same being, without the breath or spirit of life.

2. By man came death. In Scripture it is called "sleep." By man came also the resurrection of the dead.

3. Sleeping souls, both just and unjust, will be raised from the dead.

4. The judgment will determine, whether to eternal life, or to suffer the eternal punishment of the second death.

5. The nature of this second death is described in Rev. 20: It will not preserve, but it will "destroy both soul and body in Gehenna," in the "lake of fire."

6. Immortality is the great reward forfeited by the fall, but offered now to all "who will seek for it by patient continuance in well doing." The source of immortality is he who is the "Bread of Life," and although we may die the first death, which is appointed unto men, yet the promise is sure, "I will raise him up again at the last day." If we reject this Life Giver, then "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries."

7. The answer to the question Is man immortal? will determine the nature and duration of eternal punishment. If man is immortal by nature, then eternal punishment must mean eternal conscious torment. We do not deny that punishment is eternal. We assert it because the Scripture asserts it. Let there be no misunderstanding as to our position. Eternal punishment must certainly mean eternal conscious suffering provided the subjects of this punishment are immortalized, and immortalized, be it carefully noted, not only in the so-called "soul," but it must be shown that the bodies also of the wicked will be made incorruptible.

"To die the death which never dies" may be rank nonsense, but to live a life of misery forever, entails immortality and incorruption. We await proof and until it is forthcoming we hold that eternal punishment must certainly mean deprivation of life for ever in the "second death."

We object to discuss the nature and duration of future punishment apart from the question, Is man immortal? This is a question of the ages. It is the great question disposing all others: the battle ground to fight the hoary creeds of churches. Tremendous issues hang on it. Awful, vast issues. The system known as "Calvinism" with its stupendous incredibilities, its blood-curdling doctrine of foreknowledge and predestination and its infants "a span long" damned in hell fire "for the praise and glory of God," swings with it. Prayers to the Blessed Virgin and intercessory worship to dead saints; Masses for the dead and Purgatory, Theosophy, Mormonism, Mahommedanism and Budahism, all hang together, or are broken to shivers with it.

It is supposed when Paul stated "to die is gain," that he expected "to go to glory" at death. Let us examine the passage. Phil. 1:20, "According to my earnest expectation . . . that Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be life or by death." There is no mistaking Paul's meaning here—his desire being that Christ should be exalted, whether he lives to preach him personally, or whether he is called upon to suffer martyrdom for his sake, and thus by his blood to give seed to the church. Now, the next sentence is a parallelism and simply repeats this sentiment "For to me to live is Christ (i. e. advantage to Christ), and to die is gain"—to Christ to be sure—not gain to Paul. He was a close prisoner at the time he was writing that epistle, and his thoughts evidently were running on suffering for Christ, to snatch a martyr's crown at "his appearing."

Turn to the 2nd chapter 27th verse of the same epistle and read: "Epaphroditus indeed was sick nigh unto death, but God had mercy on him." Mercy on him! How? Because death was the penalty through Adam's sin and God saved him from it, on that occasion. The statement is unintelligible if death was "gain" to Epaphroditus.

G. W. WINCKLER.

The morning is the gate of the day, and should be well guarded with prayer. It is one end of the thread on which the day's actions are strung, and should be well knotted with devotion. If we felt more the majesty of life, we should be more careful of its mornings. He who rushes from his bed to his business, and waiteth not to worship, is as foolish as though he had not put on his clothes, or cleansed his face, and as unwise as though he dashed into battle without arms or armour. Be it ours to bathe in the softly flowing river of communion with God before the heat of the wilderness and the burden of the way begin to oppress us. —The Morning Star.

Israel and the Nations

Number Four

TEXTS: If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost (2 Cor, 4:3).

For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and prosper in the things whereunto I sent it (Isa. 55:10, 11).

Behold the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save: neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear (Isa. 59:1, 2).

If any one is willing to do his will, he shall know about the teaching (John 7:17, Weymouth).

Now therefore, if ye will hearken unto my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, ye shall be my treasure from among all peoples; for all the earth is mine; and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation (Exod. 19:5, 6).

THE LAST quotation shows that if Israel would be obedient she would be God's treasure from among the people. That must mean that she would be composed of all nations, or rather, the righteous of all the nations. The one preceding it assures us that if anyone desires to do God's will he shall know of the doctrine, or in other words, be taught his duty. The one before it shows why God does not save all men, and that he is able to save "whosoever will" separate himself from his own iniquities. The one preceding this shows God's word will accomplish that for which it was sent, and the first text shows to whom the gospel is hidden, "Them that are lost." Now if they were not lost beyond all hope the gospel would not be hid from them; because if they were willing to do God's will they would know of the doctrine, and turn unto God.

The gospel was preached unto Israel (Heb. 4: 1,2), revealed unto the prophets (1 Pet. 1:9-12). "Unto them were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. 3:2). Were all beside Israel excluded from the gospel during the Mosaic dispensation, as Brother Adam's question implies? Yes. Could not Gentiles be inducted into, and become a part of Israel? Yes. Listen to the law: "And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the Lord, let all his males be circumcised, and let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one born in the land; but no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof. One law shall be to him that is home born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you" (Exod. 12:48, 49).

Strangers who comply with this law are Israelites, and no longer considered Gentiles. We are told of Nicholas of Antioch, one of the seven deacons of the first Christian church, he was "a proselyte," and the first Gentile convert was Cornelius of a later date. Then it is settled that in the old dispensation all who become God's people must become Israelites. Israel according to commandment must love the stranger (Deut. 10:19). If we love anyone it is our wish to do them good, and such was Moses' way of looking at the matter; for he says unto Hobab, "We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said: I will give it unto you; come thou with us and we will do thee good; for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel" (Num. 10:29). Further he says to him: "And it shall be that if thou goeth with us, yea, it shall be, that what good soever the Lord shall do unto us, the same will he do unto thee" (verse 32). This again shows how anxious Israelites were that others should be incorporated into their nation, and become proselytes. Ruth the Moabitess must have been taught the law concerning proselytes, and knew that Naomi's people could be her people, and her God, Ruth's God, or she would never have made such a remark (Ruth 1:16).

After Queen Esther had defeated Haman's wicked design to destroy Israel, we are told, "Many people of the land became Jews; for fear of the Jews fell upon them" (Esther 8:17).

Jonah went so far as to preach to Gentile Ninevites (Book of Jonah). Israel must read the law unto the stranger (Deut. 31:12; Johs. 8:32-35); all of which would be folly if the stranger had no opportunity to be benefitted by it. "Moreover concerning the stranger that is not of thy people Israel, when he shall come out of a far country for thy name's sake, for they shall hear of thy great name, and thy mighty hand, and thine outstretched arm, when he shall come and pray towards this house; hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; that all peoples of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as does thy people Israel, and that they may know that thy name is called upon this house which I (Solomon) have built" (1 Kings 8:41-45).

This again shows the interest righteous Israelites had in the strangers, and no doubt they did much mission work in trying to turn them to their hope. There was listening to Peter's great pentecostal sermon proselytes from so far away from Jerusalem as Rome (Acts 2:10).

At Antioch, "Many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas; who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God" (Acts 13:43). Here were proselytes right among the Gentiles, and they too in the grace of God, and could continue so if they heeded the teaching of the new dispensation.

The Ethiopian whom Philip baptized was no doubt a Jewish proselyte, and for that reason not the first Gentile convert.

Even the wicked pharisees "compassed land and sea to make (the small number of) one proselyte" (Matt. 23:15). Because their proselytes were children of Gehenna is no fault of God's but the corrupt teaching of those wicked people.

Daniel pleaded with Nebuchadnezzar, "Let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness" (Dan. 4:27). This again shows the anxiety of righteous Jews for their heathen neighbors. Had Nebuchadnezzar complied with Daniel's request would he not have been saved? I think there can be no dispute here; all will agree that he would. Then all must agree that heathen by listening to the righteous Israelites of the past dispensation could be saved. Now as here were proselytes in Rome, and Antioch when the apostles began to preach, it must not be concluded that they were exceptions, and the Jews did not work the same in other cities; but on the contrary, there must have been many in all cities.

The Hellenists of Greece are considered by many as a kind of Jewish proselytes; and from the reading of the New Testament we learn the word Greek is translated from "Hellen" in every place except one (Acts 20:2), and that the Hellenists were attendants at the Jewish synagogue; which would be unlikely if not proselytes, or connected with the Jews in some manner. Anglo Israelites have tried to prove the Hellenists a portion of the lost ten tribes; but if so they are here mixing with the Jews, and would soon become so amalgamated with them that all would be one people. No doubt that is where the unchristian Hellenists landed. He is now a Jew. Certain Hellenists came up to the temple to worship, and wished to see Jesus (John 12:20). A great multitude of them of the Jewish synagogue in Iconium became Christians (Acts 14:1). Jewish women married them (Acts 16:1). Paul and Barnabas every sabbath found them in the synagogue (Acts 16:4). Paul was condemned for bringing them into the temple (Acts 21:18). This last reference shows that they must have been Gentiles, and hence is death and destruction to Anglo-Israelism so far as Hellenists are concerned; no Jew would ever kick against a member of the ten tribes coming into the temple. This leaves no room for any other conclusion than Hellenists were Jewish proselytes and from this the Jews hatched up a false hood about bringing some of that people into the temple, while even they, as we have shown, allowed them there themselves.

Paul asks, "Have they not heard?" and answers, "Yes, indeed; to the whole world the preachers' voices have sounded forth, and their words to the remotest parts of the earth" (Rom. 10:18, Weymouth). Paul is here quoting David, who says, "Their line is gone through all the earth, and their words to the ends of the earth" (Psa. 19:5, Jewish translation). Whose words? The Heavens. All of them have heard in some way. This brings to mind what a heathen taught man told a missionary: "I went out at night, and looked at the stars in all their glory, the moon in its fulness, and asked the question, Whence all these? Were they made by gods of wood and stone? What could I answer by nay, nay Then began I to worship the one only Creator, whom I could not see." The missionary found this man, and taught him as the prophet had declared, "They shall all be taught of God, and great shall be the peace of thy children;" and "every one that is willing to do his will shall know of the teaching." This man learned because willing, while his contemporaries died without this knowledge.

God hath spoken to all, and the only reason all do not hear is because "the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God should shine unto them" (2 Cor. 4:4).

But again, "If indeed ye are still firmly holding to faith as your foundation, without ever shifting from your hope that rests in the good news that you have heard, which has been proclaimed in the whole creation under heaven" (Col. 1:23). The whole creation under heaven certainly must include "all the world"; but when the gospel of the kingdom is preached in all the world the end will come (Matt. 24:14). Why has not the end come? The gospel as preached by the prophets, and heavens has been preached throughout the habitable; but it must go that far by the Christian, and then the end will come. The gospel WAS proclaimed to all creation, and must be again before the end. This makes it all plain, and shows that future probation is unnecessary. To some our gospel may be hid; but it is because it would not benefit them; they are perishing, and would continue in the same condition did they hear. We can see a picture of this in every neighborhood: some may go to church every day for weeks, but when through they know nothing of the gospel. Brother Adams' reports, in which we are so much interested, bear testimony to this fact. Few learn, or even care to learn. Then the question is, Is the gospel hid from any who would believe if it could be shown them? If so, then it will get to them here in this life, and God's will be proven true They "shall know of the doctrine," and those who never know, are perishing. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without a sin-offering unto salvation" (Heb. 9:27). Will he appear a second time unto (Greek, eis, for) salvation of those who are lost; the ones from whom the gospel is hid? Who will so contend? If he will appear to others than those who are looking for him he makes a useless statement here. I wonder who would wish to change the word so that it would read, "Unto them from whom the gospel is hid now, he shall appear for their salvation." No one would be guilty of such a change; and yet they try to claim this very notion is truth. But "if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost, whom the god of this world has blinded." To make the Scriptures teach otherwise is to twist them out of shape.

Men come out of their graves either saved or condemned: for the resurrection of krisees cannot be a resurrection for salvation, any more than the resurrection of life is for condemnation. Krisis truly means judgment, but what is the judgment that takes place at the resurrection? It is executive (Jude 15). The wicked are reserved to the day of judgment to be punished (Peter); they are brought forth unto the day of destruction (Job). Then if the day of judgment is to the resurrected wicked a day of destruction, it cannot be to them a day of salvation, and if the ignorant are raised in the number mentioned by John they are classed either with those who have done good or those who have done evil; and that shows that decisive judgment has come to a conclusion or made a decision in their case; else they could not be said to be either doers of good or evil. Then executive judgment is all that there is to follow. The gospel was hid from them; because the god of this world had been let into their hearts, and blined their mental gaze, and they are, if resurrected, condemned. "As many as sinned without law shall perish without law." Believest thou this? It is God's word. "Thy word (O God) is truth".

"As the Lord Commanded Moses"

HOW OFTEN these words are repeated in the account given us of the tabernacle and its furniture as constructed by Bezaleel and Aholiab, those faithful servants of God. Not a thing was changed to please their fancy. The boards, the taches, the ouches, the curtains, the embroidered designs, the canldesticks, the table, the laver, the cherubim, the altars, were all made after the pattern given to Moses in the Mount. Not a bell, not a pomegranate was lacking. What a lesson for us there is in this chapter to just do as the Lord commands us to do; not to follow our own ways, or to worship him according to our own notion, but according to the pattern he has set before us in the lips of Jesus. God requires implicit obedience. Let us see to it that we obey; that we faithfully assemble together to offer up praise and prayer to him though we have no one to preach the word for us. We have the word, and a chapter read even without comment, is often as effective as a sermon. And any one of us can offer a short simple prayer, be we ever so timid. And we can sing repeat the chapter that comforts us, and tell of our seasons of peculiar joy and blessing. Do this, dear shepherdless ones, and be ready for the coming of Jesus.

God has commanded you to assemble yourselves together: keep his commandments. Remember Bezaleel and Aholiab.

O watch and fight and pray,
  The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
  And help divine implore.
Ne'er think the victory won
  Nor lay thine armor down,
The work of faith will not be done
  Till thou obtain the crown.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

A good dose of divine grace, with a few grains of gratitude for God's mercies, and a frequent bracing walk of benevolence in helping other people, will do more to quicken appetite and put healthy blood into a weazened frame than all the drugs of the apothecary. Not only is a merry heart a wonderful tonic to the body; it is a clarifier and invigorator of the mind. The mental machinery will work longer and far more smoothly when the oil of cheerfulness lubricates the wheels.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

SOUTHERN TEXAS CONFERENCE

THE FIRST annual meeting of the Southern Texas Conferncee of the Church of God will be held at Kingsville, Texas, Oct. 30th, to Nov. 7th, inclusive.

We would like to meet or hear from all who are interested in getting this work started, as we intend if possible to get an evangelist to work telling the good news of the coming kingdom.

The brethren at Kingsville will care for all who will come, and please notify Brother J. M. Owens of that place.

Brother A. S. Bradley will be with us. Come and help us: we need you.

The Truth Makes Free

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free (John 8:32).

IT IS remarkable that whenever we preach or present the truth, whether it be to an individual or a promiscuous multitude, two marked effects are always apparent, viz., the truth attracts or repels. The life and teachings of Jesus are the embodiment of the truth. The heart that is full of pride and conceit readily recognizes that the truth, if embraced, necessitates the conforming of the life and character to it. Pride and conceit shrink from this, because such a heart prefers "darkness to light, because their deeds are evil." A careful reading of Luke 4:14-30 will make this point clear.

On the other hand those who accept and obey the truth are humble and desirous to do those things that always please him. Jesus himself expressed this thought very forcibly by saying: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

What a power the Church of God would be today if the teachings of Jesus had been, since the apostles fell asleep, kept and practiced as the apostles themselves lived and preached them. But alas! the disposition of human pride is to wander away from the simplicity of the truth, to seek out new theories and vain philosophies of our own creation, to pry into and teach those of other men who desire to be considered wise and great according to this world's estimate.

Paul in exhorting the elders of Ephesus exhorted them to feed the church of God, warning them that after his departure grievous wolves would enter in among the flock, leading them away from the truth (Acts 20:28-35). To my mind the greatest and the most responsible office a child of God can hold is an elder in the church of God. No one can read Titus 1:1-11 and 1 Tim. 3:1-7 without being impressed with the sacredness of this office. Brethren, as we look into our own hearts we ask how many among us are competent?

The truth can never be taught or understood except only by following God's appointed channels, and they are the teachings of Jesus, his apostles, and the prophets: all outside of this authority is vain and not of the truth.

In what way, then, does the truth make us free? By obeying it there comes into our lives a power, a mighty force, which overcoming our fleshly minds, bringing forth the fruits of righteousness as manifested in our daily lives, peace, joy, love, meekness, faith, patience and purity.

From what does the truth free us? It frees us from ignorance, superstition, and delusion. Millions are still under the galling yoke, and will continue to do so, so long as they bow down and worship those who hypocritically claim to be appointed and anointed by God. Before me lies a copy of "The Fraternal Leader," a Roman Catholic publication. Notice the date, "September, 1920." Can it be possible that men in our fair and enlightened land can accept such stuff as this? Where are the authorities? Why are not the editors arrested and punished for blasphemy? My blood boils as I read it, and yet I lift up my heart to God and thank him that I know the truth, and the truth has made me free.

Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly and put an end to all this infamy and wretchedness.

A CAPUCIN STIGMATA

New York, July 10.—Members of religious orders returning from Rome are verifying reports received here that a Capuchin monk in Italy bears the sacred stigmata on his body.

He is Father Pius of Pietra-Eloira, who is stationed in the small town of San Giovanni-Rotondo, and hundreds of witnesses have seen the wounds, which give forth a very sweet and fragrant odor.

The stigmata are permanent and visible at a distance. According to eye-witnesses, the wound on the heart measures a little less than three inches in length and is shaped like an inverted cross. On Fridays the pains are more intense than usual and the blood flows copiously. The temperature of the saintly Capuchin rises as high as 130 degrees. Several reputable medical men who have examined the wounds attest to their supernatural character.

Not only has Father Pius the stigmata but it is declared that he also has the gift of prophecy and the faculty of bilocation. Not long ago his father came to the monastery to thank the Rev. Father Superior for having permitted his son to spend a few days with his people. The son during the time had never departed from the monastery.

According to the best information; Father Pius is the first son of St. Francis to be distinguished by the sacred stigmata since the Seraphic Father himself, although several other persons including Anna Moria Taigi, lately beautified, are known to have had the stigmata.—The Fraternal Leader, Sept. 1920.

Who Are Blessed?

GOD BLESSED the animal kingdom, fowls, fishes, and creeping things, saying, "Be fruitful and multiply" (Gen. 1:22). God created man and blessed him saying, "Be fruitful, multiply and replenish the earth, and have dominion over every living thing." The blessing to things created before man, was to multiply; to man, to multiply and have dominion over the subjects of his first blessing (vs. 28)

After God had created all things in six days there was another day added to round out the week. "And God blessed the seventh day: because in it he rested from all his work" (Gen. 2:3; Exod. 20:11). Again, God blessed the male and female he created and called their name Adam (Gen. 5:2). God blessed Noah and his sons with the same command he had given to Adam 1656 years before saying, "Be fruitful, multiply and replenish the earth; (Gen. 9:1) 127 years after the blessing of Noah God called Abram and blessed him and said his name should be great, and in and through him should all families of the earth be blessed (Gen. 12:3; 18:18). When Abram was 99 years old, God blessed him by changing his name to Abraham (which means a father of a great multitude), and gave to him all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession (Gen. 17:8).

Why did God grant such blessings to Abraham? Because he obeyed God (Gen. 22:18). What had God commanded Abraham to do? "Take thine only son Isaac, and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt offering." Did Abraham do so? Yes, he went so far as to bind Isaac and lay him on the altar, upon the wood and took the knife to slay him (Gen. 22:2-10). James says Abraham was justified by works in offering Isaac on the altar, and God (in a figure) received him as raised from the dead (James 2:21; Heb. 11:17-19). This command was to try or tempt Abraham's faith. He was faithful, and he was accepted of God and blessed because he obeyed.

Now is it not reasonable, and scriptural to believe that God will bless all of mankind that obey his word? Yes. God established an everlasting covenant with Abraham and his seed, and that covenant was to bless all those that obey his commands; and after the seed was established in Christ the greatest blessing that God has promised to mankind, "the gift of eternal life," comes through the promised seed, "Christ." All that come to Christ, believe his gospel, and are baptized into him, share in the blessing promised to Abraham and his seed. How? By obedience to God. Who are blessed and why? All mankind that obey God.

The Tragedy of Money

PAUL NEVER said a truer word than when he said a good many years ago, "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil." War, Murder, Greed, Lust, Disease, Crime, all have made pages of world history, with the love of money the text and context of their blood-stained chapters. The history of nations cannot be written truly without these chapters.

It is a truism to say that money cannot buy everything. It cannot buy the most priceless thing worth having. Money cannot buy love. One of the saddest things I ever heard was the frank confession of a wealthy young woman who said, "I do not know, and have no way of knowing, how many of the young men who sue for my hand, really love me for myself. There is always the fear on my part that it is my money they are after."

Money cannot buy friendship. That is too priceless a thing to be in the market. Money cannot buy health. Money cannot buy joy. It can buy a thing called amusement, and it has a small power to procure what is called pleasure, but when it comes to the deep-seated possession of real joy, that is so far beyond the purchasing power of money that dollars become contemptible by comparison. Money cannot buy contentment. Ask all the rich people who are contented, to go and sit down on the steps of your state house, and then ask all the people who have only moderate means but are happy with them, to do the same, and the few rich would be crowded off the steps by the crowd of comparatively poor.

The age of barter has been called the age of the childhood of the race. But the absence of money had its advantages. I sometimes wonder if the world will ever find a way to supply its needs by some method which will avoid the tragedy which has always accompanied the love of money.

Suppose for example, the farmer who reads this editorial should give me a dozen eggs for it. I admit that would make the editorial come high. But on the other hand, he might make good by exchanging a bushel of wheat or corn-fed hog for a trip to Europe. On the basis of a fair exchange of the things we have for things we need, it would be a daily joy to do our best for the clothes and shelter and education and food and health we all must have in order to have the life abundantly. The working out of such a plan of exchange would tax the ingenuity of the best minds.

John Galsworthy, in a recent notable article, says that the world ought to stop trying to make money and pursue trade, and to set itself to the new task of seeking health and happiness. Surely it must be conceded that the world's mad rush to secure wealth has not succeeded in making people either healthy or happy. The love of money still spells tragedy to the human race after two thousand years of the Son of God, "who had not where to lay his head."—Selected by Sister Letta Morgan.

Northwest Conference Report

DEAR RESTITUTION:

PLEASE PUBLISH this delayed report in the next issue of your paper.

The Northwest Conference of the Church of God was held at Felida, Wash. July 1 to7. 1920.

We were fortunate to have with us at this time Brothers Williams and Patrick, and we surely received a great benefit from their sermons. Brother Williams talked to us on Friday evening on "faith." Sunday morning we had a Bible lesson on the forgiveness of sin, and it was continued in the afternoon. In the evening Brother Patrick spoke to us on "The Importance of One Faith, One Hope, and One Baptism."

Sunday morning Brother Patrick had a Bible lesson on baptism, after which Brother Williams gave us a discourse from Ecclesiastes.

Sunday afternoon we had our regular business meeting.

Reading of Secretary's report.

Reading of Treasurer's report.

Reading of financial committee report. All were accepted.

Election of officers resulted as follows:

Brother Wallace Wolfe, President.
Brother Jimmie, Wolfe, Vice President.
Sister Minnie Kerr, Treasurer.
Sister Grace West, Secretary.

The resolution committee were Sister Palmer, Sister Morgan, and Brother Hathaway. They drew up the following resolutions:

Resolved, that we as members of the Northwest Conference do render to God our most heartfelt thanks for the blessings of the year, and especially that there has not been the loss of a single member by death, or any that lost their sons during the terrible war; and that we have been permitted to come together an unbroken band, looking for the coming of our Lord with everlasting peace and righteousness.

Resolved, that we try to express our appreciation to our brothers, Williams and Patrick, for their coming to us, and for the splendid messages they have brought, and that we will try and carry the messages with us to our homes to held encourage and strengthen us amid the cares and temptations of life, and we will pray for God's blessing upon their work as they go to declare the soon coming of our Lord.

Resolved, that we extend to the church of Felida our most sincere thanks and gratitude for the kind and loving reception they have given us, and the royal manner in which they have entertained us, and assure them that there is a tie of love that binds our hearts to them that is stronger than any earthly tie, realizing that we are all the children of our heavenly Father and heirs through Christ to an eternal inheritance in his kingdom.

Resolved, that we will try, during the coming year to live nearer to the Master and be obedient to all his commands in our daily walk before him, and try to keep up the work of the cause, knowing that if only two or three are gathered in his name, he will be there to bless us.

Signed: LIBBIE PALMER.
MRS. E. A. MORGAN,
H. B. HATHAWAY, Com.

Sunday evening Brother Patrick spoke to us on "The Signs of the Times."

Monday morning we had a Bible lesson by Brother Williams on "Reconciliation" and a sermon by Brother Patrick on "A Day's Journey With Christ." In the afternoon Brother Williams talked to us on "The Righteousness of God," and in the evening Brother Patrick on "The Signs of the Times."

Tuseday morning we had a sermon by Brother Williams on "The Righteousness of the Law by Faith" (Rom. 3.19-26). In the afternoon, Brother Patrick addressed us on "The Church," and Brother Williams in the evening on "70 Weeks."

This closed the Conference, but our brothers went to Corvallis, Ore., and held meetings there for three days and gave us some more splendid messages. May God bless them in the furtherance of his work.

A. W. DARBY, Pres.
GRACE M. WEST, Secy.

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.--Psa. 116:15.

IRA MATTIX, son of Joseph and Mary Mattix, was born in Kosciusko County, Ind., June 27, 1849. He had eight brothers, namely, John, Files, Samuel, Robert, Andrew, Joseph, Perry, and Simon, and one sister Mary Jane.

He heard the gospel message and united with the Church of God many years ago under the ministry of Elder L. E. Connor. He has been a faithful Christian, living a life consistent with his profession. He has been a great sufferer in the flesh for the last four years, but endured the burdens of his lot with patience and in constant hope of relief and recovery. This tenacity to life clung to him to the end, and his last expressed wish was that he might get well. He had been blessed with a very strong physical constitution and spent his strength in tilling the soil and was known among his acquaintances as a great worker. This natural strength and endurance made it all the more difficult for disease to break him down and added to his sufferings. He fell asleep in Jesus Sept. 2, 1920, aged 70 years, 2 months, and 5 days. He leaves his companion Jennie A. Mattix, one foster son, Charles Cooper, one brother, Simon, nine nieces, eleven nephews, and many other relatives to remember his life of labor and love.

Funeral services were held at the Poplar Grove church, Sunday, Sept. 5, 1920. The house was filled with friends and relatives and we spoke words of comfort from 1 Cor. 15. Burial was made in the adjacent cemetery where he was laid to rest to await the coming of Jesus and his resurrection.

JOHN M. GUNN was born in Fintry, Scotland, Sept. 3, 1839, and died at his home near Ober, Ind., Sept. 7, 1920, aged 91 fears and 4 days. He had been ill but about two weeks.

He was married in the old country to Janet Cullens, June 21, 1860. He came to this country with his family in 1881. They have lived in Chicago, Hobart, in the East, and finally down on a farm between Knox and Ober. He was the father of nine children. The wife and mother died some 14 years ago, and six of the children have also preceded him in death. Three daughters survive him, namely, Mrs. Katherine Gordon, and Miss Jessie, at home, and Mrs. Geo. Smart, of Chicago; also seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren

He was a member of the Eagle Creek Church of God, near Knox, Ind. He had been converted in Scotland to the truths of the Bible and was a careful and constant student of the good old Book. Out of his studies he had contributed some articles for publication that were very creditable expositions of the subjects treated.

Funeral services were held from the late home on Friday, Sept. 10, and burial was made in the Knox Cemetery. Here our brother sleeps in Jesus awaiting the voice of the archangel and the trump of God and the thrill of resurrection life.

THREE ROADS

A ROAD runs through the valley
Beside a pleasant stream.
Among the lazy hemlocks
That in warm sunshine dream:
My friends have often walked there
And always sing its praise:
I, too, have tramped along it
On cool September days.

Another road that wanders
Among the distant hills,
A lonely road, abandoned,
Invariably fills
My heart with deeper pleasure.
No friends have ever told
Of walking on this hill-road
That flaunts October's gold.
Perhaps they may have tried it,
But I shall never know,
For they enjoy the low-roads
And tell the neighbors so.

And then there is the third road,
That all good men have trod,
It is a strait pathway
"It leads," I've read, "to God.
It climbs the rugged mountains;
Perhaps you'll find a trace
Among good deeds and blessings
By those who run the race.
It brings full joy and pleasure,
And so it seems to me
That I shall find this last road
The best road of the three.

DAVID

IN POINT of time David stands midway between Abraham and Christ, distant from each other about a thousand years. In point of historical importance his position is much more commanding. From whatever side we view the life of David it is remarkable.

It may be that Abraham excelled him in faith; and Moses in the power of concentrated fellowship with God, and Elijah in the fiery force of his enthusiasm; but none of these were so many sided as the gifted son of Jesse.

We read of Cyrus the Great, of Pompey the Great, of Peter the Great, Alexander the Great and Frederick the Great; but greater than all was David the Great. He was great as a scion, great as a servant, great as sovereign, great as soldier, great as a singer, great as a sinner, great as a sufferer, great as a saint, great as a sire, and great as a symbolizer.

Samuel, the prophet of the Most High, went to Jesse's house to seek the Lord's man for a king of Israel. When he had made sacrifice, and the people were assembled among others came severally seven sons of Jesse into the presence of the prophet who said, "The Lord hath not chosen these . . . art here all thy children?" Then David, the youngest was brought in from the shepherding of the sheep, and at once the prophet recognized him as the future king of Israel. Without evincing any surprise that this youth should be preferred before his older brothers, he stepped forward and poured the consecrated oil upon his head.

No one can know the day nor the hour when God passes by, seeking for chosen vessels and goodly pearls. When least expecting it we are being scrutinized, watched and tested in daily commonplaces to see if we shall be faithful in more momentous issues. Let our loins be girt, our lamps trimmed and burning, our nets mended and cleaned. Ready, always ready.

God working through Samuel, changed the government of Israel from judgship to kingship, and Saul became the first king.

Few men had a fairer chance than Saul. Choice in gifts, goodly in apperance, favored by nature and in opportunities, prepared and chosen by God, anointed by Samuel, and elected by the people, he might have had one of the greatest names in history; but step after step the king disobeyed, offering burnt offerings at Mickmash before Samuel came, then indignation against Jonathan. The final step was when in direct disobedience to God he spared Agag, king of the Amalekites, and the choice spoil. By this wilful act God's spirit departed from him and from that moment his course was downward; he fortified his royal prerogatives and the light faded from him and he became as other men.

When God's presence is lost every power in us rises in revolt. It is a bitter wail when a man realizes the measure of the calamity which has befallen him and with Saul he cries, "I am sore distressed; for God is departed from me, and answereth me no more."

How different with David! The Lord was with him. The clear, bright eye of his faith in the living God was more real than the giant that stalked each morning before the host of Israel.

From Saul to David is like stepping from barbarism to civilization. It hardly seems possible that the same age could produce two men so far apart in mental and moral courage. Under these conditions David came to the throne of Israel. He found his people a group of rude outlaws and unorganized tribes; yet by sheer force of leadership, he transforms a mob into an army, organizes customs into laws, develops a commerce for his people, and made a place for himself; and all because he trusted in God and asked him for guidance.

You all know the story of David, when on a visit to his brothers in the army in the valley of Sheohs he heard the challenge of the giant Goliath daring any Israelite to meet him in single combat, how he accepted the call; how Goliath was covered with heavy armor but David had nought but a slingshot and a few small stones. Still David slew the giant, winning peace for Israel; and all because David acknowledged God and trusted him in all his ways.

Samuel had reproved Saul, telling him his throne would be given to another. This unbalanced his mind. He sent for David to play before him. David gave such satisfaction that he was made armor bearer to the king. He became popular and the king's fear was raised against him. Happy for the king had he extinguished this feeling through prayer. But he nursed it until it became uncontrollable.

Saul was more than jealous: he deliberately set him to thwart God's purpose. He said to himself, "I am king I will see that no one else gets my throne. A dead man cannot reign, and there are many ways other than direct murder by which a man's life can be taken." He was neither the first nor last man to match himself against God, but, as was all others, he was crushed in the attempt.

David had to flee and become an outlaw. Saul sought him everywhere, but God protected him and at last he took refuge amongst the Philistines.

Saul's throne is again threatened by a Philistime army breaking into his kingdom, in protecting which Saul and his three sons are slain. Then David, under divine guidance, returns to Hebron to dwell. Before long he is sought as king of Judea, over which he successfully ruled for seven and one half years. After the same period of warfare and internal difficulties the tribes of Israel also seek David for their king as God had appointed it should be. He now is king from Dan to Be . - Sheba.

Then David made a covenant with them and became their constitutional king. He became king over the entire people. As the Son of Man will someday be acknowledged King of the whole world, and shall reign in equity and peace without a rival.

David then breaks out in that grand Psalm, "Thou hast given me the shield of thy salvation: thy right hand hath holden me up, and they gentleness hath made me great."

A few things in David's rule: he gathered a strong army: he captured Jerusalem and made it the capitol of the kingdom; he learned the need of a temple and gathered the materials to build it; he established a kingdom and passed his scepter to a greater son.

His hand became stained with blood because he placed Uriah in the front line of battle where he was killed. David became in love with Uriah's wife. This was a great sin. David called upon God to clear him from blood guiltiness, and he also asked God to "cleanse me from my secret sins."

There are few great sins, but many small ones. God knows them all. We must ask his forgiveness meanwhile forgiving others their sins against us.

Men fall! That means that they first rose. The names of great men are the names of those who fought against all odds, overcoming in the end. The great epics are less than a score in number and all are based on some such experience as David's.

We now come to the confession of David as an example to the world of sinful humanity. Whether the sin be that of murder or a lesser sin we must repent falling with face to the ground. "Purge me with hyssop." There are many great writings, but no writing is greater than the Psalms of David, neither has any writing rendered more benefit to humanity.

Ten years of repose then comes the sunset of life. The pattern of the temple was communicated to David. In the presence of the people and with a full heart he blessed the Lord. His lips were touched with the old time fire. He gave the pattern of the temple to his son Solomon and told him of the material for its building. "Then," says the sacred writer, "David slept with his fathers." He was buried in the City of David where he still is awaiting the return of his Lord, who shall reign upon the throne of David in the city of Jerusalem.

SCHOOL DAYS

THESE SEPTEMBER days bring to a great many of our minds the thoughts of school, of lessons to be studied and mastered. The law of the land compels us to go to school and acquire an education. Here we study of temporal things which are good and which we could scarcely do without, because they exercise the mind; but let us who would be children of God exercise ourselves also unto godliness. Paul says: "Bodily exercise profiteth little: but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Now the law of God commands us to believe his word and obey his commandments and to "study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." So let us attend the school of Christ whenever there is opportunity. If there is a Sunday School we can attend that; if there are Bible classes, let us try to be present; and if there are Berean meetings, our place is there. In that way we shall always be sitting at the feet of Jesus and learning of him, and our study will not be in vain in the Lord.

Sometimes we wonder how such poor little children as we could be made fit for a place in the kingdom. Often God uses the despised things of this world and changes them into that which is beautiful. He sends the powerful rays of the sun to draw water from stagnant pools and muddy streams, as well as from the blue seas. it is drawn up into the heavens and then descends upon the earth in the form of gentle rain and beautiful glistening snow, covers the earth with a pure garment. So our natural sinful hearts can partake of heavenly food and be changed into spiritual minds which delight in the law of God.

SENTENCES ABOUT THE BIBLE

"TIME IS a river and books are boats. Many volumes have started down the stream of years only to be wrecked and buried on the sands. The Bible still moves on."

"In the Bible there is almost every form of literary art—history, poetry, drama, fiction, letters, biography, lyrics, elegies, epics, epigrams, proverbs, parables, allegories, and the dreams of seers."

"The mercy of God is in the Book, and he remembers that we are dust; hence the voice as of many thunders, and yet it whispers as a mother over her child."

"God be thanked for a Book which knows so much of the weakness of man, his wickedness and his waywardness, and yet holds up so high an ideal and so grand a hope!" Jos. Fort Newton.

CONCERNING YOUR READING

BACON SAID, "Reading maketh a full man."

Alger says, "Reading is banqueting with the gods."

Goodwin wrote, "He that loves reading has everything within his reach."

Addison contends that "Reading is to the mind what exercise is to the body."

Burke asserts that "To read without reflecting is like eating without digesting."

To all of which we add a hearty amen, and ask, how much, and how do you read?

Read only good books. Read as much as you can, and read with understanding. Remembering that the best book to read is the word of God.

HELP YOURSELF BY HELPING OTHERS

THE GREATEST pleasure I have found in living has been in the satisfaction of helping others up the hill. Do you know that the more I help others to rise the higher I rise myself?

You may call this what you will, but to me it looks all the world like this thought: he profits a lot who helps others a little.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, SEPTEMBER 28th, 1920. NUMBER 39

My School

I SAT in the school of sorrow;
The Master was teaching there,
But my eyes were dim with weeping
And my heart oppressed with care.

Instead of looking upward
And seeing his face divine,
So full of tender compassion
For weary sad hearts like mine.

I only thought of the burden
Of the cross that before me lay,
The clouds that hung thick above me,
Darkening the light of day.

So I could not learn my lesson,
And say, "Thy will be done,"
And the Master came not near me,
As the leaden hours went on.

At last, in despair, I lifted
My streaming eyes above
And I saw that the Master was watching
With a look of pitying love.

To the cross before me he pointed,
And I thought that I heard him say,
"My child, thou must take thy burden,
And learn thy task today."

"Not now may I tell the reason,
'Tis enough for thee to know
That I, the Master, am teaching,
And appoint thee all thy woe."

Then kneeling, the cross I lifted,
For one glimpse of that face divine
Had given me strength to bear it,
And say, "Thy will, not mine."

And as I learned my lesson,
And through the weary years
His helping hand sustained me,
And wiped away my tears.

And ever the glorious sunlight
From the realm of God streams down
Till the school tasks all are ended
And the cross is changed for a crown.

Is Man an Immortal Being?

A Discussion of Man, Soul, Spirit, Death, Hell, and the Resurrection

ANOTHER QUOTATION is Luke 16:23, "And in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off and Lazarus in his bosom." If preachers would only stop to think that "hell" is from "hades"! The following are a few facts which should forbid the madness of our prophets when preaching on the "Rich man and Lazarus."

"Hades" and its corresponding "sheol" are mentioned 78 times in the Bible. In 77 instances they convey the idea of a place of darkness, silence, and thick darkness, where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. In this single instance, hades is depicted as a place of life, activity and of excruciating agonies. What should be our attitude at this palpable contradiction? Force the 77 instances to the ruling of this one? No. Accept the account at what it really is—a fable—a parable! The whole account bears evidence in itself that it is not history. The best commentators call it a parable. (See Trench on Parables.) Certain codex's begin the account as a parable. It is not generally known that the Jews in the days of our Lord were well acquainted with this fable. Indeed Dr. Whitby states in his commentary that this very story is to be found to this day enshrined in the Talmud in that part of it known as the Gamara Babylonica.

Consider now the scriptural reasons against it as history. 1st Hades is not the place of punishment; 2nd. Punishment and rewards follow after resurrection and judgment; 3rd. The Rich man was not an unbeliever, neither was the beggar a believer. This is inferred: 4th. The word "soul" either of the rich man or of the beggar, is not mentioned; 5th. Abraham was, according to Scripture, asleep with his fathers; 6th. "Abraham's bosom" is only in this parable mentioned in Scripture—it is clearly a figure; 7th. Paradise is not in hades; it never was there, and it is not likely that it ever will be there—because hades is sheol, and sheol is a land of darkness and silence—gravedom.

Clearly, then, the account is a parable; and being a parable, it must be interpreted according to rules regulating parables. It is not our intention at present to submit to interpretation. Our readers will have seen from what has preceded that to accept that the Rich man's "soul" was suffering "the agonies of the lost," may be Scripture according to Josephus and Dante, but it is not Scripture according to Moses and the prophets.

HELL, GEHENNA

It remains to be stated that there is another word translated "hell." That word is "Gehenna." It is found only in the New Testament and mentioned twelve times. In the Revised Version this word also is left untranslated; which is a decided advantage to the Bible student. Yet still another word also translated "hell." That word is "Tartarus" and only once mentioned. It is found in 2 Pet. 2:4 and refers to the casting down of sinning angels into Tartarus where they were reserved unto judgment. Our readers may now pretty well apprehend the confusion in the minds of our translators, in jumbling together and mixing up Hebrew and Greek words which vitally differ. Is it any wonder that gross darkness covers the people? This text no doubt started Dante on his monumental folly—and it probably is the source also of that popular delusion, that "devils" are in hell.

The reprehensible but ready method (probably unwittingly adopted) of quoting a text where hell (hades) is mentioned, to prove something by quoting another text where hell (Gehenna) is mentioned, is now by the Revised Version made impossible. The trick has served its generation. It suffices now only for the densely ignorant or the careless Bible reader.

The word "Gehenna" refers to the valley of Hinnom where they originally offered human sacrifices to Moloch but which was in our Lord's day kept up as a burning ground for the filth of the city of Jerusalem. In speaking of the future punishment of the wicked (after resurrection, be it never forgotten) our Lord illustrates their destruction by referring to this valley where rubbish was "burnt up" and carcasses were eaten up by worms. No one ever thought of casting anything there for preservation. He used it as a type of the future awful hell for "the destruction of the ungodly." The site of this hell will doubtless be on the earth; and those who are saved from it will see it established and will also—thank God—see it wiped out from the "new heavens and the new earth."

It follows form all this that there is no Gehenna (hell fire) at present. 1st, Because the dead are asleep in sheol-hades; 2nd. Because punishment may not be until after the resurrection and judgment. No "devils" are in hades now tormenting the wicked, because there is but one devil and he does not happen to have ever been there except in Dante's imagination. It is astonishing how wide off Bible truths some of us are—Dante and some of the later century fossils reverently styled "Fathers."

It is perfectly scriptural to say of any dead man, good or bad, that he is gone to hell, meaning thereby hades—hell—where David and Isaiah, Job and Hezekiah expected to go and where our Lord also once entered; but "gone to hell" in popular conception is, gone to a place of torment—that is, the body is buried right enough in one hell, but his "immortal soul" is gone to hell fire. Well, whose fault is it that such is the popular conception? Educated as we are falsely as infants in Sunday schools and fostered in maturity in the same sad ignorance by pastors and teachers, what is to be expected? This may appear a harsh indictment, but we make it deliberately in the fear of God. If any one feels grieved and indignant over it, we cordially offer him that which every Christian gentleman is bound to offer, an opportunity to meet us in honest courteous debate, either privately or on a public platform, and point out wherein we are wrong and astray. In the meanwhile, we will summarize our conclusions derived from Scripture and leave them in closing to the consideration of our thinking readers.

THE TRUTH SUMMARIZED

1. A living man or a living soul is an organized being, made of the dust of the ground, having the breath or spirit of life. A dead man or a dead soul, is the same being, without the breath or spirit of life.

2. By man came death. In Scripture it is called "sleep." By man came also the resurrection of the dead.

3. Sleeping souls, both just and unjust, will be raised from the dead.

4. The judgment will determine, whether to eternal life, or to suffer the eternal punishment of the second death.

5. The nature of this second death is described in Rev. 20: It will not preserve, but it will "destroy both soul and body in Gehenna," in the "lake of fire."

6. Immortality is the great reward forfeited by the fall, but offered now to all "who will seek for it by patient continuance in well doing." The source of immortality is he, who is the "Bread of Life," and although we may die the first death, which is appointed unto men, yet the promise is sure, "I will raise him up again at the last day." If we reject this Life Giver, then "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adverstries."

7. The answer to the question, Is man immortal? will determine the nature and duration of eternal punishment. If man is immortal by nature, then eternal punishment must mean eternal conscious torment. We do not deny that punishment is eternal. We assert it because the Scripture asserts it. Let there be no misunderstanding as to our position. Eternal punishment must certainly mean eternal conscious suffering provided the subjects of this punishment are immortalized, and immortalized, be it carefully noted, not only in the so-called "soul," but it must be shown that the bodies also of the wicked will be made incorruptible.

"To die the death which never dies" may be rank nonsense, but to live a life of misery forever, entails immortality and incorruption. We await proof and until it is forthcoming we hold that eternal punishment must certainly mean deprivation of life for ever in the "second death."

We object to discuss the nature and duration of future punishment apart from the question, Is man immortal? This is a question of the ages. It is the great question disposing all others; the battle ground to fight the hoary creeds of churches. Tremendous issues hang on it. Awful, vast issues. The system known as "Calvinism" with its stupendous incredibilities, its blood-curdling doctrine of foreknowledge and predestination and its infants "a span long" damned in hell fire "for the praise and glory of God," swings with it. Prayers to the Blessed Virgin and intercessory worship to dead saints, Masses for the dead and Purgatory, Theosophy, Mormonism, Mahommedanism and Budahism, all hang together, or are broken to shivers with it.

It is supposed when Paul stated "to die is gain," that he expected "to go to glory" at death. Let us examine the passage. Phil. 1:20. "According to my earnest expectation . . . that Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be life or by death." There is no mistaking Paul's meaning here—his desire being that Christ should be exalted, whether he lives to preach him personally, or whether he is called upon to suffer martyrdom for his sake, and thus by his blood to give seed to the church. Now, the next sentence is a parallelism and simply repeats this sentiment "For to me to live is Christ (i. e. advantage to Christ), and to die is gain"—to Christ to be sure—not gain to Paul. He was a close prisoner at the time he was writing that epistle, and his thoughts evidently were running on suffering for Christ, to snatch a martyr's crown at "his appearing."

Turn to the 2nd chapter 27th verse of the same epistle and read: "Epaphroditus indeed was sick nigh unto death, but God had mercy on him." Mercy on him! How? Because death was the penalty through Adam's sin and God saved him from it, on that occasion. The statement is unintelligible if death was "gain" to Epaphroditus.

G. W. WINCKLER.

The morning is the gate of the day, and should be well guarded with prayer. It is one end of the thread on which the day's actions are strung, and should be well knotted with devotion. If we felt more the majesty of life, we should be more careful of its mornings. He who rushes from his bed to his business, and waiteth not to worship, is as foolish as though he had not put on his clothes, or cleansed his face, and as unwise as though he dashed into battle without arms or armour. Be it ours to bathe in the softly flowing river of communion with God before the heat of the wilderness and the burden of the way begin to oppress us. The Morning Star.

Israel and the Nations

Number Four

TEXTS: If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost (2 Cor. 4:3).

For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and prosper in the things whereunto I sent it (Isa. 55:10, 11).

Behold the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear (Isa. 59:1, 2).

If any one is willing to do his will, he shall know about the teaching (John 7:17, Weymouth).

Now therefore, if ye will hearken unto my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, ye shall be my treasure from among all peoples; for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation (Exod. 19:5, 6).

THE LAST quotation shows that if Israel would be obedient she would be God's treasure from among the people. That must mean that she would be composed of all nations, or rather, the righteous of all the nations. The one preceding it assures us that if anyone desires to do God's will he shall know of the doctrine, or in other words, be taught his duty. The one before it shows why God does not save all men, and that he is able to save "whosoever will" separate himself from his own iniquities. The one preceding this shows God's word will accomplish that for which it was sent, and the first text shows to whom the gospel is hidden, "Them that are lost." Now if they were not lost beyond all hope the gospel would not be hid from them; because if they were willing to do God's will they would know of the doctrine, and turn unto God.

The gospel was preached unto Israel (Heb. 4:1,2), revealed unto the prophets (1 Pet. 1:9-12). "Unto them were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. 3:2). Were all beside Israel excluded from the gospel during the Mosaic dispensation, as Brother Adam's question implies? Yes. Could not Gentiles be inducted into, and become a part of Israel? Yes. Listen to the law: "And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the Lord, let all his males be circumcised, and let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one born in the land; but no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof. One law shall be to him that is home born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you" (Exod. 12:48, 49).

Strangers who comply with this law are Israelites, and no longer considered Gentiles. We are told of Nicholas of Antioch, one of the seven deacons of the first Christian church, he was "a proselyte," and the first Gentile convert was Cornelius of a later date. Then it is settled that in the old dispensation all who become God's people must become Israelites. Israel according to commandment must love the stranger (Deut. 10:19). If we love anyone it is our wish to do them good, and such was Moses' way of looking at the matter; for he says unto Hobab, "We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said: I will give it unto you; come thou with us and we will do thee good; for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel" (Num. 10:29). Further he says to him: "And it shall be that if thou goeth with us, yea, it shall be, that what good soever the Lord shall do unto us, the same will he do unto thee" (verse 32). This again shows how anxious Israelites were that others should be incorporated into their nation, and become proselytes. Ruth the Moabitess must have been taught the law concerning proselytes, and knew that Naomi's people could be her people, and her God, Ruth's God, or she would never have made such a remark (Ruth 1:16).

After Queen Esther had defeated Haman's wicked design to destroy Israel, we are told, "Many people of the land became Jews; for fear of the Jews fell upon them" (Esther 8:17).

Jonah went so far as to preach to Gentile Ninevites (Book of Jonah). Israel must read the law unto the stranger (Deut. 31:12; Johs. 8:32-35); all of which would be folly if the stranger had no opportunity to be benefitted by it. "Moreover concerning the stranger that is not of thy people Israel, when he shall come out of a far country for thy name's sake, for they shall hear of thy great name, and thy mighty hand, and thine outstretched arm, when he shall come and pray towards this house; hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; that all peoples of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as does thy people Israel, and that they may know that thy name is called upon this house which I (Solomon) have built" (1 Kings 8:41-45).

This again shows the interest righteous Israelites had in the strangers, and no doubt they did much mission work in trying to turn them to their hope. There was listening to Peter's great pentecostal sermon proselytes from so far away from Jerusalem as Rome (Acts 2:10).

At Antioch, "Many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God" (Acts 13:43). Here were proselytes right among the Gentiles, and they too in the grace of God, and could continue so if they heeded the teaching of the new dispensation.

The Ethiopian whom Philip baptized was no doubt a Jewish proselyte, and for that reason not the first Gentile convert.

Even the wicked pharisees "compassed land and sea to make (the small number of) one proselyte" (Matt. 23:15). Because their proselytes were children of Gehenna is no fault of God's but the corrupt teaching of those wicked people.

Daniel pleaded with Nebuchadnezzar, "Let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness" (Dan. 4:27). This again shows the anxiety of righteous Jews for their heathen neighbors. Had Nebuchadnezzar complied with Daniel's request would he not have been saved? I think there can be no dispute here; all will agree that he would. Then all must agree that heathen by listening to the righteous Israelites of the past dispensation could be saved. Now as here were proselytes in Rome, and Antioch when the apostles began to preach, it must not be concluded that they were exceptions, and the Jews did not work the same in other cities; but on the contrary, there must have been many in all cities.

The Hellenists of Greece are considered by many as a kind of Jewish proselytes; and from the reading of the New Testament we learn the word Greek is translated from "Hellen" in every place except one (Acts 20:2), and that the Hellenists were attendants at the Jewish synagogue; which would be unlikely if not proselytes, or connected with the Jews in some manner. Anglo Israelites have tried to prove the Hellenists a portion of the lost ten tribes; but if so they are here mixing with the Jews, and would soon become so amalgamated with them that all would be one people. No doubt that is where the unchristian Hellenists landed. He is now a Jew. Certain Hellenists came up to the temple to worship, and wished to see Jesus (John 12:20). A great multitude of them of the Jewish synagogue in Iconium became Christians (Acts 14:1). Jewish women married them (Acts 16:1). Paul and Barnabas every sabbath found them in the synagogue (Acts 16:4). Paul was condemned for bringing them into the temple (Acts 21:18). This last reference shows that they must have been Gentiles, and hence is death and destruction to Anglo-Israelism so far as Hellenists are concerned; no Jew would ever kick against a member of the ten tribes coming into the temple. This leaves no room for any other conclusion than Hellenists were Jewish proselytes and from this the Jews hatched up a false hood about bringing some of that people into the temple, while even they, as we have shown, allowed them there themselves.

Paul asks, "Have they not heard?" and answers, "Yes, indeed; to the whole world the preachers' voices have sounded forth, and their words to the remotest parts of the earth" (Rom. 10:18, Weymouth). Paul is here quoting David, who says, "Their line is gone through all the earth, and their words to the ends of the earth" (Psa. 19:5, Jewish translation). Whose words? The Heavens. All of them have heard in some way. This brings to mind what a heathen taught man told a missionary: "I went out at night, and looked at the stars in all their glory, the moon in its fulness, and asked the question, Whence all these? Were they made by gods of wood and stone? What could I answer by nay, nay Then began I to worship the one only Creator, whom I could not see." The missionary found this man, and taught him as the prophet had declared, "They shall all be taught of God, and great shall be the peace of thy children;" and "every one that is willing to do his will shall know of the teaching." This man learned because willing, while his contemporaries died without this knowledge.

God hath spoken to all, and the only reason all do not hear is because "the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God should shine unto them" (2 Cor. 4:4).

But again, "If indeed ye are still firmly holding to faith as your foundation, without ever shifting from your hope that rests in the good news that you have heard, which has been proclaimed in the whole creation under heaven" (Col. 1:23). The whole creation under heaven certainly must include "all the world"; but when the gospel of the kingdom is preached in all the world the end will come. (Matt. 24:14). Why has not the end come? The gospel as preached by the prophets, and heavens has been preached throughout the habitable; but it must go that far by the Christian, and then the end will come. The gospel WAS proclaimed to all creation, and must be again before the end. This makes it all plain, and shows that future probation is unnecessary. To some our gospel may be hid; but it is because it would not benefit them; they are perishing, and would continue in the same condition did they hear. We can see a picture of this in every neighborhood: some may go to church every day for weeks, but when through they know nothing of the gospel. Brother Adams' reports, in which we are so much interested, bear testimony to this fact. Few learn, or even care to learn. Then the question is, Is the gospel hid from any who would believe if it could be shown them? If so, then it will get to them here in this life, and God's will be proven true. They "shall know of the doctrine," and those who never know, are perishing. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without a sin-offering unto salvation" (Heb. 9:27). Will be appear a second time unto (Greek, eis, for) salvation of those who are lost; the ones from whom the gospel is hid? Who will so contend? If he will appear to others than those who are looking for him he makes a useless statement here. I wonder who would wish to change the word so that it would read, "Unto them from whom the gospel is hid now, he shall appear for their salvation." No one would be guilty of such a change; and yet they try to claim this very notion is truth. But "if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost, whom the god of this world has blinded." To make the Scriptures teach otherwise is to twist them out of shape.

Men come out of their graves either saved or condemned: for the resurrection of krisees cannot be a resurrection for salvation, any more than the resurrection of life is for condemnation. Krisis truly means judgment, but what is the judgment that takes place at the resurrection? It is executive (Jude 15). The wicked are reserved to the day of judgment to be punished (Peter); they are brought forth unto the day of destruction (Job). Then if the day of judgment is to the resurrected wicked a day of destruction, it cannot be to them a day of salvation, and if the ignorant are raised in the number mentioned by John they are classed either with those who have done good or those who have done evil; and that shows that decisive judgment has come to a conclusion or made a decision in their case; else they could not be said to be either doers of good or evil. Then executive judgment is all that there is to follow. The gospel was hid from them; because the god of this world had been let into their hearts, and blined their mental gaze, and they are, if resurrected, condemned. "As many as sinned without law shall perish without law." Believest thou this? It is God's word. "Thy word (O God) is truth"

"As the Lord Commanded Moses"

HOW OFTEN these words are repeated in the account given us of the tabernacle and its furniture as constructed by Bezaleel and Aholiah, those faithful servants of God. Not a thing was changed to please their fancy. The boards, the taches, the ouches, the curtains, the embroidered designs, the canldesticks, the table, the laver, the cherubim, the altars, were all made after the pattern given to Moses in the Mount. Not a bell, not a pomegranate was lacking. What a lesson for us there is in this chapter to just do as the Lord commands us to do; not to follow our own ways, or to worship him according to our own notion, but according to the pattern he has set before us in the lips of Jesus. God requires implicit obedience. Let us see to it that we obey; that we faithfully assemble together to offer up praise and prayer to him though we have no one to preach the word for us. We have the word, and a chapter read even without comment, is often as effective as a sermon. And any one of us can offer a short simple prayer, be we ever so timid. And we can sing, repeat the chapter that comforts us, and tell of our seasons of peculiar joy and blessing. Do this, dear shepherdless ones, and be ready for the coming of Jesus.

God has commanded you to assemble yourselves together: keep his commandments. Remember Bezaleel and Aholiab.

O watch and fight and pray,
  The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
  And help divine implore.

Ne'er think the victory won
  Nor lay thine armor down,
The work of faith will not be done
  Till thou obtain the crown.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

A good dose of divine grace, with a few grains of gratitude for God's mercies, and a frequent bracing walk of benevolence in helping other people, will do more to quicken appetite and put healthy blood into a weazened frame than all the drugs of the apothecary. Not only is a merry heart a wonderful tonic to the body; it is a clarifier and invigorator of the mind. The mental machinery will work longer and far more smoothly when the oil of cheerfulness lubricates the wheels.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

SOUTHERN TEXAS CONFERENCE

THE FIRST annual meeting of the Southern Texas Confernces of the Church of God will be held at Kingsville, Texas, Oct. 30th. to Nov. 7th, inclusive.

We would like to meet or hear from all who are interested in getting this work started, as we intend if possible to get an evangelist to work telling the good news of the coming kingdom.

The brethren at Kingsville will care for all who will come, and please notify Brother J. M. Owens of that place.

Brother A. S. Bradley will be with us. Come and help us: we need you.

The Truth Makes Free

And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free (John 8:32).

IT IS remarkable that whenever we preach or present the truth, whether it be to an individual or a promiscuous multitude, two marked effects are always apparent, viz., the truth attracts or repels. The life and teachings of Jesus are the embodiment of the truth. The heart that is full of pride and conceit readily recognizes that the truth, if embraced, necessitates the conforming of the life and character to it. Pride and conceit shrink from this, because such a heart prefers "darkness to light, because their deeds are evil." A careful reading of Luke 4:14-30 will make this point clear.

On the other hand those who accept and obey the truth are humble and desirous to do those things that always please him. Jesus himself expressed this thought very forcibly by saying: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

What a power the Church of God would be today if the teachings of Jesus had been, since the apostles fell asleep, kept and practiced as the apostles themselves lived and preached them. But alas! the disposition of human pride is to wander away from the simplicity of the truth, to seek out new theories and vain philosophies of our own creation, to pry into and teach those of other men who desire to be considered wise and great according to this world's estimate.

Paul in exhorting the elders of Ephesus exhorted them to feed the church of God, warning them that after his departure grievous wolves would enter in among the flock, leading them away from the truth (Acts 20:28-35). To my mind the greatest and the most responsible office a child of God can hold is an elder in the church of God. No one can read Titus 1:1-11 and 1 Tim. 3: 1-7 without being impressed with the sacredness of this office. Brethren, as we look into our own hearts we ask how many among us are competent?

The truth can never be taught or understood except only by following God's appointed channels, and they are the teachings of Jesus, his apostles, and the prophets: all outside of this authority is vain and not of the truth.

In what way, then, does the truth make us free? By obeying it there comes into our lives a power, a mighty force, which overcoming our fleshly minds, bringing forth the fruits of righteousness as manifested in our daily lives, peace, joy, love, meekness, faith, patience and purity.

From what does the truth free us? It frees us from ignorance, superstition, and delusion. Millions are still under the galling yoke, and will continue to do so, so long as they bow down and worship those who hypocritically claim to be appointed and anointed by God. Before me lies a copy of "The Fraternal Leader," a Roman Catholic publication. Notice the date, "September, 1920." Can it be possible that men in our fair and enlightened land can accept such stuff as this?

Where are the authorities? Why are not the editors arrested and punished for blasphemy? My blood boils as I read it, and yet I lift up my heart to God and thank him that I know the truth, and the truth has made me free.

Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly and put an end to all this infamy and wretchedness.

A CAPUCIN STIGMATA

New York, July 19. Members of religious orders returning from Rome are verifying reports received here that a Capuchin monk in Italy bears the sacred stigmata on his body.

He is Father Pius of Pietra-Eloina, who is stationed in the small town of San Giovanni-Rotondo, and hundreds of witnesses have seen the wounds, which give forth a very sweet and fragrant odor.

The stigmata are permanent and visible at a distance. According to eye-witnesses, the wound on the heart measures a little less than three inches in length and is shaped like an inverted cross. On Fridays the pains are more intense than usual and the blood flows copiously. The temperature of the saintly Capuchin rises as high as 130 degrees. Several reputable medical men who have examined the wounds attest to their supernatural character.

Not only has Father Pius the stigmata but it is declared that he also has the gift of prophecy and the faculty of bilocation. Not long ago his father came to the monastery to thank the Rev. Father Superior for having permitted his son to spend a few days with his people. The son during the time had never departed from the monastery.

According to the best information, Father Pius is the first son of St. Francis to be distinguished by the sacred stigmata since the Seraphic Father himself, although several other persons including Anna Moria Taigi, lately beautified, are known to have had the stigmata. The Fraternal Leader, Sept. 1920.

Who Are Blessed?

GOD BLESSED the animal kingdom, fowls, fishes, and creeping things, saying, "Be fruitful and multiply" (Gen. 1:22). God created man and blessed him saying, "Be fruitful, multiply and replenish the earth, and have dominion over every living thing." The blessing to things created before man, was to multiply; to man, to multiply and have dominion over the subjects of his first blessing (vs. 28)

After God had created all things in six days there was another day added to round out the week. "And God blessed the seventh day: because in it he rested from all his work" (Gen. 2:3; Exod. 20:11). Again, God blessed the male and female he created and called their name Adam (Gen. 5:2). God blessed Noah and his sons with the same command he had given to Adam 1656 years before saying, "Be fruitful, multiply and replenish the earth; (Gen. 9:1) 427 years after the blessing of Noah God called Abram and blessed him and said his name should be great, and in and through him should all families of the earth be blessed (Gen. 12:3; 18:18). When Abram was 99 years old, God blessed him by changing his name to Abraham (which means a father of a great multitude), and gave to him all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession (Gen. 17:8).

Why did God grant such blessings to Abraham? Because he obeyed God (Gen. 22:18). What had God commanded Abraham to do? "Take thine only son Isaac, and get thee into the land of Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt offering." Did Abraham do so? Yes, he went so far as to bind Isaac and lay him on the altar, upon the wood and took the knife to slay him (Gen. 22:2-10). James says Abraham was justified by works in offering Isaac on the altar, and God (in a figure) received him as raised from the dead (James 2: 21; Heb. 11:17-19). This command was to try or tempt Abraham's faith. He was faithful, and he was accepted of God and blessed because he obeyed.

Now is it not reasonable, and scriptural to believe that God will bless all of mankind that obey his word? Yes. God established an everlasting covenant with Abraham and his seed, and that covenant was to bless all those that obey his commands; and after the seed was established in Christ the greatest blessing that God has promised to mankind, "the gift of eternal life," comes through the promised seed, "Christ." All that come to Christ, believe his gospel, and are baptized into him, share in the blessing promised to Abraham and his seed. How? By obedience to God. Who are blessed and why? All mankind that obey God.

The Tragedy of Money

PAUL NEVER said a truer word than when he said a good many years ago, "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil." War, Murder, Greed, Lust, Disease, Crime, all have made pages of world history, with the love of money the text and context of their blood-stained chapters. The history of nations cannot be written truly without these chapters.

It is a truism to say that money cannot buy everything. It cannot buy the most priceless thing worth having. Money cannot buy love. One of the saddest things I ever heard was the frank confession of a wealthy young woman who said, "I do not know, and have no way of knowing, how many of the young men who sue for my hand, really love me for myself. There is always the fear on my part that it is my money they are after."

Money cannot buy friendship. That is too priceless a thing to be in the market. Money cannot buy health. Money cannot buy joy. It can buy a thing called amusement, and it has a small power to procure what is called pleasure, but when it comes to the deep-seated possession of real joy, that is so far beyond the purchasing power of money that dollars become contemptible by comparison. Money cannot buy contentment. Ask all the rich people who are contented, to go and sit down on the steps of your state house, and then ask all the people who have only moderate means but are happy with them, to do the same, and the few rich would be crowded off the steps by the crowd of comparatively poor.

The age of barter has been called the age of the childhood of the race. But the absence of money had its advantages. I sometimes wonder if the world will ever find a way to supply its needs by some method which will avoid the tragedy which has always accompanied the love of money.

Suppose for example, the farmer who reads this editorial should give me a dozen eggs for it. I admit that would make the editorial come high. But on the other hand, he might make good by exchanging a bushel of wheat or corn-fed hog for a trip to Europe. On the basis of a fair exchange of the things we have for things we need, it would be a daily joy to do our best for the clothes and shelter and education and food and health we all must have in order to have the life abundantly. The working out of such a plan of exchange would tax the ingenuity of the best minds.

John Galsworthy, in a recent notable article, says that the world ought to stop trying to make money and pursue trade, and to set itself to the new task of seeking health and happiness. Surely it must be conceded that the world's mad rush to secure wealth has not succeeded in making people either healthy or happy. The love of money still spells tragedy to the human race after two thousand years of the Son of God, "who had not where to lay his head."—Selected by Sister Letta Morgan.

Northwest Conference Report

DEAR RESTITUTION:

PLEASE PUBLISH this delayed report in the next issue of your paper.

The Northwest Conference of the Church of God was held at Felida, Wash., July 1 to7, 1920.

We were fortunate to have with us at this time Brothers Williams and Patrick, and we surely received a great benefit from their sermons. Brother Williams talked to us on Friday evening on "faith." Sunday morning we had a Bible lesson on the forgiveness of sin, and it was continued in the afternoon. In the evening Brother Patrick spoke to us on "The Importance of One Faith, One Hope, and One Baptism."

Sunday morning Brother Patrick had a Bible lesson on baptism, after which Brother Williams gave us a discourse from Ecclesiastes.

Sunday afternoon we had our regular business meeting.

Reading of Secretary's report.

Reading of Treasurer's report.

Reading of financial committee report. All were accepted.

Election of officers resulted as follows:
Brother Wallace Wolfe, President.
Brother Jimmie Wolfe, Vice President.
Sister Minnie Kerr, Treasurer.
Sister Grace West, Secretary.

The resolution committee were Sister Palmer, Sister Morgan, and Brother Hathaway. They drew up the following resolutions:

Resolved, that we as members of the Northwest Conference do render to God our most heartfelt thanks for the blessings of the year, and especially that there has not been the loss of a single member by death, or any that lost their sons during the terrible war; and that we have been permitted to come together an unbroken band, looking for the coming of our Lord with everlasting peace and righteousness.

Resolved, that we try to express our appreciation to our brothers, Williams and Patrick, for their coming to us, and for the splendid messages they have brought, and that we will try and carry the messages with us to our homes to held encourage and strengthen us amid the cares and temptations of life, and we will pray for God's blessing upon their work as they go to declare the soon coming of our Lord.

Resolved, that we extend to the church of Felida our most sincere thanks and gratitude for the kind and loving reception they have given us, and the royal manner in which they have entertained us, and assure them that there is a tie of love that binds our hearts to them that is stronger than any earthly tie, realizing that we are all the children of our heavenly Father and heirs through Christ to an eternal inheritance in his kingdom.

Resolved, that we will try, during the coming year to live nearer to the Master and be obedient to all his commands in our daily walk before him, and try to keep up the work of the cause, knowing that if only two or three are gathered in his name, he will be there to bless us.

Signed: LIBBIE PALMER.
MRS. E. A. MORGAN,
H. B. HATHAWAY, Com.

Sunday evening Brother Patrick spoke to us on "The Signs of the Times."

Monday morning we had a Bible lesson by Brother Williams on "Reconciliation" and a sermon by Brother Patrick on "A Day's Journey With Christ." In the afternoon Brother Williams talked to us on "The Righteousness of God," and in the evening Brother Patrick on "The Signs of the Times."

Tuseday morning we had a sermon by Brother Williams on "The Righteousness of the Law by Faith" (Rom. 3.19-26). In the afternoon, Brother Patrick addressed us on "The Church," and Brother Williams in the evening on "70 Weeks."

This closed the Conference, but our brothers went to Corvallis, Ore., and held meetings there for three days and gave us some more splendid messages. May God bless them in the furtherance of his work.

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.--Psa. 116:15.

IRA MATTIX, son of Joseph and Mary Mattix, was born in Kosciusko County, Ind., June 27, 1849. He had eight brothers, namely, John, Files, Samuel, Robert, Andrew, Joseph, Perry, and Simon, and one sister Mary Jane.

He heard the gospel message and united with the Church of God many years ago under the ministry of Elder L. E. Connor. He has been a faithful Christian, living a life consistent with his profession. He has been a great sufferer in the flesh for the last four years, but endured the burdens of his lot with patience and in constant hope of relief and recovery. This tenacity to life clung to him to the end, and his last expressed wish was that he might get well. He had been blessed with a very strong physical constitution and spent his strength in tilling the soil and was known among his acquaintances as a great worker. This natural strength and endurance made it all the more difficult for disease to break him down and added to his sufferings. He fell asleep in Jesus Sept. 2, 1920, aged 70 years, 2 months, and 5 days. He leaves his companion Jennie A. Mattix, one foster son, Charles Cooper, one brother, Simon, nine nieces, eleven nephews, and many other relatives to remember his life of labor and love.

Funeral services were held at the Poplar Grove church, Sunday, Sept. 5, 1920. The house was filled with friends and relatives and we spoke words of comfort from 1 Cor. 15. Burial was made in the adjacent cemetery where he was laid to rest to await the coming of Jesus and his resurrection.

JOHN M. GUNN was born in Fintry, Scotland, Sept. 3, 1839, and died at his home near Ober, Ind., Sept. 7, 1920, aged 91 fears and 4 days. He had been ill but about two weeks.

He was married in the old country to Janet Cullens, June 21, 1860. He came to this country with his family in 1881. They have lived in Chicago, Hobart, in the East, and finally down on a farm between Knox and Ober. He was the father of nine children. The wife and mother died some 14 years ago, and six of the children have also preceded him in death. Three daughters survive him, namely, Mrs. Katherine Gordon, and Miss Jessie, at home, and Mrs. Geo. Smart, of Chicago; also seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

He was a member of the Eagle Creek Church of God, near Knox, Ind. He had been converted in Scotland to the truths of the Bible and was a careful and constant student of the good old Book. Out of his studies he had contributed some articles for publication that were very creditable expositions of the subjects treated.

Funeral services were held from the late home on Friday, Sept. 10, and burial was made in the Knox Cemetery. Here our brother sleeps in Jesus awaiting the voice of the archangel and the trump of God and the thrill of resurrection life.

GOLDEN TEXT: Psalm 42:8

THREE ROADS

A ROAD runs through the valley
  Beside a pleasant stream,
Among the lazy hemlocks
  That in warm sunshine dream;
My friends have often walked there
  And always sing its praise;
I, too, have tramped along it
  On cool September days.

Another road that wanders
  Among the distant hills,
A lonely road, abandoned,
  Invariably fills
My heart with deeper pleasure.
  No friends have ever told
Of walking on this hill-road
  That flaunts October's gold.
Perhaps they may have tried it,
  But I shall never know,
For they enjoy the low-roads
  And tell the neighbors so.

And then there is the third road,
  That all good men have trod,
It is a strait pathway
  "It leads," I've read, "to God.
It climbs the rugged mountains;
  Perhaps you'll find a trace
Among good deeds and blessings
  By those who run the race.
it brings full joy and pleasure,
  And so it seems to me
That I shall find this last road
  The best road of the three.

DAVID

IN POINT of time David stands midway between Abraham and Christ, distant from each other about a thousand years. In point of historical importance his position is much more commanding. From whatever side we view the life of David it is remarkable.

It may be that Abraham excelled him in faith, and Moses in the power of concentrated fellowship with God, and Elijah in the fiery force of his enthusiasm; but none of these were so many sided as the gifted son of Jesse.

We read of Cyrus the Great, of Pompey the Great, of Peter the Great, Alexander the Great and Frederick the Great; but greater than all was David the Great. He was great as a scion, great as a servant, great as sovereign, great as soldier, great as a singer, great as a sinner, great as a sufferer, great as a saint, great as a sire, and great as a symbolizer.

Samuel, the prophet of the Most High, went to Jesse's house to seek the Lord's man for a king of Israel. When he had made sacrifice, and the people were assembled, among others came severally seven sons of Jesse into the presence of the prophet who said, "The Lord hath not chosen these . . . art here all thy children ?" Then David, the youngest was brought in from the shepherding of the sheep, and at once the prophet recognized him as the future king of Israel. Without evincing any surprise that this youth should be preferred before his older brothers, he stepped forward and poured the consecrated oil upon his head.

No one can know the day nor the hour when God passes by, seeking for chosen vessels and goodly pearls. When least expecting it we are being scrutinized, watched and tested in daily commonplaces to see if we shall be faithful in more momentous issues. Let our loins be girt, our lamps trimmed and burning, our nets mended and cleaned. Ready, always ready.

God working through Samuel, changed the government of Israel from judgship to kingship, and Saul became the first king.

Few men had a fairer chance than Saul. Choice in gifts, goodly in apperance, favored by nature and in opportunities, prepared and chosen by God, anointed by Samuel, and elected by the people, he might have had one of the greatest names in history; but step after step the king disobeyed, offering burnt offerings at Mickmash before Samuel came, then indignation against Jonathan. The final step was when in direct disobedience to God he spared Agag, king of the Amalekites, and the choice spoil. By this wilful act God's spirit departed from him and from that moment his course was downward; he fortified his royal prerogatives and the light faded from him and he became as other men.

When God's presence is lost every power in us rises in revolt. It is a bitter wail when a man realizes the measure of the calamity which has befallen him and with Saul he cries, "I am sore distressed; for God is departed from me, and answereth me no more."

How different with David! The Lord was with him. The clear, bright eye of his faith in the living God was more real than the giant that stalked each morning before the host of Israel.

From Saul to David is like stepping from barbarism to civilization. It hardly seems possible that the same age could produce two men so far apart in mental and moral courage. Under these conditions David came to the throne of Israel. He found his people a group of rude outlaws and unorganized tribes; yet by sheer force of leadership, he transforms a mob into an army, organizes customs into laws, develops a commerce for his people, and made a place for himself; and all because he trusted in God and asked him for guidance.

You all know the story of David, when on a visit to his brothers in the army in the valley of Sheohs he heard the challenge of the giant Goliath daring any Israelite to meet him in single combat, how he accepted the call; how Goliath was covered with heavy armor but David had nought but a slingshot and a few small stones. Still David slew the giant, winning peace for Israel; and all because David acknowledged God and trusted him in all his ways.

Samuel had reproved Saul, telling him his throne would be given to another. This unbalanced his mind. He sent for David to play before him. David gave such satisfaction that he was made armor bearer to the king. He became popular and the king's fear was raised against him. Happy for the king had he extinguished this feeling through prayer. But he nursed it until it became uncontrollable.

Saul was more than jealous: he deliberately set him to thwart God's purpose. He said to himself, "I am king, I will see that no one else gets my throne. A dead man cannot reign, and there are many ways other than direct murder by which a man's life can be taken." He was neither the first nor last man to match himself against God, but, as was all others, he was crushed in the attempt.

David had to flee and become an outlaw. Saul sought him everywhere, but God protected him and at last he took refuge amongst the Philistines.

Saul's throne is again threatened by a Philistime army breaking into his kingdom, in protecting which Saul and his three sons are slain. Then David, under divine guidance, returns to Hebron to dwell. Before long he is sought as king of Judea, over which he successfully ruled for seven and one half years. After the same period of warfare and internal difficulties the tribes of Israel also seek David for their king as God had appointed it should be. He now is king from Dan to Beer-Sheba.

Then David made a covenant with them and became their constitutional king. He became king over the entire people. As the Son of Man will someday be acknowledged King of the whole world, and shall reign in equity and peace without a rival.

David then breaks out in that grand Psalm, "Thou hast given me the shield of thy salvation: thy right hand hath holden me up, and they gentleness hath made me great."

A few things in David's rule: he gathered a strong army; he captured Jerusalem and made it the capitol of the kingdom; he learned the need of a temple and gathered the materials to build it; he established a kingdom and passed his scepter to a greater son.

His hand became stained with blood because he placed Uriah in the front line of battle where he was killed, David being in love with Uriah's wife. This was a great sin. David called upon God to clear him from blood guiltiness, and he also asked God to "cleanse me from my secret sins."

There are few great sins, but many small ones. God knows them all. We must ask his forgiveness meanwhile forgiving others their sins against us.

Men fall! That means that they first rose. The names of great men are the names of those who fought against all odds, overcoming in the end. The great epics are less than a sore in number and all are based on some such experience as David's.

We now come to the confession of David as an example to the world of sinful humanity. Whether the sin be that of murder or a lesser sin we must repent,falling with face to the ground, "Purge me with hyssop." There are many great writings, but no writing is greater than the Psalms of David, neither has any writing rendered more benefit to humanity.

Ten years of repose then comes the sunset of life. The pattern of the temple was communicated to David. In the presence of the people and with a full heart he blessed the Lord. His lips were touched with the old time fire. He gave the pattern of the temple to his son Solomon and told him of the material for its building. "Then," says the sacred writer, "David slept with his fathers." He was buried in the City of David where he still is awaiting the return of his Lord, who shall reign upon the throne of David in the city of Jerusalem.

SCHOOL DAYS

THESE SEPTEMBER days bring to a great many of our minds the thoughts of school, of lessons to be studied and mastered. The law of the land compels us to go to school and acquire an education. Here we study of temporal things which are good, and which we could scarcely do without, because they exercise the mind; but let us who would be children of God exercise ourselves also unto godliness. Paul says: "Bodily exercise profiteth little; but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Now the law of God commands us to believe his word and obey his commandments, and to "study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." So let us attend the school of Christ whenever there is opportunity. If there is a Sunday School we can attend that; if there are Bible classes, let us try to be present; and if there are Berean meetings, our place is there. In that way we shall always be sitting at the feet of Jesus and learning of him, and our study will not be in vain in the Lord.

Sometimes we wonder how such poor little children as we could be made fit for a place in the kingdom. Often God uses the despised things of this world and changes them into that which is beautiful. He sends the powerful rays of the sun to draw water from stagnant pools and muddy streams, as well as from the blue seas; it is drawn up into the heavens and then descends upon the earth in the form of gentle rain and beautiful, glistening snow, covers the earth with a pure garment. So our natural sinful hearts can partake of heavenly food and be changed into spiritual minds which delight in the law of God.

SENTENCES ABOUT THE BIBLE

"TIME IS a river and books are boats. Many volumes have started down the stream of years only to be wrecked and buried on the sands. The Bible still moves on."

"In the Bible there is almost every form of literary art—history, poetry, drama, fiction, letters, biography, lyrics, elegies, epics, epigrams, proverbs, parables, allegories, and the dreams of seers."

"The mercy of God is in the Book, and he remembers that we are dust—hence the voice as of many thunders, and yet it whispers as a mother over her child."

"God be thanked for a Book which knows so much of the weakness of man, his wickedness and his waywardness, and yet holds up so high an ideal and so grand a hope!"—Jos. Fort Newton.

CONCERNING YOUR READING

BACON SAID, "Reading maketh a full man."

Alger says, "Reading is banqueting with the gods."

Goodwin wrote, "He that loves reading has everything within his reach."

Addison contends that "Reading is to the mind what exercise is to the body."

Burke asserts that "To read without reflecting is like eating without digesting."

To all of which we add a hearty amen, and ask, how much, and how do you read ?

Read only good books. Read as much as you can, and read with understanding. Remembering that the best book to read is the word of God.

HELP YOURSELF BY HELPING OTHERS

THE GREATEST pleasure I have found in living has been in the satisfaction of helping others up the hill. Do you know that the more I help others to rise the higher I rise myself ?

You may call this what you will, but to me it looks all the world like this thought: he profits a lot who helps others a little.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"—Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, OCTOBER 12th, 1920. NUMBER 38

Jesus Our King

We think of thy glory, and the mansions now prepared,
We long for thy presence when thy glory will be shared;
The time is surely nearing, the waiting can't be long:
Soon we'll hear the hallelujah, and join redemption's song.

The earth gets old with waiting, thy saints drop by the way;
All shall soon be made glorious in that auspicious day;
The balm of youth like Eden shall flow the wide earth o'er,
There'll be peace and joy forever on Canaan's happy shore.

Thy saints immortalized, "O death where is thy sting ?"
The tree of life grows yonder, where crystal waters spring;
The nations all submissive with joy shall serve thee there,
"Jerusalem the golden," the heavenly peace shall share.

O Jesus Lord our Savior, come, take thy throne and reign,
And cause the earth to blossom like Eden was again;
Thou art our King eternal, our trust we place in thee;
Come, rule dear Lord, forever, o'er man, and earth and sea.

HOW TO DO IT

DO YOU want to know how to write? how to become an author? an editor? Well, here is the answer: Live something, and then tell it. Feel it, and then make others feel it. This is the only way. We must "feel" what we tell; we must "live" what we write; otherwise we are hypocrites: and if that be so, then let us keep quiet and go and hide.

Mistakes of Moses

THE EVIL of the present day
  Man's scorn of God exposes;
When some cheap fool will ridicule,
  Mistakes of men like Moses.

Poor Moses doubtless made mistakes,
  As anyone supposes;
But don't forget we're running yet
  Some miles in rear of Moses.

For Moses trod a giant's track,
  And not a path of roses;
Not one of us is big enough
  To make mistakes like Moses.

Remember, you smart critics, who Assume self-righteous poses
'Twas not because of his mistakes
  The world remembers Moses. Selected by BROTHER FANKBONNER.

considerable weight in favor of accepting them as the inspired account given to Moses covering the period from the creation of Adam to the Exodus: that is, it will be found that the average age of the parents from Seth to Abraham when the first son was born was about one eighth of the average length of life.

Noah and Abraham are not included, as both of these cases were exceptions as to when their first sons, respectively, were born.

This agreement does not exist in either the Samaritan or the Septuagint text, as will be readily seen from the following table, which gives the percentage of the average age of the parents at the birth of their first son—Adam to Noah before the flood being compared with Arphaxad to Abraham after the flood, according to the ages given in the three texts.

In 1657 Babylonian years of 365 days each are exactly 81,400 weeks and five days. The use of the Babylonian year of 365 days (Ency. Brit. vol. VI. p. 315) in reducing the Hebrew 1657 years to weeks indicates clearly enough that it was the Babylonians who attempted to corrupt the Hebrew number. Thus, if the 432,000 and the 1657 are related we have a reference in profane history to Hebrew chronology of the period to the flood that goes back at least to the Babylonian captivity of Israel, B. C. 606-536, which was centuries before the Septuagint text was made.

The Hebrew account has it that Noah was the tenth from Adam. The Babylonian account has it that "ten kings reigned" during this stupendous period of 432,000 years.

HARMONY OF HEBREW NUMBERS

When the marked degree of harmony existing in the Hebrew numbers is considered, it will add

Text	Before Flood	After Flood
Hebrew	12-14 per cent	12-14 per cent
Samaritan	9-10 per cent	41-42 per cent
Septuagint	20-21 per cent	35-36 per cent

FLOOD TO EXODUS—807 YEARS

According to the Hebrew numbers there were 292 years from the flood to the birth of Abraham. From the covenant made with Abraham in his 85th year (Gen. 15) to the Exodus was a period of 430 years (Gal. 3:17), which gives us 807 years from the flood to the exodus.

For the following reasons we are beginning these 430 years in Abraham's 85th year instead of in his 75th, when he came into the Holy Land.

First, ten years, from Abraham's 75th to his 85th year, is not any too long a period for him to sojourn in Egypt with Lot during a famine and to return to Canaan, and for them to become so rich that they had to separate; also, for the period that Abraham "endured" before receiving the promises by covenant (Heb. 6:15; Gen. 12:4, 10; 13:1-12).

Second, in Gen. 15:13, 400 years are given for the sojourn and afflictions of the "seed," not Abraham. It begins with Isaac, the first seed, and in Gal. 3:17, 430 years are given as covering a period from the covenant with Abraham to the exodus. The extra thirty years is the time of Abraam's sojourning before the seed was identified, which was accomplished at the offering of Isaac (Gen. 22:16-18; Heb. 11:17, 18).

If the covenant with Abraham was made in his 75th year, then Isaac, who was born when Abraham was 100 years old, could be only five years old when the 400 years commenced; but we have no record that would identify Isaac as the seed at this age. Isaac's offering by Abraham could not have taken place when he was so young, for testimony shows that he was able to reason (Gen. 22:7). The covenant confirmed to Abraham in his 85th year would make the age of Isaac fifteen years at his offering, when he was identified as the typical "Seed" in the perfected state (Heb. 11:19).

EXODUS TO THE TEMPLE

The above table of the period from the exodus to the temple's foundation has been one of the most difficult arches of time to solve. But when the 300-year period of Judg. 11:26, is given its place the problem is readily solved.

From the possession of Heshbon by Israel, a year before the invasion of Canaan, to Jephthah, there is but one period, the Rule of the Elders, the time of which is not given, but since the total time, 300 years, to the 1st of Jephthah is given there remain but twenty years for the rule of the Elders. The seventy-one years of servitude during this period should not be included in the 300-year period, for Jephthah could not have asked the king of Ammon why he had not recovered the land for 371 years, for there were seventy-one years when Israel was in bondage and therefore could not claim it against any action that the kings of Ammon may have made during the servitudes (Judg. 11:26).

This arrangement agrees with the account of Acts 13:18-22, and allows scope for Samuel to be "old" as required (1 Sam. 8:1). But it also disallows that 1 Kings 6:1, has been corrupted. It is clear enough that the number 480 there given is correct, that is, as far as it goes. The 300 years of Judges 11 make the "580 solution" of 1 Kings 6 impossible. See "Emphatic Diaglott"—footnote on Acts 13:20.

The death of Eli ends the 450 years of the Judges that began with the death of Joshua (Acts 13:20), and the end of the 480 years from the invasion. It was at this juncture (the death of Eli) that there came a change in the rulers; that is, from that of Judge and Seer to that of Prophet and King (1 Sam. 9:9). It is for this reason that the 480 of 1 Kings 7 is correct enough. It is appropriate that a break in the numbers given for the period from the exodus to the temple should occur at the juncture of the death of Eli when Samuel's sole judgship began. If the balance of time, eighty-four years to the temple, was not to be supplied by other texts, but was originally incorporated in 1 Kings 7:1, then it is suggested, in view of the correctness of all the other numbers given in both books of Kings, as will appear in considering the temple era, that it (1 Kings 7:1) may have originally read, as to the numbers, as follows:

> "eighty years and four hundred years,"
> (eighty years and four years).

It will be seen that the duplicate clause, "except one word," could have been thought superfluous and consequently omitted later in transcribing. The forty years it took Israel to come out of the land of Egypt, which includes the Wilderness (Ezek. 20:36), must be considered in securing this period from the exodus to the temple.

WALTER L. CURTIS.

SPIRIT, SOUL, BODY

PROVE ALL things; hold fast that which is good. and the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and may your whole spirit and soal and body be preserved unto the coming of our Lord Jesus (1 Thess. 5:21-23).

DIAGLOTT READING is: "May the God of peace himself sanctify you entirely; and may your whole person—the spirit and the soul and the body be preserved blameless in the Presence of our Lord Jesus Christ." Paul's prayer and desire then was: may you not only maintain your spiritual life, but may even your physical life be preserved until the Lord comes.

Although Paul in this same letter called attention to what he had stated when preaching to them, that the Lord would not come until after there should be a falling away "from the faith," and the man of sin, "the papal system," the son of perdition, be revealed; but now tells them that the mystery of iniquity was already at work, and the restraining power might be soon overcome, and the head of the apostasy be manifested.

At no time did the apostles in their teaching anticipate that the coming of the Lord was centuries in the future, but, like we in our day, thought it was imminent; and many who were then living would witness the presence of the Lord without having to pass into the death state, and await resurrection.

Scripture use of the terms "Spirit, Soul, Body" vary according to the connection in which they are employed.

SPIRIT (GREEK, PNEUMA)

(a) Atmosphere, breath, air that we inhale and exhale sustaining and maintaining life.

(b) Disposition, will, energy, either for good or for evil.

(c) Superhuman energy, angels, divine power.

SOUL (GREEK, PSUCHE)

(a) Vital principle, affections, feeling, desire, appetite, craving.

(b) The whole animal physical corporeal corruptible organization while living; Cadaver when dead.

BODY (GREEK, SOMA)

Flesh, blood and bones formed of dust of the ground, and energized by the breath of life, through which all that relates to man is manifested.

Thus when rightly divided, and correctly understood, the text under consideration does not teach three separate entities, but one harmonious whole.

S. T. BLESSING.

A Warning to the Jews

TWO THIRDS of the Jews who return to Jerusalem under Zionism will be slaughtered (Zech. 13:8). All nations will be gathered against Jerusalem, and just when it appears the Jews are doomed to utter destruction, Jesus will come again and one third will be saved, and their enemies will be destroyed. Jesus will then restore the throne of David, upon which he will sit and reign, restoring righteousness and peace on the earth (Zech. 14:1-9). But the greatest time of sorrow and trouble the Jews have ever known, "the time of Jacob's trouble." will overwhelm them ere that glad deliverance come (Jer. 30:7-24).

A time of trouble such as no nation has ever known, yet awaits them (Dan. 12:1). And all because as a nation, they delivered Jesus Christ "without cause" to the Romans to be crucified, and as a nation, do yet bitterly hate and despise the name of the only begotten Son of God. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap, is God's unchanging law, and while the Jews, "without cause," continue their violent hatred of Jesus Christ, God will permit their violent and merciless slaughter at the hand of the Gentiles (Deut. 28:47, 66). They are reaping exactly what they have sown and are yet sowing, not alone in their rejection of the Christ, but also in their violent effort to hinded, yea, even to prevent the preaching of the gospel in their midst, as also their bitter persecution of any Jew who accepts Jesus as Savior and Lord.

Every soul by his or her refusal to accept Jesus as God's provided sacrifice for sin, does by that choice, deliberately choose hell as his or her destiny. God expressed his choice for every soul, when, as John 3:16 says, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish but have everlasting life." Now, you are the only person in all God's universe who can decide where you will spend eternity.

The right and power to accept Jesus Christ as your Savior, and be saved, or to reject him and be lost, is absolutely in the power of your choice. Jesus alone can save. The Jews rejected God's Messiah when he offered himself to them, and now God says, he will raise up to them a false Messiah, whom they will accept to their sorrow (Zech. 11:10-16). None may ever know Jesus as Messiah or Lord, except those who here and now accept him as Savior. "Now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation." Selected by Brother J. E. HOGARTH.

Remarks

ON THE last of July I went to Holbrook, and stayed all night with my sister. I have another sister at Arapahoe, the first station east of Holbrook, and another at Edison, the second station east. So arrangements were made to meet with the one at Edison on Sunday, and so with well fulled baskets, we arrived about noon, when with sisters, brothers-in-law, nephews, and nieces, went to the river where, upon the banks we ate our dinner. The river was low, just pools here and there. Some of the young people went in and threw out some good sized fish with their hands. We were not just picnicing with relations, but were celebrating a greater event than that.

After our dinner was over, we got in cars and drove three miles east to the lake where we planted our oldest sister in the likeness of Christ's death. I have baptized all my brothers and sisters except by oldest brother, who was baptized by Brother C. C. Ramsey, who also baptized me. This puts the whole family in the race for the kingdom, including father and mother who sleep. What a glorious meeting if we are worthy to be called when the Master comes. It has been my prayer for years for this dear sister to come in, and complete the family number, and in the Father's good time he heard and answered my prayer. We must remember that others have dear ones just as precious to them as ours. We must help them.

The following day I went to Bartley where Sister Moore secured the Christian Church, and I gave them a talk on prophetic signs. The next morning I hastened to the church at Laird, where Brother Dimick had secured the hall, and here for a week we pleaded with the people through the gospel, and finally three responded, two young ladies, one quite an active member of the Christian Church and president of the Endeavor, who will no doubt be a valuable help to the Berean class; another of Brother Dimmick's sons among the number. Just a few days before this boy was in the bin where they were loading a car of wheat when one side of the wheat slid down taking him with it, and completely covering him up. They chopped a hole in the side of the bin and took him out, apparently dead; but he revived and was saved to put on Christ.

Conference time approaching, we had to make our stay at each place short, so went back to Bartley. Circumstances have so decreed that Sister Hamilton moved here in the spring and here now lives old Brother and Sister Gamble, Brother and Sister Brush, Sister Moore, and Sister Sellick, all of whom I baptized as my first work in Frontier Co. Neb., a good many years ago. Sister Loux also lives here, a later work in the same locality. There is quite a history attached to some of my work which is interesting to those of us who know it. How strange that after the lapse of so many years these, of practically the same locality and who were associated together in the work for years, built a church in the country, and enjoyed it for a long time, until death began its ruthless work, and removals scattered them to almost the four winds; but here are these mentioned above after being separated for years, now living in the same town, sound in the faith, and calling for the same voice that sounded the gospel to them, to sound it to their new found friends. I spoke six times in the Christian Church, and on Sunday all took their dinner and went to the river, after which I gave them a talk as they sat in cars and on the ground. Then we went to the water, where seven put on Christ by baptism: two of Sister Hamilton's sons, and a daughter, that were just children when she came into the ark of safety. Her son-in-law and a daughter-in-law, an English girl whom her son brought as a bride when he came from the war. Sister Loux, who came in later as mentioned above, has been praying that some of her dear ones come with her, and think of her joy when this day, along with the joy of Sister Hamilton, her husband and daughter put on Christ. Oh the gratitude that showed in their faces, and cordial handshake that tells of what is dwelling in the heart! It helps us on the way more than money.

After the baptism we went to Brother Loux's home and a goodly number sat for the first time at the Lord's table, and were given the right hand of fellowship. But now this is not all there is to it. To enter the kingdom we must overcome the world and be worthy of a place in the kingdom. The steps of obedience, to believe the gospel and be baptized, only puts us in the race for everlasting life, and a place in the kingdom.

Here we had to leave for the present, and go to Holbrook or rather stop off for a couple of days, with Brother and Sister S. A. Story, and Brother and Sister Baxter, faithful ones in the faith. Then it was time to hurry home and help finish the many little details for the conference. Thus another year has passed into history. We are just beginning a new one. Brethren, pray that a way may be opened up and effectual of reaching all the demands on my time. I have calls from New York to Idaho and from Minnesota to Oklahoma. Pray for the work.

ALMUS ADAMS.

Hope

TO CHERISH a desire of good, with expectation of obtaining it. What is the Christian's hope?

It is the hope of the gospel, which was preached by Paul (Col. 1:23). Why should one hope in the gospel preached by Paul? Because it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth (Rom. 1:16). He that believeth the gospel and is baptized shall be saved (Mark 16:16). We are saved by hope (Rom. 8:24). Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope (Rom. 15:13). Hope of eternal life (Titus 1:2). Hope in what was written for our learning (Rom. 15:4). Hope to be partaken of (1 Cor. 9:10). Glorious hope (2 Cor. 3:12). Hope in increased faith (2 Cor. 10:15). Hope of righteousness (Gal. 5:5). Hope of his calling; hope of your calling (Eph. 1:18; 4:4). Hope laid up for you in heaven; hope of glory (Col. 1:5, 27). Hope in our Lord; hope of salvation (1 Thess. 1:3; 5:8). Good hope through grace (2 Thess. 2:16). Our hope (1 Tim. 1:1). Blessed hope; hope of eternal life (Titus 2:13; 3:7). Hope firm unto the end; hope set before us; hope an anchor of the soul; better hope (Heb. 3:6; 6:11, 18, 19; 7:19). Lively hope; hope in God (1 Pet. 1:3, 21). Hope in you (1 Pet. 3:15). Hope in the appearance of Christ (1 John 3:3).

Now brethren, we have taken our concordance, and diligently searched for the hope called the "Larger Hope" that is preached so earnestly at the present time. We cannot find the term in God's word, nor the doctrne; so we conclude it is the invention of man, and has no place in the creed of the followers of Jesus.

We miss Brother Meldrum, who has left for a protracted visit in Scotland.

Brother S. H. Thomas, of Proctor, Montana, writes: "Please give my thanks to those brethren who have sent pledges of support and kind words of encouragement in the work I have undertaken. I will reply to each one personally in due time, but at present must devote all my time to the work in hand. I hope to have 'Good Company' in the printer's hands in two or three weeks."

A reader quotes Hag. 2:7, "And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come," and asks, "Do the nations desire the coming of Christ?" The point that perplexes the mind in the text is that our Common Version renders the original by the words. "The desire of all nations shall come," making Christ's appearance in the days of Augustus a universal, international desire, when no nation desired him but Judah. "Shall come" in the Hebrew is plural, and requires a plural nominative; "khemdth," "desire of," has lost the letter "o" which, when restored, clears up the obscurities of the passage, and makes it "khemdoth," "things desired of" the nations, namely: liberty, fraternity equality, peace, good government, etc. In their perversity and blindness the coming of Christ is not desired. They want the things which the kingdom of God will bring, but not the kingdom which will bring them.

Orthodox Sunday Schools

RECENTLY LETTERS have appeared in The Restitution from Sisters Hunt and Lapp in defence of isolated brethren sending their children to sectarian Sunday Schools. As the Editor was himself in isolation when a boy and regularly attended a Baptist Sunday School, he can speak from experience as well as according to the oracles of God. As his uncles are all Baptist ministers he surely can also speak without "prejudice."

SUNDAY SCHOOLS ARE HUMAN INVENTIONS

To begin with, Sunday Schools are man-devised and man-made in origin. Originally and scripturally children were to be taught at home. To parents God said: "These words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shall talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou riseth up" (Deut. 6: 6, 7). That children must go to Sunday School is an idea as sacred in the minds of some people as if God had thundered the commandment from the skies. If parents taught their children God's word "diligently" while they sat in the home, when they walked about doing errands, and after they went to bed, they would discharge their parental duties, and the children would learn the truth. But the tendency is to dodge this duty, and send them to some sectarian school, where the truth is not taught, and then say, "Well, they are better off there, bad as it is, than if they were at a worse place"!

"ENTANGLING ALLIANCES" FORMED IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Although the Editor had a mother who was both competent and loyal in the truth, he alone out of five brothers escaped the snares of orthodoxy affiliation. Brother Donaldson in his department this week, quotes a saying by Lavater which young people should ponder: "A frequent intercourse and intimate connection between two persons make them so alike, that not only their dispositions are molded like each other, but their faces and tones of voice contract a certain analogy."

Lavater's words are based on Scripture, and they are demonstrated to be true by experience. My brothers started by going to a Baptist Sunday School when they were boys; this led them to form acquaintances among the Baptists; and as people do not marry strangers, they were led to marry Baptist wives; and finally, as the Baptist told them it "made no difference what they believed," they joined the Baptist Church! Today they would claim that they believe practically all the truth;

but the fact remains that they are Baptists, their wives are Baptists, and they are raising up their children in Baptistism. When only a lad we saw the drift of things, and saved ourself by getting out of Babylon. And we expect to stay if the Lord will keep us.

ORTHODOX AFFILIATION HURTS THE TRUTH

Sister Hunt asked why the Church of God did not have Sunday School literature. Well, The Restitution has printed such literature, and the demand for it was so little we abandoned its publication. Why so little demand? Sister Lapp speaks of how hard Sister Wince worked to raise just a little money to fit up The Restitution office. Now we have not the remotest idea of criticising these two beloved sisters; but suppose the reason we cannot publish Sunday School quarterlies is because our children are using Cook's works in orthodox Sunday Schools?

And suppose that the reason dear Sister Wince had to plead so earnestly for money to buy a Linograph machine was because we were giving all our money to sectarian churches? Because they can raise more money than we one writer concludes God does "bless" them. On this principle God surely does "bless" the Catholic Church! Probably in proportion to our numbers we raise as much, if not more money in a year, than they do. Then subtract the money they pilfer from us by one pretext or another, and we will not suffer from the comparison. Let us keep our vision clear. The papacy is the "mother of harlots and abominations of the earth"; the Protestant churches are "the daughters." Not one of our brethren would join the Catholics in affiliation, directly or indirectly, but some are ready to amalgamate with the daughters of "the mother church." They are all members of the same family. If we belong to God's family we must obey the command of separation: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

The Inspiration of the Bible

BOASTFUL HIGHER Critics pretend that all learning is on their side; only the illiterate believe in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. Truth is truth whether believed by the illiterate or the educated; but that educated men endorse the sacredness of Holy Writ the following compiled testimonies of the learned sufficiently show:

"Which things we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth."—Paul.

"For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—Peter.

"Look carefully into the Holy Scriptures, which are the true words or utterances of the Holy Ghost."—Clement, A. D. 95.

"The Holy Scriptures are the voice of God, the writings and the words of God." Tertullian, A. D. 192.

"I have learned to bring such reverence to the books of Holy Scripture alone that I firmly believe that their authors were preserved from every error in writing them." Augustine, A. D. 354-430.

"With the single exception of Theodore of Mopsuestia, it has been found impossible to produce, in the long course of the first eight centuries of Christianity, a single doctor who has disowned the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures, unless it be in the bosom of the most violent heresies that have tormented the Christian Church." Prof. Gaussen.

"The substance of the old Protestant doctrine of inspiration may be expressed in thes words: The Holy Spirit dictated the Bible verbally, and the human composers are not the authors, but only the writers—indeed, only the hands or pens."—Auberlein.

"The Bible is the very utterance of the Eternal. It is as much God's own word as if high heaven were opened and we heard God speaking to us with human voice. Every book is inspired entirely. The Bible is filled to overflowing with the Holy Spirit of God, the books of it and the words of it and the very letters of it."—Dean Burgon.

"I believe in the plenary inspiration of every word of the original text of Holy Scripture, and that the inspired writers were infallibly guided by the Holy Ghost, both in their selection of matter and the choice of words."—Bishop Ryle.

"The sixty-six books of the Old and New Testaments are veritably the Word of God, as absolutely as were the ten commandments written by the finger of God on the two tables of stone."—Tregelles.

"The Bible claims to be the Word of God in more than two thousand places; 501 times in the pentateuch, 292 times in the historical books, and 111 times in the prophets besides what we find in the New Testament. We have either a verbally inspired Bible, or no Bible at all."—J. H. Brookes.

The "Form" of Doctrine

Ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered unto you, or whereunto ye were delivered (Rom. 6:17).

"FORM" COMES from tupon, and signifies "type, figure, emblem, that which exhibits a representation or likeness of anything" (Greenfield). Says Dr. Clark, in commenting on this passage, "The words 'eis on paradothete tupon' refer to the melting of metal, when it is liquified, is cast into the mold, and therefore the words may be literally translated, "into which mold of doctrine ye have been cast."

The sense, as we conceive, is the doctrine of gospel which is necessary to be understood, believed and obeyed from the heart, in order that a person may be a disciple of Christ, is reduced to a "form," type or mold, and which we are very sure is nothing less nor more than immersion in water. The "Form" of Doctrine

Ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered unto you, or whereunto ye were delivered (Rom. 6:17).

"FORM" COMES from tupon, and signifies "type, figure, emblem, that which exhibits a representation or likeness of anything" (Greenfield). Says Dr. Clark, in commenting on this passage, "The words 'eis on paradothete tupon' refer to the melting of metal, when it is liquified, is cast into the mold, and therefore the words may be literally translated, "into which mold of doctrine ye have been cast."

The sense, as we conceive, is the doctrine of gospel which is necessary to be understood, believed and obeyed from the heart, in order that a person may be a disciple of Christ, is reduced to a "form," type or mold, and which we are very sure is nothing less nor more than immersion in water. As metal is melted and separated from the dross by natural heat, to fit it for the mold, so the sinner is subdued in all his carnal habits and desires, by the power of the gospel, before he becomes a willing and fit subject to be baptized into the likeness of the death and resurrection of Christ. As the metal is changed in form by the mold, so those who obey from the heart this form of doctrine, are baptized into the name or character of the Son of God, and therefore become sons and daughters of God, and henceforth walk or should walk in newness of life: for they have been changed, first in heart by the power of truth, and then in type by the act of baptism.

Again, we can conceive of no doctrine of the gospel, besides the doctrine of the death and resurrection of Christ, that could be reduced to a form, or be represented in type or figure; hence the importance of correctly understanding the doctrine of the cross, the blood of Christ, Christ crucified, or what is the same, the death and resurrection of Christ. It is the prominent theme of the New Testament, the foundation, chief corner and cap stone of the Christian fabric. In order to become a lively stone in that building, and an inheritor with Christ in his glorious kingdom, we must be made conformable to his death, and patiently suffer with him.

Let it be impressed on every mind, that as the mold in the figure does not separate the dross from the pure metal, neither does baptism cleanse from sin in a physical sense; it is not the putting away the filth or sins of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience—the fulfilling, not the beginning of all righteousness. Let the good conscience first be formed, and the true principles of righteousness be deeply planted in the heart by the power of truth; then, and not till then, is a person prepared to reduce to form, or type, his faith in baptism. He can then obey from the heart that form of doctrine whereunto he was delivered. As the melted metal is delivered to the mold, so the person when, as above stated, is fully prepared, may be presented for baptism. The mold is not presented to the metal, but the metal to the mold.

Communications

They spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it--Mal. 3:16.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

I AM late with my conference report. My mother fell three weeks ago this evening and broke her hip, and it has seemed impossible to get the time to write it. I hope the brethren will be patient. I know many are wondering about it. We feel that the dear heavenly Father has been mindful of us in this trouble, as mother is doing fine: she is able to be propped up in bed today, which is a rest, and has been given strength to bear the suffering, and that has not been so bad as it might have been. I have not been able to write to scarcely any one, so not many of the household of faith heard of it, but we have had visits and letters from a few who have heard it, which did much to help and encourage us. Yesterday a letter came from Sister Fannie Lecrone full of love and sympathy Such letters make us feel so tenderly near to each other and, as she says, when one member of the body suffers, the whole body suffers. Mother will be 81 the 12th of November, and for one of that age, is doing remarkably well. We hope if it is God's will that she will soon be up again.

Your sister in Christ,

CARRIE FREE.

DEAR RESTITUTION:

I HAVE just read Sister Hunt's letter. I think she is right in going to the Methodist Sunday School, since there is none others to go to. How are we ever going to teach the people any of the truth if we stay at home because there is not a church of our own? Christ said he did not come to call the righteous to repentence, but sinners. If we never go to the Sunday School because they do not all believe as we do, there will be many that never will hear any of the truth at all. I have been isolated for eight years. My children and I go to Brethren Church every Sunday to preaching and Sunday School. This summer I have been going to the Christian Sunday School at 10 A. M. then to the Brethren's preaching service at 11, and Sunday School at 12. I know it has not hurt me one bit. We who are isolated if we do not take our children to Sunday School on Sunday, what are we to do? If children cannot go to the Sunday School they will probably go somewhere to something else ten times worse. I have seen some of our people who would not go to another church because there was not any of our faith. They soon grow cold, and their children are out into something else a great deal worse than an orthodox Sunday School. When my children go to the Sunday School they always tell me if anything comes up in the class that is contrary to what I have always taught them, and I will talk and reason with them, and they have not taken up with any of the errors yet, and I do not think they will. For me I would say, go on Sister Hunt and keep up the good work you have begun. Sow the good seed of the kingdom, and God will give the increase. Christ did not go around and ask the people if they believed as he did before he told them the truth, neither did he say for us to put our light under a bushel.

This is the way I look at it: if we do not go to the other people's church and Sunday School, we cannot expect them to come to ours. I have many, dear friends in both the Christian and Brethren churches, and I believe we should ever get one of our preachers to come here and hold meetings, there will be a better chance of getting those people to come to our meeting than if I had never been to theirs.

There is just one more point I want to write about before I close, and that is the orthodox churches can put us to shame when it comes to giving to the Lord's work. For instance: a few years ago when Sister Roxana Wince was trying to get $2,000 to buy some machinery we needed in The Restitution Publishing House., she begged and pleaded with the people for several months before she got it. Here at the Brethren Church at Sunnyside with a membership of 300 they raised $1,100 in one day; and the Christian Church raised $900 from a membership of 150 in one day. The Lord blesses them, and no one can deny it. It makes me sad when I think our people have the truth and should be the happiest and most liberal people on earth; but are they? The Lord knows, and the Lord loves a cheerful giver. Submitted in love with the hope that this might take at least a little of the prejudice out of our hearts.

MR. R. G. HUGGINS:

NOW THAT you are returned from your vacation, I take pleasure in returning your booklets under separate cover which you so kindly sent me.

I thank you very much for the loan of them, and will say that they were the means of clearing up all my perplexities regarding the Seventh Day Adventist claims. They are very convincing and have saved me from being entangled under the old Mosaic law as I came very near joining their church through one of their ministers who became interested in me and was rapidly tutoring me into "the truth," as he called it, and which he said only the Seventh Day Adventist had the whole truth

I am enclosing 25 cents in stamps, for which kindly send me one complete set of "Bible Lessons." Again thanking you, I remain,

Sincerely yours in the one hope of our calling,

GEORGE HAINES.

Nebraska Conference Report

THE 35th Annual Conference of the Church of God in Nebraska met at Benson, a suburb of Omaha. Owing to a change of mind, the place of meeting was changed to Benson, at a late date, but as a much better place was secured, it was all for the best. Last winter while holding meetings at Kansas City, Brother Adams met Brother MacFarlane, and learned that he had read himself out of the orthodox churches, and was a reader of The Restitution. So after consulting Brother Brown it was decided to invite him to help us in the meeting, which he did: and his kind genial manner and forceful speaking was very much appreciated by all who heard him, and we hope to be able to meet him again. Brother Adams' sermons need no comment. He has been with us so long we could not do without him. Bible lessons were given by Brother Zeller, Lester Dixon, Brother Krogh, and Sister Free. Saturday afternoon was given to the Bereans. Their program, which consisted of piano and vocal solos, songs, recitations, and a Bible drill, all by the little ones, was very interesting, and showed patient work by their teacher, Sister Myrtle Adams.

The registration committee reported 81 brethren (not counting children) in attendance. A full record was not kept of the visitors. Brother Adams reported 212 sermons, 14 baptisms, 3 churches set in order. The total amount of money taken in during the year was $1594.83. After all expenses were paid a balance of $160.00 was in the treasury. We thank our dear Father in heaven for his love and care the past year, and pray that he may guide and direct us in the year's work we are just entering.

Dear Brethren, if we heed the counsel and admonitions given in this meeting we will not be found wanting when Jesus comes.

GOLDEN TEXT: John 1:12

TO A SEEKER OF FAME

I, TOO, once dreamed of fame and power
Amid the greater game;
I, too, once sought the crowning hour
That hails the victor's name--

Yes, I once thought the path of glory
Was all that one should seek;
Where one might live in song and story
Upon fame's tallest peak.

But I have seen the laurel token
Upon too many spent,
Who finished weary, worn and broken
In brooding discontent.

Who gave their souls to hear the cheering
Amid the mob's advance,
That turned too soon to louder jeering
Upon the slightest chance.

'Tis great to know that "God is love;"
That he gave his Son to save;
That all who place their trust in him
He'll ransom from the grave.

And so where other hearts are straining
Amid the storm and strife,
I'd rather hold the course maintaining
The even trials of life.

THE WANDERER'S RETURN

WE ARE going to tell you a little story. Yes, it has a moral, and we will admit that it is for the purpose of the moral that the story is told. The story is not original; no doubt it is all the better for that.

The story illustrates our carelessness as compared to God's watchfulness. It shows the difference between our thoughtlessness and conceit and the tender, loving care of God. But here's

THE STORY

There was a Wisconsin boy who ran away to get free from the restraints of life with his father and mother. He wrote a letter telling of his intention to keep his whereabouts secret. He said he would not write again, but that some day in the uncertain future when he had made up his mind to do so, he would return to his home. His father knew a minister who traveled much throughout the country and he requested that minister to keep a sharp look out for his son and if he ever found him that his father and mother loved him still and longed for his return. Two years later that minister got off the train at the railroad station of that little town. On the platform he saw the father of the boy. Answering the minister's inquiry the father explained that he was looking for his son who had not yet returned. Eleven years later that minister got off a train at that station. On the platform he met an aged man whose face seemed familiar. He was the father of the boy who had run away. But he had grown old and frail. His hair and beard were long and white. His face was wrinkled and his back bent. The minister introduced himself and asked what the aged man was doing at the station on such a bitter cold day. The old man replied that he was still looking for his boy, that the letter he had written just after leaving was the only word they had received from him and that every day for those thirteen years the father had gone down to meet the train in the hope that the prodigal might return. While the two men talked there came out of the train a man whose face at once arrested their attention. The old man instantly dropped his cane and ran as fast as his tottering limbs could carry him toward the stranger, who proved to be his own son. For thirteen years he had hoped, watched, and waited—going down to meet the train every day without fail. No night too dark, no day too cold, no storm severe enough to keep him from looking for his boy's return. And that is God's attitude towards us all. Wherever a person is dwarfing his soul by greed, hindering it by narrowness, wasting it by dissipation or neglecting it by indolence and indifference there is a God of justice, mercy, and truth, waiting with almost unlimited patience for the hour when that person will determine to give his soul a chance and to turn his footsteps from darkness to light. That is the meaning of Christ's crucifixion. Every thorn in his brow, every nail in his cross, every drop of his blood, every word that he uttered, every work that he wrought is intended to write that truth in our hearts. Living in the light of the cross means response to the love of God by guarding the divine signature on our moral natures, by living ever for the things that finally count and by refusing to exchange our spiritual birthright for anything.

THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL

By Alvin Ezell, Buffalo, Texas.

WHEN BALSHAZZAR was king he gave a great banquet, and a thousand of his lords were present. They drank and made merry, possibly not one thinking of their God who was able to do all things. The king ordered the golden and silver vessels which had been taken from the temple of God's house at Jerusalem—brought out that his guests might drink from them. As they drank they praised the different man-made gods.

Then, amidst their merry making, the fingers of a man's hand appeared and wrote on the wall. The king was so afraid he shook from fear. He called for his astrologers and soothsayers to read the writing, and to the one able to read it he promised a garment of scarlet, a chair of gold and a third rulership in the kingdom. The wise men came, but none of them could read the writing. This caused the king to be greatly troubled, so much so that his look was changed.

The queen suggested sending for Daniel, who she remembered had made known dreams to the king's father Nebuchadnezzar. Daniel was brought before the king who made known the promises of his gifts, but Daniel said, "Let your gifts be to another." He then told king Belshazzar that he had not humbled himself, although he knew that his father had been driven from his throne on account of his pride. Daniel told the king that the part of the hand had been sent from God and that the king had not glorified him. Then he gave the interpretation of the writing. It was that God had numbered his kingdom and finished it; that he had been weighed in the balance and found wanting; also that his kingdom was divided and given to the Medes and Persians.

That night king Belshazzar was killed.

Alvin is 12 years old and in the 7th grade. And he is honest enough to admit that his mother aided him with the story.

THOUGHTS THAT WILL HELP YOU.

DISAPPOINTMENT subdues the small man, but to the man of courage it acts as a spur. When you are able to speak well of your associates, you pay yourself an indirect complement.

Any reasonable thing you desire to accomplish you can do; provided you persevere along intelligent, square and fair lines.

The rule of reason and of right is the golden rule. It encompasses all that is great and good. It is the shortest story ever told of service to mankind.

To ignore an insult it the true test of moral courage. It is not necessary to be a man of strength to prove that you are the bigger and better man.

Man is a composite of what he sees, hears and thinks. He assimilates his associates, answers his ambitions and is talked into many things. So you see it is important that we associate ourselves and our faculties with the right kind of folk.

The reward that comes from useful and honest activities is real wealth. Any reward that must be measured by the amount of money a man has accumulated is nothing but riches.

There is a deal of difference between wealth and riches. One has wings.

Cheerfully, defiantly meeting all difficulties until you make or find a situation where you can be of general service to all concerned, is the thing that will bring you the rewards that will last. And they are not riches, they are wealth.

A LETTER FROM JENNIE THOMAS

DEAD LITTLE FRIENDS:

HAVE YOU ever stopped to think how much joy there is in heaven, also among your friends as well as everywhere else, when we forsake the pleasures of sin, give our hearts to the Lord, and in his name are baptized into the family of God.

When Jesus was on the earth he told a story about a man who had a hundred sheep, and said, "If the man lost one, he would leave the ninety and nine and search hard and steady until he found the one that was lost; then he would put it on his shoulders and carry it home rejoicing."

Jesus also said, "Likewise there is joy among the angels in heaven, when one sinner repents." Is it not a pleasant thought that people as unimportant as we can make joy in heaven by repenting of our sins, obeying God's commands, and walking in the footsteps of Jesus.

This is rather a fine letter that our little friend Miss Jennie has sent us. We wish to commend her for it. We also wish to call the attention of others of our little friends—those to whom the letter is addressed—that recently Miss Jennie renounced the world, accepting Jesus as her Savior and was baptized in his name. Like all good people, knowing the true meaning of happiness and joy, she wishes her friends to share her fortune. We who have surrendered our hearts to the Master assure you that when you do likewise, you will experience a joy that will be everlasting, a peace that cannot be purchased, and life that shall endure throughout eternity. Are the prospects worth while?

The Famous "Faithful Few"

IT IS Sunday morning. In many homes of North Scranton the following conversation may be heard—with variations:

"Are you going to church this morning?"

"No—I believe not, I'm tired."

He turns over and takes another snooze.

Fifteeen minutes pass.

"I wonder what time it is?" asks the wife.

"I'll look," replies the husband.

He reaches for his watch.

"Why, it's 8:30."

"It's too late now," she concludes, "and I won't bother to get the children ready for Sunday school. It'll be hot today anyway."

Half an hour later the tired feeling is forgotten.

"Lizzie, where's my new shirt?"

"Why, do you want it?"

"Yes. I'm going to the lake. Get the kids ready. We'll spend the day there. It's a dandy morning. Hurry up! It's nine o'clock now!"

Within an hour breakfast is over, dishes washed, children dressed, and they're off.

And that day the preacher preached to the famous "faithful few." A moving picture to behold!

Discouragement in pulpit and pew!

THE FAMOUS "FEW" PLUS YOU

It is Sunday morning. In many homes of North Scranton something like this occurs. The alarm clock sounds.

"Why, the alarm, Mary? Isn't this Sunday?"

Yes and we're going to church. Get up!"

"Oh, I'm too tired and sleepy. What made you set that thing and wake me up like this on a Sunday morning? Have a heart!"

"Aren't you a member of the Church of God?"

"Why-er-yes. I believe I am. But what of it."

"Don't you want the church to succeed?"

"Sure!"

"Have you no responsibility in making it a success?"

"Look here! Do you get part of the preacher's salary?"

"No. But I know this, that unless every member of the church is on the job the church will not succeed. Would a business place succeed if every employee went to work when he felt like it?"

"Er-er I guess not. No, it wouldn't."

"Well, now, we're going to do our part. Come on and get up! Play the man in regard to the church as you do in everything else. Get up!"

"All right; I'll do it! You're a jewel! Get my Sunday clothes."

And that day the preacher preached to a crowded house. A moving picture to behold!

Enthusiasm in pulpit and pew!—Selected.

Futurism Stated and Answered

Posthumous Work of Brother John L. Wince, of Pierceton, Indiana

WHEN DID the Roman Church have the power to perform miracles?

ALL ALONG through the centuries she has performed just such miracles or wonders as Paul ascribes to the Man of Sin. In Thess. 2:9 "teras," translated "wonders," is defined by Green, 'a prodigy, portent (Acts 2:9); a signal act, wonder, miracle (John 4:48)."

But what kind of wonder or miracle? Paul says pseduo or false—not veritable miracles, such as raising the dead. The false messiah had power to show signs and wonders almost sufficient to deceive the very elect. Jerome testifies that Barchochab pretended to vomit flames. Is it necessary to look to the future for a personal Antichrist to arise and perform miracles which will match those performed by Christ and his apostles?

2. WHEN DID she call down fire from heaven?

This question was, no doubt, suggested by Rev. 12:13 which reads: "And he doeth great wonders so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." The question reads "calleth," the text "maketh"—quite a difference. Papal Rome never made fire come down from heaven. Shall we then conclude that a future Antichrist will do this as literally as was done when "the fire of God" came down at the request of Elijah and consumed the captains and their fifty men each? that the future wonder will be equal to this? I answer No. The prophecy was fulfilled centuries ago, but not by the performance of real miracles such as those to which I have called attention. The wonder was done by the power symbolized by the beast which John saw coming up out of the earth, and which is distinguished from the first which had received the deadly wound and was afterwards healed. The first beast succeeds the dragon of the Roman government under the pagan form; the second beast is a younger brother of the first beast, but older than the image which it helps to make. This two-horned beast is the Greek Empire founded by Constantine, its capital Constantinople. It originated the civil power of the papacy and established its ecclesiastical supremacy. For a long time the primacy was in dispute between the patriarch of Constantinople or New Rome, and the bishop of Western Rome. The question was finally decided in favor of the latter, who soon became a temporal prince The emperors of New Rome helped the bishops on the Tiber to make good their claims to supremacy over the churches. Justinian made the pope of Rome head of the church and corrector of heretics. Phocas, instigated by Boniface III and in consequence of his personal dis-title of the Patriarch of Constantinople, still further established the Roman bishops' supremacy over the Christian church. So by the Eastern Empire the papacy was legalized. It was the empire of the East, New Rome, the power that made or helped to make the image to the first beast, and caused both the image and the beast to be worshipped, that "made fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men."

It was not one individual that was to do this but a government; for a beast, according to the laws of symbols as explained by inspiration itself, stands for a government or kingdom. This fire then must be a military wonder and employed to enforce homage to the first beast and its image—two governments; one in organic structure like the other. What did the New Greek Empire use for this purpose? Greek fire, the sign and wonder of four centuries of Grecian and Roman history. The composition of this fire was a profound secret, and sacredly kept from all other nations. This discovery or improvement of the military art was fortunately reserved for the distressful period when the degenerate Romans of the East were incapable of contending with the warlike enthussiasm and youthful vigor of the Saracens. The ignorant and superstitious barabrians who were taught that the mystery was revealed by an angel to the Greeks, looked upon the marvelous displays of this fire in battle as supernatural and coming down from heaven. It seemed miraculous to the uninitiated. The reader may think that this is not sufficient to fulfill the language of the Revelator. But why not? It served the purpose of a sign a wonder and even a miracle viewed from the standpoint of an observer utterly ignorant of how it was produced. The wonders exhibited deceived them that dwelt on the earth. That, here, symbolized by the beast, had not the power to perform a real miracle such as Christ wrought. This under the conditions then existing was not necessary. Something infinitely short of this would serve the purpose as well. So New Rome and papal Rome, though lacking the power to counterpart the miracles of God's Son, did exhibit signs and wonders, and by these deceived the ignorant, causing "all the world to wonder after the beast." Eastern Rome deceived men by means of Greek fire, but papal Rome deceived the ignorant millions by numerous frauds and counterfeits, some of them hardly worthy of the name of clever tricks.

"MAKETH FIRE COME DOWN FROM HEAVEN"

This is not more remarkable than what the Revelator saw in vision under the sixth (second woe) trumpet. Here he sees issuing from the mouths of the myriads of horses composing the Turkish cavalry, "fire and smoke and brimstone" (Rev. 9:17). Does anyone suppose that in order to fulfil this part of the vision fire and smoke and brimstone must issue literally from the mouths of horses? This would rank amongs the most notable supernatural works of the age! And the horses themselves as described by John would be supernatural creations, as nature produces no such creatures. The historical counterpart of the vision falls this side of the date that marks the discovery of gun powder. The symbol is complex being made up or composed of the warrier and his steed and the attributes common to both, and other attributes added to complete the picture. The symbol sets before us an army of Turkish horsemen in action and rushing into battle, discharging their pieces as they lean forward on their horses. Seen from a distance in front, the fire and smoke appear to issue from the mouths of the horses.

Friendly Words on Important Truths

DEAR FRIEND:

WHEN ONE looks around and sees the number of differences between professing Christians, I am not surprised at may enquirers after truth saying, as you say, "Better let these matters alone." Let me candidly ask you, Is this a fair way to judge God's Word? You admit the Bible to be God's Word. It has so many infallible proofs. You feel, also, that God's Word should not contradict itself. Have you then made a study for yourself of these important truths of God's Word? Nothing worth the having in this world is obtained without labor—generally in proportion to the value of the thing to be obtained. So as regards God's Word, we must give the whole of our undivided attention. Less time is given by many Christians, in the study of any one theme of the Bible, than they would give to the simplest earthly problem, and they base their belief and teaching on such shallow study. Hence comes the great variety of teaching given out to be scriptural. Therefore, my friend, rather than let the various opinions with which you meet deter you from the real study of God's Holy Word, give it the more searching examination. Men and women will differ, but let me repeat, these differences generally come because a thorough and comperhensive study is not given. People are satisfied to rest on one or two old passages, and on tradition. As a friend said to me, "No one better than my parents lived. What is good enough for them is good enough for me." The man's fidelity to his parents is to be commended, but it seems passing strange, in this age of enquiry and enlightenment, when people will not allow the opinions of their forefathers to suffice in merely temporal matters, that as regards matters of eternity they are quite ready to accept tradition, and also to allow others to think for them, without making personal enquiry whether these things be so.

Just one other remark, before passing on to the subject under enquiry. Many people say the future of the wicked is not their* concern, but God's and that God has not revealed these things. This is a very bold statement, and before being satisfied with it, I would earnestly urge, my friend, that you "search and see" if God has not revealed the fate of the wicked in very plain language, and also if he has not laid the responsibility of its proclamation on you, and whether he will not hold you accountable for your share in it. The gospel is two-fold. It deals, not only with the future of the righteous, but also with the future of the wicked, and God has made us, his people, accountable for a proper delivery of the same.

The gospel generally taught in our pulpits today, is, everlasting life of happiness for the righteous, and everlasting life of misery for the wicked. The first question is, Is this scriptural doctrine? the second question, Is it reasonable doctrine? the third, Do Scripture and reason conflict? One answer will suffice to these three questions, and I believe all thinking Christians will agree with the answer. It is an emphatic No! The Scriptures do not teach an eternity of misery, as the subjoined passages will show. Such a punishment, the reason which God has given us tells us, would be out of all proportion to the offence committed. That God should use his power to keep men, women and children alive for no other purpose than an eternity of torment, is more than the human brain can bear, and, moreover, gives God a character directly opposite to what he represents himself to be. Were any judge in any civilized land to sentence a boy to ten years' penal servitude for stealing a bun, the common sense and reason of the people would cry shame, and rightly so. Yet such would be a small injustice compared with the above. The Bible is the most reasonable, common-sense book in existence, and nowhere does God ask us to believe what is against reason and common-sense. The very enormity of such a punishment defeats its own end. No one believes it possible; therefore thousands (you have only to examine infidel writings) reject the Bible and the Christ of the Bible. I say deliberately, no one believes, for I never yet met anyone who believed God would send him there. There are a few passages supposed to teach it. Our first care is, however, to get all the facts of Scripture, and see which predominate. If two-thirds or seven-eighths teach the destruction of the wicked (as assuredly they do, as may be seen by examining the subjoined Scriptures), then it is plainly our duty to accept the major portion of Scripture, and the plain statement, as the true teaching, and then see if the few remaining passages apparently contradictory, are really so. You must take these passages, and examine them, both with the context, and in conjunction with other Scripture.

We will here, just as briefly as possible, try to examine some of these.

Matt. 25:46: "These shall go away into eternal punishment; but the righteous into life eternal" (R. V.). No one questions the eternal nature of both statements here. If everlasting life is eternal, the puishment is eternal, undoubtedly. The question is, what is the punishment which is to be eternal? What is the nature of it? Punishment is a general term. We must therefore seek to find what God says the punishment is (Psa. 37:10).

I believe the Bible teaches eternal punishment but that is very different indeed from eternal punishing. The second death, which is applied only to the wicked, is everlasting. The first death is not everlasting, because of the resurrection; the second death is everlasting; there will be no second resurrection; the wicked will have lost forever all that the righteous gain. We have a Bible example given us in Sodom and Gomorrah (2 Pet. 2). Let the orthodox preacher get his illustrations (and there are plenty) from the Bible, and he will not go astray, but they never do draw on Bible illustrations when illustrating the doom of the ungodly. Why? Simply because they will not fit their ideas. God tells us most emphatically that the wicked shall "perish," "be destroyed," "be utterly consumed," "be burned up," "be as chaff," "be as the fat of lambs," "be as wax," "be punished with everlasting destruction," "be like the beasts that perish," and "they shall be as though they had not been." "Yea, the wicked shall not be." These are Bible illustration. How often are they used? Never. The wicked are, instead, likened to Salamanders, and to the pattern in a potter's vessel, always burnt in, but never burnt out, one writer even going so far as to say, "The joys of the righteous will be increased by the torments of the wicked in hell." Awful doctrine, this!! God tells us plainly that he will destroy satan. Surely, then, he will not keep alive the victimes of satan in an everlasting hell! If he is to destroy death and hell, surely it means all in hell.

Mark 9:48. This is generally taken to mean conscience. Why? It is a fair question. What conceivable right have we to call it such? Have we any? Is there any scriptural ground for such? Yes, or No. There is none. Does Scripture give the meaning? Yes. Our Lord quotes from Isaiah these very words. Isaiah refers to the fires in the valley of Hinnom, and the worms. What the fire did not destroy the worms did; both fire and worms were continually there, destroying carcases, etc. Figuratively they did not die; there were always worms there; and the fire was not quenched; it was always fed. It does not say one word about conscience.

Rev. 14:10. 20:10 Both these passages as will be seen by the context, refer to a particular class of the wicked, but the term "forever" is limited by the words, "day and night," and we know day and night shall be no more. "Forever," in Scripture, is always limited to the act with which it is connected, for instance, the Aaronic priesthood, which lasted 1500 years, and Job, speaking of the Leviathan, says, "That thou shouldst take him as a servant forever," i. e. the lifetime of the Leviathan. For further example, turn to Isa. 34:9, 10, where almost identical words are used regarding Idumea. "No traveler finds in the present condition of ancient Idumea the literal fulfilment of Isaiah's poetic prediction. Desolate indeed is the land; totally ruined are the cities; but they are not now sending up the smoke of their burning. Yet the poet-seer is no false prophet. The doom which he foretold has overtaken these cities. We behold in it a destruction which is not only total, but continuing, and so fitly symbolized by the ever ascending smoke of their burning." It is the effects that are everlasting. No doubt those enjoying eternal life will remember "forever" the awful doom, without the necessity of the more awful doom of being kept alive in an eternity of torment.

*The orthodox teacher is very ready to disclaim the idea of eternal torment as being his. His humanity could not conceive anything so deadful. So what does he do? Why, he throws the responsibility on God's shoulders, and says it is God's doing, not his. He does not care, so long as he is not charged with so awful a conception.

The story of Dives and Lazarus is a parable, and does not refer to the future state of the wicked at all, but to the Jews and Gentiles, the Jews to this day being in torment in Russia, and elsewhere. It was this that offended the Jews (Luke 17:1).

I am aware many say, "There will be weeping and gnashing of teeth." So does the Bible, and so do I. Surely, if fire is the agent used to cause the ultimate destruction of the wicked, it will cause weeping and wailing. But the Bible nowhere tells us that such a state of things will be everlasting. It is sometimes urged that if we teach the final destruction of the wicked, we take away the detriment of evil. If the fact that a man has to meet his Maker, to give an account, and receive stripes, many or few, and then lose forever all he might have gained (and bear in mind he will realize then what he might have gained, the mere realization of which, even in this life, has utterly broken the spirit of many a man), if this will not deter him from evil, nothing will, not even eternity of punishment.

I. They shall not live forever (John 5:39, 40; 1 John 5:11, 12; John 6:53; 3:36; 1 John 3:15; Matt. 19:16, 17; Rev. 22:14; Isa. 55:3; Ezek. 18:23; Deut. 30:19, 20).

II. They shall die (Ezek. 18:4, 20, 24, 26, 31, 32; Rom. 6:21-23; 7:5; James 1:15; Rom. 6:16; 8:13; Rev. 21:8; Rom. 1:32; Rev. 20:13, 14; Rev. 2:11; 20:6; 21:4; James 5:19, 20; 1 John 5:16).

III. They shall perish (Job 20:4-7; Psa. 92:9; Rom. 2:12; Psa. 49:20; 73:27; Prov. 19:9; 2 Thess. 2:9, 10; 1 Cor. 8:10, 11; Psa. 37:20; 2 Cor. 2:15, 16; John 3:14-17; Luke 13:2-5; 2 Pet. 3:9; Psa. 2:10-12. Acts 13:40, 41).

IV. They shall be cut off (Psa. 54:4, 5; 37:9, 22, 28, 34, 38; Psa. 94:23; Nahom 1:15; Prov. 2:21, 22).

V. They shall be destroyed (Job 21:29, 30; 31:2, 3; Psa. 145:20; Rom. 11:22; Psa. 55:23; Psa. 5:6; Prov. 16:18; 13:13; Isa. 1:28; Prov. 13:20; Phil. 3:18, 19; Rom. 3:15-17; 2 Pet. 3:16; Prov. 29:1; Matt. 7:13; 10:28; Acts 3:23; 2 Pet. 2:12; Psa. 144:6; 92:7; 37:38; 1 Tim. 6:9; Psa. 73:3, 17, 18; 2 Thess. 1:9, 10; Rev. 11:18;; 1 Thess. 5:3; Prov. 1:27).

VI. They shall be consumed (Zeph. 1:1-3; Psa. 37:20; Isa. 1:28; 66:16, 17; Psa. 59:13; Isa. 29:18-20; Psa. 104:35; Heb. 12:28, 29).

VII. The agent of puishment is fire and brimstone (Psa. 50:3; 11:6; 21;8, 9: 140:10; Matt. 3:10; 18:8, 9; Rev. 21:8; Heb. 10:26, 27; Matt. 13:40-42; Rev. 20:9, 14, 15; Matt. 25:41, 46; Jude 7; Luke 17:29, 30).

VIII. They shall be burned up, root and branch (Matt. 13:30; John 15:6; Psa. 92:3; Isa. 1:31; 33:14; Heb. 6:7, 8; Mal. 4:1-3).

IX. Their punishment shall take place, not at death, but at the coming of Christ (Job 21:29, 30; John 12:48; Matt. 25:31, 32, 41; 2 Pet. 2:4, 9, 17; Jude 14, 15, 6; Matt. 13: 47-50; 2 Thess. 1:7-20; Rev. 22:12).

Endless life is only obtained through Christ Jesus (John 11:25; John 3:15; 10:28; 17:2; Rom. 7:23).

Let none dare speak lightly of the punishment reserved for the enemies of the Lord. It will truly be "a fearful thing" for such "to fall into the hands of the living God." Because we have found the eternal torment theory unscriptural, it does not therefore make the future punishment of the wicked a thing to be lightly spoken of. The destruction of the wicked, if spoken of in the language of Scripture, could never be anything but a solemn and awful thing to contemplate.

Yours faithfully.

The Genesis of Sin

Lust when it conceives brings forth sin.

WHEN CONSIDERING this sentence of James, in conjunction with the verses which precede and follow it, we find teaching of a very pertinent character set before us by the apostle. The inspired penman says, "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lusts, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." The thoughtful consideration of these two verses reveals food for endless thought, the verses containing evidences concerning temptation, its origin and what constitutes it, a definition of lust, sin and the wages of sin. It reveals the foolishness of individuals who advocate a source of temptation outside of the human mind. Physical agencies must operate on moral agencies. Even so man must desire before he is tempted. The particular feature of the subject for our consideration, however, is the relationship if lust and temptation to sin. Lust when it conceives brings forth sin, and sin when it is finished, brings forth death.

The prime meaning of lust is given us in most dictionaries as desire. Lust or desire, then, may be of many kinds, and is manifested in an innumerable number of forms. The term then is not confined, in its usage, to a particular kind of desire. A desire is not confined to evil or sin, but can be a desire after God just as much as after ephemeral things. You may desire for food, raiment, love, honor, glory, power, riches, or wisdom, and after righteousness. To illustrate that this usage will stand the the test of scriptural usage, we may take a few verses in which it is used.

Psa. 112:10: "The desire of the wicked shall perish."

Psa. 10:17: "Lord thou hast heard the desire of the humble."

The same word is here used in both cases. And the word translated "lust" in James 1:14 is used in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16:21). "Desiring to be fed of the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table," and by Jesus in Luke 22:15: "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer."

Further uses of lust are given by Paul. Rom. 7:7: "For I had not know lust except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." Jesus, John 8:44: "Ye are of your father the diabolos, and the lusts of your father ye will do," etc.

In the last quotation we have Jesus personifying Adam as the devil because he followed his own lusts in eating of the forbidden fruit. Though one of the verses quoted (from Romans) uses the word lust to mean sin, a transgression of divine law, the word itself by no means conveys that thought.

In support of the assertion that lust is not sin, let us consider the temptation of Jesus forty days in the wilderness. James says man is tempted by being drawn away of his own lusts or desires. The gospel narratives are in perfect harmony in setting forth the fact that Jesus was tempted by being drawn away of his own desires. Being forty days and forty night without food, he was tempted to turn stones into bread; also the thought, "cast thyself down" and all these kingdoms will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. A desire or lust for food to satisfy the pride of the fleshly mind, and for power. The last Adam (a life giving spirit) who passed through all these trials, manifested his natural desires, but unlike the first Adam, did not yield to them.

The first Adam came from the hand of the Creator, a perfect moral being, having within himself the power to obey or disobey his God. He had desires,, the desires of the flesh,, but he had no tendency either in the direction of good or evil, for if he had, God would have been the Creator of an imperfect creature. A very serious reflection on the character of the Deity.

The second Adam came from the hand of the Creator (being begotten by the power of the Holy Spirit through the medium of a woman) a perfect moral being, having desires, but no tendencies, for if he had, do we not reach the same conclusion as we did in the case of the first Adam? for both were sons of God; one by creation, the other by begettal.

When Jesus desired food he did not sin. Lust is not sin; for "lust, when it conceives, brings forth sin," and as the Scriptures emphatically teach "he did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth," lust did not conceive. The question before us then is, when does lust conceive? The word "conceived" conveys the thought of maturity. When you are studying a theme, and your thoughts on the matter mature, you conceive or understand. Physiological uses of it convey this same thought of maturity, so we conclude lust conceiving would be the individual consenting thereto. Sin then is always an act, a transgression or violation of the laws of God. This act would be the mind of the person consenting to the evil, and it may be manifested by a visible action of the individuals. This sin not being manifest to the eye does not, however, interfere with the fact that the consent is the committing of sin. We find this taught very pointedly by Jesus when he says, "Whoso looketh after a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery." Looking after the woman was not sin, for the man must lust or desire after her before he consents to the evil.

To further illustrate this, let us take an every day occurrance. A boy going along the street pauses before a display of fruit a dealer has placed along the front of his store. Looking at the fruit, the boy thinks, how easy it would be to help myself! This is what James characterizes "lust." If the boy stole the fruit it would be sin, an act of transgression. If he thought, "I would steal it but I might get caught!" he is still a sinner; for he has consented to the desire. But if his thought was, "I will not do it; it is stealing," he is not a sinner for he did not transgress.

The boy had a desire for the fruit, a tendency in the direction of evil, but he overcame it. This tendency in the direction of evil is a mental defect in all who owe their origin to flesh and blood, by reason of the weakness of the flesh. The tendency if overcome would be one more step in the building up of a moral character. This is the profession of the believer. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its passions and lusts." Of these same tendencies Jesus says, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame and am sat down with my Father on his throne." These weaknesses of the flesh, from which we suffer are tendencies to transgress, but not being the transgressions themselves are not sin, for 1 John 3:4 says, "Sin is the transgression of law." Latent tendency then by reason of inherited weakness is a part of the physical body. Latent sin is a physical impossibility, for James 1:14 says,

"Lust when it conceives brings forth sin."

Remember the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

October 3rd, Sister Morron, of Salem, Ohio, met with us at the Lord's table.

Brother and Sister Newman Smith announce the birth of Mary Elizabeth on Oct. 4, 1920, 11:15 P. M. Heartiest congratulations.

Being dead yet speaketh." This statement is as true of Brother John L. Wince as of Enoch, of whom Paul makes the declaration in Heb. 11. See the first article of a series on prophecy by Brother Wince in this number.

The Young People's Society met Friday evening, Oct. 14th, at the home of Brother and Sister Huggins, 10623 Lee Ave. Twenty-nine members responded to the roll call. After the business meeting the lesson was turned over to Alice Chappelle whose subject was "The Personality of the Devil." The leader endeavored to prove that the personal devil of modern religion does not exist and that the theory is due merely to a wrong translation or misinterpretation of the Scriptures. The meeting was closed with song and prayer, followed by an enjoyable social hour.

Secret Societies

DEAR EDITOR:

THE QUESTION of joining a secret society has come into my life. I am a young man, and ask you what you think of such societies. Is it all right for a young man in the faith to join such an organization ?

Editorial Comment

USE GREAT care and caution in joining any worldly club, especially where secrecy is pledged. There are many things with which you become acquainted which it is improper for you to reveal (Prov. 11:13; 20:19). The same is true of associations as of individuals. Our objections to sworn secrecy in so-called "fraternal orders" are grounded on the self-evident truth that it is wrong for a person to promise under oath that he will not reveal matters about which he is ignorant, and that he will obey a code of laws with which he is not acquainted.

OATHS IN IGNORANCE UNSCRIPTURAL

Secret obligations assumed in ignorance are inconsistent with reason and jeopardize our subjection to the law of Scripture. With the saint this law is always supreme (Acts 4:19; Gal. 3:10). When we make a promise under oath to keep secret the transactions of a worldly society, we know not but that the Scriptures may require us to reveal them. When we swear, blindfolded, that we will obey the laws of the order, laws with which we are not acquainted when we swear, we know not but that the law of God may require us to disobey them. Practically we are making promises, assuming obligations, and binding ourselves with oaths, when we join a secret society, to do that which, under such circumstances, cannot be given "in judgment" (Jer. 4:2).

The assurance of some friend that there is nothing in these orders inconsistent with the truth, that everything is "perfectly alright," does not help out very much. If the friend knows whereof he speaks, he may swear loyalty thereto; but he is asking us to swear in ignorance nevertheless. Such an obligation is ensnaring and enslaving to the conscience. God alone is Lord of the conscience (Matt. 10:28; Jas. 4:12; Rom. 14:4). To bring ourselves under an obligation to obey unknown laws is manifestly doing violence to the freedom of conscience. We voluntarily make ourselves "the servants of men" (1 Cor. 7:23). When Abraham directed his servant to swear to him, although he informed him of the matter of the oath, yet his servant did not swear until he first understood what he would be required by his oath to do. This was made known to him by Abraham. After he understood he swore (Gen. 24:2-9). See also the case of David and Jonathan (1 Sam. 20).

THE PRINCIPLE OF SECRECY WRONG

Associations formed upon the principles of secrecy are liable to objections of a serious character. A few are here subjoined:

I. Christ did not act upon the principle of secrecy. He says: "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing" (John 18:20). He "lighteneth every man" (John 1:9).

II. The apostles did not act upon the principles of secrecy. They "renounced the hidden things of dishonesty," and "commended themselves to every man's conscience by the manifestation of the truth," and had their "conversation in the world in simplicity and godly sincerity" (2 Cor. 4:2; 1-12).

III. Secrecy is the favorite principle of the wicked. Their "works" are said to be in "the dark" (Isa. 29:15), and are called "the works of darkness" (Eph. 5:11). They love "darkness, because their deeds are evil" (John 3:19).

IV. Finally, the fellowship of believers with societies, where the members are bound together by covenants of love and friendship, and constitute a distinct and separate brotherhood, is inconsistent with that principle of separation from the world which is so repeatedly, explicitly, and emphatically enjoined upon us in the word of God (Exod. 23:32; 34:12, 15; 2 Cor. 6:14-18; Psa. 106:35; 16:3; 119:63).

"Good Company"

TO THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH—GREETING:

MY PROPOSED booklet, "Good Company," is now in the hands of The Restitution Publishing Company for pubication. As my work progressed, I realized that a book of 80 pages would not afford sufficient space to handle the different subjects properly, so concluded to increase the size to 100 pages, as sufficient to accommodate and contain all that I wished my message to carry. This increase in size Brother Griffiths informs me will increase the cost of publication proportionally, and it may be necessary to make the price a few cents per copy more than was at first announced for the smaller book, to cover at least a part of the increased cost; but the larger and more complete form will be worth many times the slight difference which may be found necessary in the price. The title "Good Company," may be a trifle vague to some, therefore,, I have asked Brother Huggins to publish in The Restitution a copy of the index page. This will give some idea of the nature and character of the contents of the book.

"We Fly Away"

MY DEAR MR. HUGGINS:

IT OCCURRED to me that the following might interest you: When my wife and I got home from our little Union church of Los Altos and were eating our Sunday dinner, I asked her if she noticed the words, "we fly away" in the Scripture reading. "The days of our years are three score and ten . . . . for it is soon cut off and we fly away." She smiled and said, "I did and I thought of you and your pet doctrine" (that the dead sleep till the resurrection). I had to acknowledge that the words and the connection certainly favored her belief that all good Methodists when they die go direct to heaven. Then I suggested that we investigate a modern translation which might give a different rendering.

Now my daughter had recently bought "The Complete Bible in Modern English" by Farrar Fenton. This is a remarkable translation begun in 1853 and completed after fifty years of continuous study and labor. In the preface to it Mr. Fenton says: "My conclusion is that in the Hebro-Christian Scriptures we have the only key that unlocks the mystery of the universe to the intellect of man and the mystery of man to himself." He then adds this to me so unexpected acknowledgment: "In this conviction I present this Bible to my race, not as a parson paid to preach it up, to use the vulgar phrase of modern men, whom Solomon would have called fools; but as a man who began the investigation of the possibility of a divine revelation, as an absolute disbeliever in any such thing, and who after years of honest and independent research has become a profound believer in such a revelation as the only solution of the mystery of existence; not only of man, but of all things." What a delightful testimony!

But to get back to "we fly away": I handed this Bible of Fenton's to Mrs. Nagel and in a few minutes she read to our table round of six: "Our years are consumed in a sigh; our days are but seventy years. But if a strong man reaches eighty his pride is but sorrow and grief. They pass quick and expire."

Yours fraternally.

J. J. NAGEL.

P. S.—You would be greatly pleased I am sure with what Mr. Fenton has to say in his preface and introduction from which I have quoted but a few sentences.

J. J. N.

The Word Made Flesh

IN THE beginning was the Word, the word was made flesh (John 1:1-14). Word, Greek, "Logos," spoken word, word of promise. Logos is not an entity, an individual, something of itself. but represents the purpose, the stated purpose of a living responsible thing or person. In this case it is the spoken promise concerning the purpose of the Creator of the first human pair. When Adam and Eve had transgressed the law given to them by the Creator, and brought upon themselves the pronouncement of the threatened penalty: "In (Hebrew "be," which is in other occurrences in the Scripture also translated "after") "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Hope was, however, inspired by the spoken word: "The Woman's Seed shall bruise the serpent's head; and thou shalt bruise his heel."

This is the first Scripture record of any promise concerning the descendants of Adam and Eve: the evident meaning of which is: By your transgression of the law given to you, you have brought on yourselves and all your posterity that which I forewarned you would occur, namely, death. The disobedient act (in its effect) implanted the seed of decay, in your body, which will finally result in returning it to the dust from which you were formed. You can transmit to your children that which you possess, namely, a decaying nature which ends in death. But your transgression shall not thwart the purpose Deity had in creating the earth and man upon it: namely, to fill the earth with a righteous and obedient race who will glorify Jehovah, and fill the earth with his glory.

He will therefore in the fulness of time raise up from your descendants, One who will be obedient in all things required of him, and merit by reason of such obedience the right to eternal life; because he shall of his own free will submit to have his life taken by his enemies the Serpent's Seed, and thus die in behalf of the race of which he is a constituent part. Jehovah, his Father, recognized him an obedient son, and raised him from the dead, and constituted him the Savior and Life Giver to any and all, who will recognize and acknowledge that death is their portion believe the word of promise and become obedient to the faith. The sins of all such are blotted out. If death overtakes them, they will be raised from the dead and be given eternal life. Thus the seed of the serpent bruises the heel of the seed of the woman, that is causes the death of the Messiah: but by his death and resurrection he breaks the power of sin, bruises, crushes the head of the serpent; abrogates, destroys, and causes to cease that which the serpent in tempting Eve to disobey caused to be implanted in the human constitution, namely, Death. Then the earth will be restored to its Edenic condition, and be filled with a regenerated and righteous people, all to the praise of Jehovah through the merits of Jesus the Christ, the logos that was made flesh, dwelt, and will again dwell among us.

S. T. BLESSING.

The Parables of Christ

Number Five

THIS PARABLE, with the one following, must be studied together that the student may be benefited in his investigations. It is impossible for one to be a beneficiary of the truth herein hidden who does not know God's purpose concerning the kingdom of heaven. The modern day thology represents this parable as teaching that the sinner becomes the discoverer of the field and the treasure, which is Christ. This theory is far from giving a true and intelligent explanation of this parable. Jesus has at no time been purchasable, but has purchased through his precious blood all the beneficiaries to whom the promise had been intended by the Father. Neither has the sinner anything to purchase Christ with. Their theory suits their theology, not the gospel believed and taught by Jesus and his apostles. It requires an enlightened mind to behold the field and the treasure.

It is a well recognized truth that Israel was to have the first opportunity to accept the privilege of becoming a holy nation and God's trasure (Exod. 19:5). The parable of the vineyard, as recorded in Isa. 5, shows what care God had bestowed upon them to accomplish his purpose, but instead of it bringing forth grapes, it brought forth wild grapes. The prophet in declaring this parable says, "The vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant." In the use of this parable as recorded in Matt. 21 Jesus compared the vineyard and the kingdom of heaven which he would give to a people who would bring forth fruits thereof. The commission to go into the world and preach the gospel was not given to the apostles until after his resurrection from the dead. They were so impressed with their first mission that it required time and a vision to send Peter to the house of Cornelius.

The seven parables recorded in Matt. 13 were specially intended to instruct his apostles in the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. They became scribes thoroughly instructed into the kingdom of heaven. Let us briefly as possible disclose what we understand to be the hidden treasure.

It is not Christ, but what he came to purchase. His mission was to his own people and nation. It is recorded that he came to his own, and his own received him not. As many as received him gave the power to become the sons of God (John 1:11, 12). He repatedly announced that his mission was to Israel and that he was the true Messiah. Unless they would accept his Messiahship God would judge them an unworthy nation and seek for a people who would be worthy. He announced to them that he came to seek and to save that which was lost. When he sent his apostles out to preach the gospel he sent them to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. They were forbidden to enter into the Gentiles

The proof given above justifies us in revealing what we understand to be the hidden treasure. We again assert that these parables were to instruct the apostles in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Therefore this parable must contain one of the basic principles of the kingdom of heaven. The two elements, the treasure and the field, must have a hidden meaning. You will note please that the apostles did not request that Jesus declare it to them. To us this is an evidence that he declared it directly to them and not to the multitude first. We therefore declare that the treasure is the promises made to the fathers concering their part in the kingdom of heaven. The promise made to Abraham was that he should be the inheritor of the land, and a treasured seed. Abraham was the recipient of a deed to all the land from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates, also a seed to possess the land. The treasure is therefore Israel dispersed and hidden among the nations of the world.

Marriages

BROTHER GEORGE Hodson and Sister Myrtle Strawn were married Thursday evening, Sept. 30. 1920, at the home of Brother Hodson, in the presence of a few invited relatives, and a sumptuous supper served in their honor.

Brother Hodson is one of the Elders of the Roll church and is one of the substantial members, living on a farm in that vicinity.

Sister Strawn was a member of the Hillsburg church and one of the active and highly respected workers there.

These two good people were bereaved of their former companions about the same time two years ago last July. We are glad they found congenial acquaintance with each other and have decided to share the burdens and joys of life together. May the heavenly Father add his blessing.

D. E. VAN VACTOR.

HILDEN C. ANDERSON, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Anderson, and Miss Myrtle J. hnson, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Johnson, all of Hector, Minn. It was soon apparent to even a casual observer that this young couple were held in high esteem by their neighbors and friends. Two days before her marriage Myrtle put on Christ and starts life in the best possible manner. Her greatest ambition now is to have her husband unite with her in the hope of the kingdom. After the ceremony a sulendid dinner was served, then they in a happy mood started in their auto for a short honeymoon trip. In a few days they will be at home to their frineds on their large farm three miles north of Hector. We pray for them a happy and proseprous journey through life.

GOLDEN TEXT: Psalm 103:4

THE SHEPHERD TRUE

I WAS wandering and weary
When my Savior came unto me:
For the ways of sin grew dreary,
And the world had ceased to woo me!
And I thought I heard him say,
As he came along his way,
O silly souls! come near me:
My sheep should never fear me.
I am the Shepherd true!

At first I would not hearken,
And put off till the morrow;
But life began to darken,
And I was sick with sorrow;
And I thought I haerd him say,
As he came along his way,
O silly souls! come near me;
My sheep should never fear me,
I am the Shepherd true!

At last I stopped to listen;
His voice could not deceive me;
I saw his kind eyes glisten
So anxious to relieve me;
And I thought I heard him say,
As he came along his way,
O silly souls! come near me;
My sheep should never fear me,
I am the Shepherd true!

He took me on his shoulder,
And tenderly he kissed me;
He bade my love be bolder,
And said how he had missed me;
And I'm sure I heard him say,

As he went about his way.
O silly souls! come hear me:
My sheep should never fear me,
I am the Shepherd true!

Strange gladness seemed to move him.
Whenever I did better;
And he coaxed me so to love him,
As if he was my debtor,
And I always heard him say,
As he went along his way,
O silly souls! come near me;
My sheep should never fear me,
I am the Shepherd true!

I thought his love would weaken,
As more and more he knew me:
But it burneth like a beacon,
And its light and heat go through me;
And I ever hear him say.
As he went along his way,
O silly souls! come near me;
My sheep should never fear me,
I am the Shepherd true!

Let us do, then, dearest brothers,
What will best and longest please us
Follow not the ways of others,
But trust ourselves to Jesus;
We shall ever hear him say.
As he goes along his way,
O silly souls! come near me;
My sheep should never fear me.
I am the Shepherd true!

CHRISTIAN LIFE GUIDE

In Four Parts: Part One
How to Begin a Christian Life

THE INVITATION: "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden" (Matt. 11:28). The command: "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom if God is at hand: repent ye and believe te gospel" (Mark 1:14, 15). What to believe: "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 11:16). That God is the Creator, upbuilder and preserver of the world and all things therein (Gen. 1:1); that Jesus is "the Christ, the Son of God" (Matt. 16, 16); that the love of God prompted him to send his Son into the world to live a sinless life so that he might be unto man wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, and that all who would thus accept him, showing their belief in God's own appointed way through a burial and resurrection in the waters of baptism— would not perish, but have everlasting life (John 3:16; 1 Cor. 1:30; Acts 8:38); that Jesus is coming again to restore the world's lovliness and perfection, to resurrect the sleeping saints and change from mortal to immortal the living ones; to take unto himself the kingdoms of this world which he shall rule in in equity and peace, making them the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ (1 Thess. 1:10; 4:13-18; Rev. 11:15).

Duties and privileges of the believer: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good-works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16). "Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you" (1 Thes. 5:16-18). Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more as we see the day approaching" (Heb. 10:22-25). "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. 'Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom: teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord" (Col. 3:15, 16). Following the example of the apostles and early church of meeting on the first day of the week for the breaking of bread in remembrance of the death, burial and promise of return of Jesus our Lord. Prayer and thanksgiving to God and exhorting one another in the things pertaining to our most holy faith (1 Cor. 11:23). Forsaking the world and its deeds of unrighteousness and living a pure life in glory and honor to God who then shall be a Father unto us as we shall be sons and daughters to him (2 Cor. 6:17, 18). And above all the putting on, living in, and practicing charity— which is holy love—for we have "faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity" (1 Cor. 13:13).

DAILY THOUGHTS

The whole creation groaneth and travaileth	Rom. 8:22
Herein is love . . . that he loved us	1 John 4:10
We love him because he first loved us	1 John 4:19
Rejoice . . . ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings	1 Pet. 4:13
Fear not neither be discouraged	Deut. 1:21
I will lead them in paths they have not known	Isa. 42:16
My heart shall rejoice in thy salvation	Psa. 13:5

OBEDIENCE

A MAN, worldly wise, once said: "Example is a sincere service that big—in the sense of great—men render without calling the attention of the world to their doing.

"Precept is the doings of the small man who constantly is blowing his horn to attract attention."

In this connection do you remember what the prophet Samuel said to Saul after Saul had disobeyed God's commands concerning the destruction of the Amalekites and their goods? "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifice, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." When God commands there is but one thing to do, and that is obey. For our mind is not as God's mind, and disobedience no matter from what object, is sin. There is no compromise with the commands of God. What God says in to be done, must be done, else we are a rebel to his cause.

NOT SO WITH THE CHRISTIAN

FULL MANY a gem of purest ray serene
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

This is absolutely true regarding gems and flowers, and also the natural talents of man regarding business and social affairs. But when it comes to man's spiritual talents the poem does not find place, for our spiritual life is simply a reflection of the love and grace of God according as we have love for him and faith in his Son. Our faith and hope can no more be hidden from the world of worldly men than can the sun at noonday. If we love God we can not help but show it in our dealings with our fellows. If we have faith in Christ, we must show the spirit of Christ, and he went about doing good; not only to his friends but also to those who would harm him. James says: "Faith without works is dead;" and we no more could live among the evil things of this life without our lives shining out in contrast than could a powerful electric light be obscured because the night be dark. The darker the night the more noticeable the light, and if we be Christian the more evil about us the brighter will the righteousness of Christ that is within us reflect. No, the Christian must live separate from the world, and so living there is no danger of his "sweetness being wasted on the desert air."

Where was Abraham?

Abraham . . . . dwelt in Charran: and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, weherin ye now dwell (Acts 7:4).

THE NARATIVES that we have of Bible characters, not all of the details are given—only the high points, so to speak. Great gaps are left to be filled in by the student. Sometimes hints are given in other places which enables to help fill in.

The history of Terah and his family is a case in point When Terah was seventy years old he was the father of three sons, Abram, Nahor, and Haran. Haran was the father of three children, Lot, Milcah, and Iscah. He died in his native land, Ur. Now the Lord had called Abram to leave his country, separate from kindred, and go to a land that the Lord would show him, and that he should become a great nation, and in him should all the families of the earth be blessed. It seems that Terah, Abram's father, took on himself to be a leader in this exodus. Abram had married Saria his half sister; Nahor had married Milcah, daughter of his brother Haran. Terah leaving Nahor and his family in Ur, took Abram, Saria and Lot and started to the land of Canaan. When they arrived at Haran, probably so named in honor of Lot's father, they concluded to dwell there for a while.

Nahor emigrating from Ur, joined his father at Haran, probably before Abram had made a fresh start to get to Canaan.

When Abram was seventy-five years old, having been admonished of the Lord a second time, or remembering the first command, took Saria his wife, and Lot his nephew, and all their servants and substance that they had gotten in Haran, and went forth to go into he land of Canaan, into which land they came. When Abraham (name had been changed) had been in the land twenty-five years, Isaac was born; in about as many more years, at God's command, Isaac had been offered on the altar. After these things it was told Abraham that Nahor his brother had a family of eight children by Milcah his wife, who was Abraham's niece. This would stir in Abraham a desire to see his brother's family, and also his father who was living in Haran. Likely he said to Sarah, let us go and visit our kindred at Haran. Leaving his son Isaac in charge, he and Sarah would travel in state becoming his high station and wealth, with servants, and camels and all things requisite for the journey. Arriving at Haran he found his father feeble, and death near at hand. He remained until after his father died, aged 205 years. Stephen in Acts 7 says, Abraham dwelt at Haran, and when his father was dead he removed to this land wherein ye (Jews) now dwell. Arriving in Canaan he rejoined Isaac. Sarah, Isaac's mother, died when Isaac was 37, and Abrham 137 years old. Three years after Abraham desired that Isaac would marry, but he wished him to marry one of his kindred in Haran, whom Abraham had observed while he was there, no doubt particularly Rebekah his great grand niece, the daughter of Bethuel, who was the son of Nahor and Milcah. So Abraham called his chief steward, exacted an oath of him, and sent him to Haran to bring home to Isaac a wife, which he did in the person of Rebekah. This thrilling courtship may be read in Genesis 24th chapter.

LOVE WORKETH GREAT WONDERS

LOUD, ANGRY arguments can be heard over all the room, no matter how large. But when over the participants separate, forgetting the points of argument, and remembering only the angry remarks. But by using a soft, quiet tone in reason, even though at the time you do not convince, you leave no hard feelings, and a future opportunity to reopen the subject always can be had. Remember this when next trying to convince someone that their views of religious things may not be the right way. Love is God's way, and it is best when we make it ours.—ALEX. D. DONALDSON.

Life Immortal

LIKE THE glorious light of day,
Like the bright sun in his way,
Like a life without a sorrow,
Like a day without a morrow,
Like a never-fading tree
So shall life immortal be.

Like a smoothly flowing river,
Flowing on and stopping never,
Like a sure foundation stone,
Like a man whose work is done,
Like the ever-rolling sea
So shall life immortal be.

Like the diamond sparkling bright,
Sending forth its flames of light,
Like a clear and cloudless morning,
In the east the sky adorning;
Like the stars in heaven we see
So shall life immortal be.

Like the treasured golden grain,
Like the sunshine after rain,
Like a royal diadem,
Like the New Jerusalem,
Like a lovely bride to be
Clad in immortality.

Like the palace of a king,
Like a never-failing spring,
Like the gold tried in the fire,
Like the ones that never tire,
Like te air when pure and free
So shall life immortal be. Selected by Brother and Sister A. ASHUTE.

Will the man who says he can't do a thing, ever do it?

Chronology of the Old Testament

Beginning with Adam and Ending at the Birth of Jesus Christ

ERA OF SOLOMON'S TEMPLE--403 YEARS

THE TEMPLE Era is the other problem of Bible chronology that has been the subject of much discussion. By adhering strictly to the statements found in the books of Kings a solution is arrived at that will commend itself to any Bible student.

The total time allotted to the kings of Israel is 241 years, and to the kings of Judah during the same period of the kingdom's division is 259. But in both instances it is found to have been 233 years.

By a consideration of the many cross references referring to events occurring to Israel and Judah during the division, the following facts are brought to our attention. First, that the kings of Israel have to their credit as whole years every year in which they reigned; that is, the reigns recorded in the first book of Kings. This rule was applied to only one king's reign (Jehoahaz, B. C. 834) in the 2nd book. It appears that Omri, who founded Samaria, has this rule applied to both his reigns in Tirzah and Samaria. See table of kingdom's division, B. C. 907 and 902; also 1 Kings 16: 18-24. When these extra years are deducted we have left but 233 years, for the period of the reign of the kings of Israel. Second, it will be seen by consulting the tables that there are extra years, in three instances, to be deducted on account of two kings of Judah reigning at the same time. See 2 Kings 8:16. They are, four years of Jehoram with Jehoshaphat; twelve years of Azariah, while Amaziah his father lived; and ten years of Ahaz during his father Jothram's reign. Deduct these twenty-six years from the 259 and we have the same 233 years for the reigns of the kings of Judah during the division.

The most important item of a few more which could be given more detailed consideration is the statement that "Azariah began to reign (alone) in Jeroboam's twenty-seventh year," which is to be reckoned back from the end of his reign, it being the fifteenth from the beginning, as Azariah began to reign (alone) upon the death of his father, Amaziah, who lived only fifteen years after the death of Jeroboam's father, Jehoash (2 Kings 16:17, and table of the Kingdom's Division B. C. 788).

Generally it has been customary to present as one proof for the correctness of any one solution of the "Temple Era," the 430 day-years of Ezekiel's 4th chapter. It is expected that these 390 plus forty day-years must be associated with the correct solution. The 390 years have a suitable application to the era of God's glory with Israel from the dedication of the temple in Solomon's 12th year, B. C. 982. It would end (after Ezekiel had just sufficient time to enact the sign of the 390 days) with the vision of the departure of the Glory from Israel and the temple in B. C. 592 (Ezek. 11:23).

It appears that the extra forty day-years there given are the difference between the proper application of the 390 and the 430 years that appears on the surface to be the temple era according to the book of Chronicles.

By beginning these 430 years in the year B. C. 592, after the sign of Ezek. 4:23 was given, it would end in B. C. 162, when the Jews under Judas Maccabaeus secured their religious freedom (Ency. Brit., vol. 17 p. 197).

It will now be seen that we have connected the 390 years that began with the temple's dedication, and the 390 plus the forty years allotted for Israel's affliction, that reaches to B. C. 162.

JUBILEE CYCLE—49 YEARS

There exists quite a diversity of opinion as to whether the jubilee cycle consists of forty-nine or fifty years.

It should be expected that Josiah's passover should be the beginning of a jubilee cycle that would be related to the invasion of Canaan, at which time the jubilee cycles began (Lev. 25:2, 8, 10, 11) that is, if we have presented proper solutions of the periods from the Exodus to the destruction of the temple—seeing that the passover is indirectly referred to by the numbers of Ezek. 1:1, 2, "the thirtieth year," which was the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity; and in Ezek. 40:1, the 25th of the captivity or the 50th from the passover, which was the 50th year, or the jubilee year of the typical cycle, B. C. 573.

	ERA OF THE TEMPLE				403	430

Nineteen jubilee cycles of 49 years each bridge the interval from the invasion to the passover in B. C. 622. This feature would tend to prove the correctness of these periods from the Exodus to the temple's burning, that is, if we are able to show that the jubilee cycle consists of forty-nine years.

The top line of numbers on the three figures of the chart represents ecclesiastical and legal years that had their beginning in the spring of the year (Exod. 12:2). The letters in the centre of the figures are related to the sowing (S), harvesting (H), and the rest (R) of the land, which includes the year of the jubilee (J), and the sabbatical years with respect to the land. The lower numbers in the arches of each figure are the years that have respect to the law of dealings in the lease and redemption, and therefore they may be termed civil years. These sabbatical and civil years are associated with the jubilee year, and they begin in the "seventh month" of the legal year (Lev. 25:9-11).

In this arrangement and relation of the legal and sabbatical years there would be no room for the idea that the land rested two years in succession, the 49th and 50th years, an idea which, it was thought formerly that provision was made for in Lev. 25:21 22. It will be noted where this passage is applied on the chart, which may also be applied to the jubilee year, that it cannot be arranged so as to secure two years, in succession, of rest for the land in which there was no "sowing" or "harvesting" (Lev. 25:11). Accordingly, Exod. 23:11. must be understood to mean that the land was to rest every 7th year, not only with respect to the years of every cycle, which would be impossible if there were fifty years to the cycle.

This arrangement necessitates that the "fiftieth" or jubilee year was also the first civil year of the next cycle. We read of the "eighth" day when there are only seven days in the week (Lev.

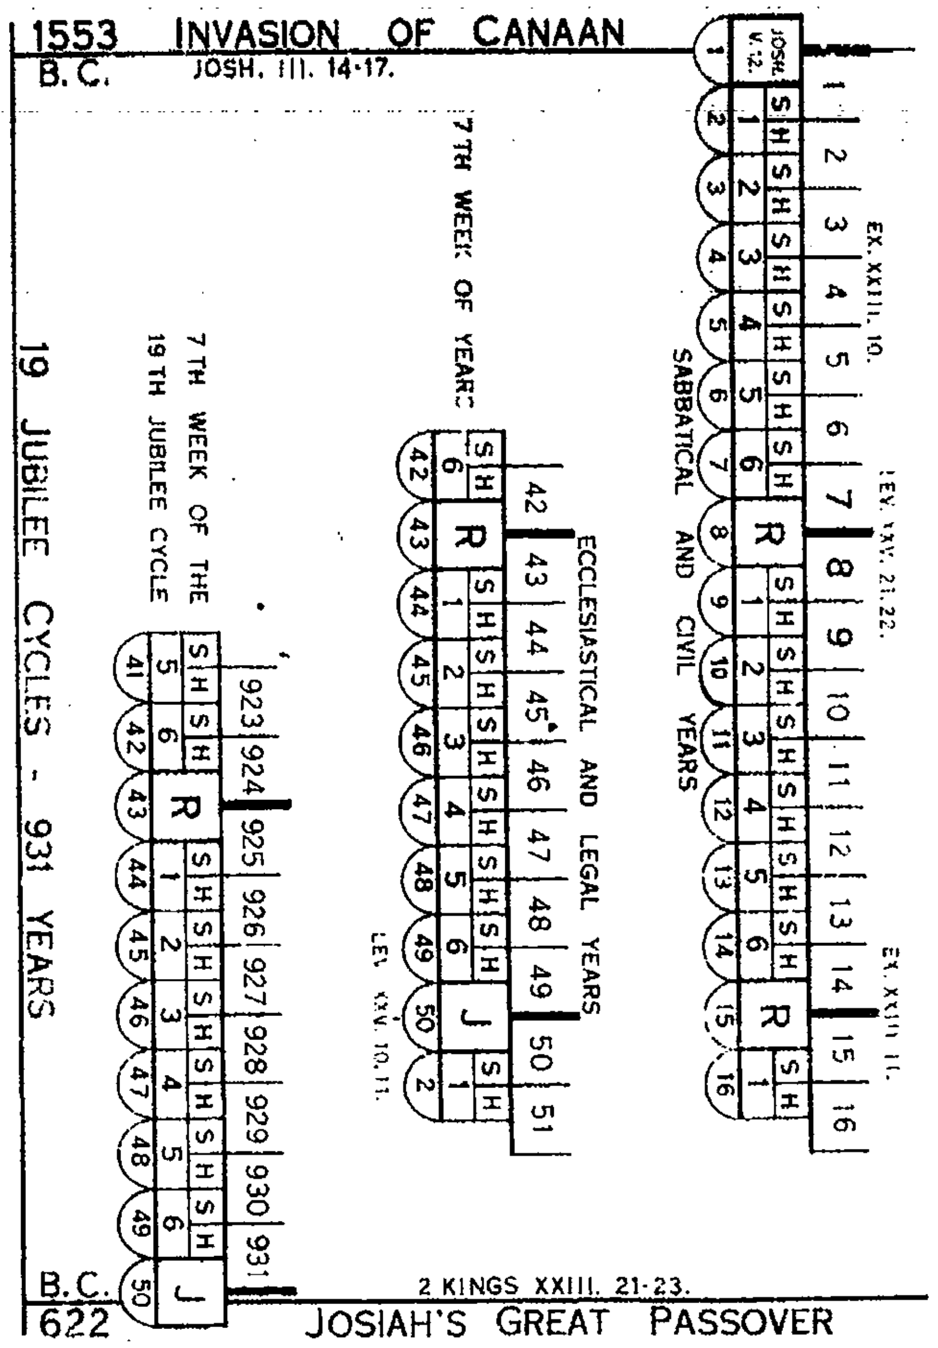
DISPERSION TO THE CHRISTIAN ERA

We will take up the dates of this table where the temple period ended and carry them to the 2nd year of Darius I of Persia. In doing so there is but one more arch of time that needs consideration; namely, the seventy years of Zech. 2:7 which began according to the context when the "Cities of Judah" fell and the seige of Jerusalem began, that is, in the 9th year of Jehoichin's captivity, or the 9th year of Zedekiah's reign according to Ezek. 24:1, 2. "Again in the ninth year, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, write thee the name of the day, even of this same day; the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day." It being three years before the burning of the temple; accordingly, we have sixty seven years to add to the Temple Era in order to bring us to the 2nd year of Darius I.



It will be further noted that there are six other arches of time indicated by the columns of figures on the right of the table, and by the references given at the top and bottom of each column, that they agree and interlock with the seventy years of Zech 1:12. Also, that the seventy years of Jer. 25:11, are not the same as the seventy years of Jer. 29:10; and that there was scope for the "three years" of Dan. 1:5, 18, that is, from the captivity in B. C. 606 to 603, Nebuchadnezzar's 2nd year (Dan. 2:1, 16). The Jews counted the year in which Nebuchadnezzar ascended the throne as his 1st year, whereas the Babylonians counted the unfinished portion of year to the reign of Nabopolassar; they started a new king's reign from the beginning of their calendar year.

There is now common agreement that Darius' 2nd year corresponds with the year B. C. 520. It is a date given to his second year in all the Bibles in which dates are supplied. The placing of this date is amply upheld by the most recent discoveries of inscriptions that deal with the subject. It is also upheld by all recent editions of encyclopedias and Bible commentaries; consequently, it will not be necessary to add here any further data on chronology as dates of events from B. C. 520 to our time may be secured from any recent enclyclopedia.

CHRISTIAN ERA	0	4056 years from the "Creation of Man."

It is back of B. C. 520 that the chronologists begin to vary, and the variation eventually amounts to centuries by the time that the flood is reached, but as we believe that the Hebrew numbers contain the correct dates of chronology we have given them closer attention with the results which indicate that the 6000 years from the "creation of man" would end with the 2400 years of Dan. 8:14, and in the epoch for the beginning of the dedication of the House of Prayer for all people, A. D. 1946.

Editorial

October 10th Mr. and Mrs. Paul Tomick, after a most intelligent and gratifying confession of faith, were baptized into the name of Jesus Christ. The Lord bless and keep these two young believers.

At the Lord's table on Oct. 10th sat Brother Nathan Buckman, Brother Owen Pottorf, and Brother and Sister Carey Buckman, all from Salem, Ohio. We were indeed pleased to have such a body of guests from a distance.

"Futurism Stated and Answered," the only posthuman work of our lamented Brother Wince, will be published within a short time as a tribute to his memory. Futurism is an error, and Brother Wince aptly answers it. Further particulars later.

We regret the non-publication of the Ala.—Miss.—La. Conference notice sent to us last July. It was mislaid and was not found till today (Oct. 19). The mistake was unintentional and for that fact the more regretable. Will all the brethren concerned receive our apology. One point to remember: All communications intended for publication should be sent to the Editor, 10623 Lee Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

In next week's issue we will begin the publication of Brother Thomas' book entitled "Good Company." We have just finished the MS. for the printer, and are greatly pleased with its subject matter and manner of presentation. After appearing in The Restitution the MS. will be published in book form. We urge all our readers to notify Brother Thomas, Proctor, Montana, how many copies they will take, as he is depending on subscriptions to pay the expenses of publication. We are sure that this work will become a standard in our literature. It merits our heartiest support.

Brother Donaldson writes: "Some bad news with a good moral. After a long and painful illness Brother Thomas Allin, of Newark, N. J., on Monday, Oct. 4th, 1920, fell on sleep. Regarding her husband Sister Jennie Allin writes: 'I will miss my husband very much; but I am glad to know death had no terrors for him, just a falling asleep till the resurrection morning. His Bible was his constant companion and his faith in his Lord was unbounded. Funeral services were conducted by Brother Dietz who, during Brother Allin's illness, came to see him three and four times each week, and was with him when he closed his eyes in death. What a blessing to have such a friend.' To which we add, amen and amen. We have known Brother Allin long and intimately and can vouch for his staunch Christian faith and character as well as his fond love for the brotherhood. And what more could we have ?"

Elohim Again

Singular and Plural Nouns and Pronouns

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

I AM sorry I am so slow in sending the promised MSS. re "The Second Death," but have been exceedingly busy. I have also had a missionary from China in my home, and you can imagine I have not been silent on our testimony. We had a big clash on the question of the Trinity, and I have devoted a good deal of time to Bible study on that question. The pre-existence of Christ, of course, came into the discussion. I am more than ever convinced that the only correct exegesis of the early verses of John's gospel is to accept them as written, viz., "In the beginning was the word." "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made." "He spake and it was done." "God said let there be light." The word became flesh, that is the promise was realized in Jesus Christ. Even as regards verse 4, Tyndal's version I believe gives "it" instead of "him."

I shall be very glad of any facts you can give me regarding "Elohim" when translated "God." It seems to me to be much like the word "man." It is of course a singular noun; but is often used in the plural, as "What is man that thou art mindful of him ?" The Hebrew Elohim was a plural word, but could be appropriately used in the singular. To us man is a singular noun, but can be appropriately used in the plural. Am I correct ? The fact that all translators render it in the singular seems fairly good proof that my suggestion (for I am not a Hebrew scholar) is correct. Moreover, the fact that passages quoted from the Old Testament where Elohim is used are, in the New Testament, in the singular, seems to add correction to my thought. Still I want all the facts I can get.

Editorial Comments

OUR CORRESPONDENT has reasoned very well on the word Elohim. El is the plural of Al. It is this fact which Trinitarians stress. Yet not one of them has ever dared to translate Elohim "gods." It must be translated either God or gods. If translated God the idea of plurality does not appear; if it be translated gods we have a plurality of gods without fixing the number, which no one but a pagan will admit.

That the word Elohim does not necessarily imply plurality is clear from the fact that the Jews have never understood it in that sense when applied to God. The proof for this statement is the fact that, in the Septuagint, they have always translated Elohim in the singular number. The Jews have never been Trinitarians. They surely would understand their own language. If it be claimed that the Jews are thus ignorant, what about Christ and his apostles: were they ignorant? They have always translated Elohim, when applied to God, by a word of the singular number. As the Hebrew names of God, which have a plural form, are always translated into Greek by the word "Theos," of the singular number, the question is settled by the Jews in the Septuagint and by Christ and his apostles in the New Testament.

Wilson, in his Hebrew Grammar, gives the correct rule of syntax in the case: "Words that express dominion, dignity, majesty, are commonly put in the plural." In harmony with this rule Elohim means but one person. One instance here is enough, selected from many. Psa. 45:6, 7, "Thy throne, O God" (Elohim). Paul in Hebrew 1 translates the word Elohim by the Greek "Theos," a word positively in the singular. He applies it to "the Son," who is confessedly but one person. Here is proof that cannot be explained away that Elohim is of singular import.

We close our comments by asking the reader to note that singular pronouns appear equally with the plural in the following texts:

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness . . . . So God created man in HIS own image, in the image of God created HE him" (Gen. 1:26).

"And the Lord said . . . . Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language" (Gen. 11:7). "Let ME go down, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto ME, and if not I will know" (Gen. 18:21). Compare these two passages and you cannot keep from seeing that the same being who said, "Let us go down" is, in the other, represented as saying, "Let me go down." The singular pronouns "me" and "I" in the latter passage can denote but one person, so the plural pronoun "us" in the former text, means no more than one. The objection to this that the reading is, "I will go down," not "Let me go down," is idle, because the verb in both passages is in the future tense in the Hebrew, and may be translated either imperatively or indicatively. A singular example of using singular and plural pronouns by the same speaker, and in relation to the same subject, is found in 1 Kings 12:6-9; 2 Chron. 10:6-9. When Rehoboam consulted the old men he said, "How do you advise that I may answer this people." But when he consulted the young men, he assumed a more kingly and majestic style and said, "What counsel give ye, that WE may answer this people ?"

Again: "Also I heard the voice of the Lord saying, whom shall I send, and who will go for US ? Then said I, Here am I; send me. And HE said, Go, and tell this people," etc (Isa. 6:8, 9).

The Pope's Blessing

IN YESTERDAY'S "Plain Dealer" a review was given of a book published by Guiseppe Quirico, (a widely known Jesuit, giving a detailed account of pope Benedict's efforts during the "Great War," to ameliorate the suffering of the prisoners and to bring about a "just and durable peace among nations." As a propagandist the pope is pre-eminent; all others are but mere novices. Surely Jesus was a keen observer of human nature and truly said, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light" (Luke 16:8).

Every man is naturally religious. Religion in some form or another, is universal. Paul suggests this in Rom. 1:20: "The invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and godhead; so that they are without excuse." What Jesus meant by "the children of this world" is the great religious world which all more or less are associated with, viz., as we view it today—

1st The idolatrous religions of heathendom;
2nd. Judaism and Mohammedanism;
3rd. Romanism and her corrupt systems or schools.

The heathen world worships "the creature more than the Creator," the Jew and Mohammedan both worship God who made heaven and earth, but deny the miraculous birth of Jesus (Luke 1:27-35), and repudiate his authority and teachings; Romanism has corrupted the true faith, installing into the seat of authority and power the pope instead of God, and his Christ, and the work through the Scriptures, the power of the Holy Spirit.

It is not generally recognized by mankind what the pope's claims really are.

1st. He calls himself and is addressed by his followers as "The Holy Father." Jesus taught this title belongs to God only (John 17:11; Matt. 23:9). Jesus said, "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son, that all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him" (John 5:22, 23).

The pope obtains this office as the Vice-Christ, the High Priest (Pontifex Maximus) the head of the church on earth, the husband of the church, wearing a ring in token thereof. (Brethren, leave off your rings, somebody may think you are a pope.) The pope claims to be the ruler of princes wearing the mitre and triple crown; he bears the temporal and spiritual swords (the temporal one since 1870 has lost its keen edge.) He holds the keys of the kingdom of heaven. Sir Conon Doyle, and Sir Oliver Lodge just now are a little dubious about this, for they say the souls of all kinds and conditions of men are slipping by "St. Peter" at the gate and are getting through without the pope's help. The pope claims, as all can read in the daily papers, authority in three worlds power to canonize saints in heaven—dear professor Fad, quit trying to reach Mars—"The Holy Father" knows who is there, he is issuing passports right along; consult him. He claims to pardon sins on earth, and to release from the pains of purgatory in the prison house of hell.

My Catholic Bible reads something like this: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they all have the same breath. All go into one place: all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Eccl. 3:19, 20). Probably the pope is like the old colored lady, an habitual smoker, who was reproved by her pastor, he telling her that in heaven her breath would smell horrible, replied, "Parson, when I die and go to heaven this child expects to leave my breath behind."

The pope claims to be the infallible teacher of faith and morals, in fact nothing less than the Holy Spirit. Jesus said, "Howbeit when he, the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth, for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear he shall speak; and he will show you things to come" (John 16:13). The wise man said, "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich: and he addeth no sorrow with it" (Prov. 10:22). Now Mr. Benedict, let you and I for a few minutes go "to the law and to the testimony," and if we do not speak or our actions are not according to this word, it is because there is no light in us (Isa. 8:20). We all know just who received your blessings during the great war, and indirectly your anathemas. One of your cardinals is today hiding in Switzerland enjoying your blessing, but dreading the anathema of state awaiting him if they can put their hands on him. The Central Powers received all you had to give: your money, influence and blessing; the Allies—well, God keeps a faithful record (Matt. 12:34-37).

Mr. Benedict, we are well informed respecting the part you have played and are playing in the political world today. But as it is getting warm now, and light reading is in order* let us inquire of some of your holy predecessors. Unfortunately I am an Englishman by birth. Englishmen as a rule possess good memories, especially remembering their friends. Just now Ireland seems to be "The fly in the ointment." Would you be so kind as to consult the records in the Vatican about the year 1155. Henry the second was reigning in England about that time. Pope Adrian IV. seems to have had at this time as much trouble with the Irish as King George is having today. So he showed excellent wisdom by selling the Island to Henry on condition, of course, that he each year collect for "St. Peter" the pennies due to him.

My grandmother begged of me before leaving home, never to name either of my sons Henry. Now I know why.

I wonder how much old Francis Joseph, the late emperor of Austria, would have preferred the pope's curse to his blessing as his army defeated or crushed at Sadowa, losing at that time all of his Venetian dominions. In 1870 Empress Eugenie of France, a favorite of the pope, loaded down with blessings and honor, plunged poor France into war with your late friend Germany. I guess the ex-Kaiser would have preferred history to have repeated itself instead of your blessing. It was a good thing for the late King Humbert that the pope cursed him; if he had blessed him, today "United" and powerful Italy would be unknown.

Bismarck when you banished the Jesuits from Germany, cursed you. Under that curse Germany became the world's greatest nation. Under your blessing, Mr. Benedict, she is today considered the meanest. To day Mexico, like poor Ireland, is in the cruel throes of civil war because of her loyalty to a system whose blessings have turned to curses.

Spain, when will your eyes be opened? Do you forget as your troops were leaving Vittoria for Cuba Cuba then being politically much as the South and West of Ireland is today, that the archbishop of Damascus, having in mind Exod. 17:11, 12, declared that the pope like Moses would bring to their arms victory. The United States of America demonstrated to the pope, that God is not and never has been on the side of the terrible system at whose head you stand so clearly portrayed by his apostle Paul in 2 Thess. 2:1-12. Mr. Benedict, retire into your study; open your Bible and read carefully Dan. 5:31. You are the antitype of Belshazzar. Do you wish some Daniel to give to you the modern interpretation of "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin"? John the beloved disciple will do so. For 1260 years you reigned in power and glory. In the year 1268 the whole world worshipped at your feet; none could or dared to disobey you. You made and you unmade kings. To day you are a prisoner, hated by the "powers that be," without political power, your influence fast waning, awaiting your doom.

The indictment against you is recorded by the Lord's angel in Rev. 17:1-6, and your doom in Rev. 18:1-8. Brethren, in these solemn times let us read thoughtfully Exod 33:7, and make the right application to our own time. Our Moses Jesus is calling us (Rev. 18:4) to go unto him without the camp bearing his reproach, for here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come (Heb. 13:12-16).

The Lord's tabernacle today consists of whereever two or three are met together in his name. To find this we must go outside the camp notice "afar off;" and there our Moses will meet us at the door. Pope Benedict's eyes are upon our fair land. He is now beginning to bless us and show us favors, recently bestowing upon one of our highest naval officers who said "that the United States would as soon fight England as Germany," the highest honor of knighthood he can confer. Since the reign of Henry the Eighth England has been a terrible thorn in the pope's side. That thorn is still there. President Wilson is trying to remove it. He will fail. God's plan is that Israel must return to his own land. The ships of Britain and America God has honored to fulfill this mission. Poor Ireland, blindly, is playing the Jesuit game. Sooner or later the mask will fall; the pope and his household will stand forth stripped, the whole world beholding her greatest enemy to the exercise of equality and justice, that will be established and administered by him whose right it is to reign; Jesus the Son of David, the King and Lord of all.

GOLDEN TEXT: Colossians 4:2

AFTER ALL.

AFTER ALL.
Just playing out the game,
Getting your share of both the rise and fall.
Getting your portion of the praise and blame,
With both the jeering and the cheering rife,
But not too much of either on one spin,
Is something in this little whirl called life,
Before at last the darkness gathers in.

After all
I wonder now and then
If one can't go too far without a fall,
Or rise too quickly from the ranks of men,
And thereby miss the beauty of the game
Which rests on struggle, heart ache and defeat,
As well as victory, success or fame,
Before the mixture ever stands complete.

After all—
Don't you admire the wight
And often sing his praises over all
Who fought his way through odds to find the light—
Who had to fight each yard beyond the gate
That opened wide upon a greater role,
Facing whatever future might await
In the full knowledge he had proved his soul?

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS

WITH THIS issue we discontinue the list of special contributors. In future our paper will be open to all readers, irrespective of age, who have a theme of interest and are able to write in an instructive manner. We trust our old "specials" will not desert us. We appreciate all that has been done, and will be thankful for continued support.

A LETTER

DEAR YOUNG PEOPLE:

Did you think I was never going to write you any more letters? It did begin to look that way. But I am going to surprise you by another little visit. I want to thank all of you who have written a prize story. They are all so good it would be a hard matter for me to tell which is the best, so I am very glad Brother Donaldson has that job, for I fear that I might decide that the stories were all so good that all must have prizes. Just think what a job I would have on my hands then, making chains, watch fobs and fruit cakes for all of you!

This has been a very busy summer for me, and from the fact that other contributors have not sent in many articles, they must have been busy too. But never mind; winter is nearly here and then we will have plenty of time to write lots of good things.

We must not get careless and put off our writing, for there are many who look forward every week to see something on the Young People's Page written by the young people. Just to prove what I say here is an extract from a letter Auntie Wince wrote: "Every week, just as soon as The Restitution arrives, I open it at the Young People's Page to see if any of you have written. Now if an old woman like me is as interested in your writings as that, how much more they must mean to the young folks for whom they are intended." Now who do you suppose she meant when she wrote "any of you?" why all of us of course. So young people, let us try and not disappoint dear Auntie Wince, and many others who look forward to seeing something from us.

We must all remember when writing our articles, that there are a few strict rules that all editors of papers insist that contributors must follow. I believe neatness in writing and correct spelling are perhaps the most important. Let us try very hard to follow them. It will save our Editor lots of extra work, as well as our own feelings from being hurt, if we do this. But if we should cause his disapproval of our articles by failure in these rules, let us not get discoureged and quit, or think that we cannot do any different. It might even be so bad that the Editor has to return our article to us, with perhaps a little advice for our future efforts. That of course would make us feel just dreadful. But he is right and we are wrong;

so let us sit right down and try again. When Jesus was stoned by the mob, he did not get discouraged and stop preaching the gospel to the people. He continued. So we must not stop trying if at first we do not succeed. Christ is our example. Let us follow him.

Do you remember, young people, how mother and dad when sending us to the store or the neighbors on an errand, their last words generally were, "now don't forget this," or "don't forget that." How many times our memory is taxed with a long list of things to remember. Just for a change. In my scrap book I came across this article which gives a list of things that would be good to forget.

Forget the faults of other people. Forget your enemies and remember your friends. Forget all gossip as soon as you hear it. Forget your failures and remember your successes. Forget the pin-pricks, slights and trivial offences incident to all life. Forget to do anyone an injury, but remember to do everyone a kindness." Even here is something to "remember."

AUNT BESS.

JUDGES OF ISRAEL

By Miss Icel Stedman

THE NAMES of the children of Israel which came into Egypt and their households are Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah, Issachar, Zebulon and Benjamin, Dan and Naphthali, God and Asher. Joseph and his generation had died. The king of Egypt was Pharoah, and he was afraid that the Israelites would soon outnumber the Egyptians. So he treated them mean by putting hard burdens upon them (Exod.1).

The Lord wished to deliver his people from this affliction, therefore he called to Moses to be their leader and take them from Egypt (Exod. 3). Aaron, Moses' brother, went with him as his spokesman or prophet. The people bowed and worshipped when they heard the words of Moses who was to deliver them.

Moses performed many signs before king Pharoah, but his heart was hardened and he would not let these people go (Exod. 13).

Then the Lord killed all the first born of the people that did not keep the Lord's passover (Exod. 12:1-30). Then he told Moses and Aaron to take his people and leave (Exod. 12:31). Pharoah followed him and the Lord caused the Red Sea to go back and made it like land so the people might cross. Then the water came again and overthrew the Egyptians in the sea (Exod. 14:21-27).

Moses and the people had many hardships in their journeys. Moses died at the age of 120 years and they buried him in a valley in the land of Moab (Deut. 34:6, 7).

After Moses' death the Lord spoke unto Joshua the son of Nun to take the people or to be their leader (Joshua 1). Joshua died at the age of 110 years and wos buried in Timnath serah (Josh. 24: 29, 30). He gathered the tribes before him and told them to serve the Lord and not strange gods, and they promised to do this and obey his voice (Josh. 24:24).

But after many years the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord and served Baalim (Judges 2:11). This provoked the Lord to anger and he delivered them into the hands of spoilers and enemies. But he raised up judges who delivered them out of the hands of their enemies. He first sold them into the hands of Chushanrishathaim, king of Mesopotamia, and the children of Israel served this king eight years. Then they cried to the Lord. He raised up a deliverer to the children of Israel who delivered them (Judges 3: 9).

First, Othniel, son of Kenaz.—The land rested forty years. Othniel then died (Judges 3:11). Then the children of Israel again did evil and were taken under king Eglon, of Moab. They served him eighteen years (Judges 3:14). They began to cry to the Lord. He raised up another deliverer.

Second, Ehud, son of Gera. Land rested eighty years.

Third, Shamgar, son of Anath, delivered Israel (Judges 3:30, 31).

The children of Israel again did evil in the sight of the Lord when Ehud was dead. Israel was sold to Jabin, king of Canaan, served him twenty years. Then they cried to the Lord.

Fourth, Deborah the prophetess judged Israel (Judges 4:4). The land rested forty years. Barak pursued ofter Sisera, captain of Jabin's army.

Again they sinned, and the Lord delivered them into the hand of Midian seven years (Judges 6:1).

Gideon, son of Joash, delivered them from Midian. The land rested forty years. He died. The children of Israel again fell back (Judges 8:28). They soon worshipped Baalim and forgot the Lord their God. Forgot all his kindness in delivering them.

Sixth, Abinelech slew his brethren and the pople made him king (Judges 9:6). But he was killed in war (Judges 9:54). He was the son of Gideon and reigned three years (Judges 9:22).

Seventh, Tola, son of Pudah, rose to defend Israel. He judged Israel twenty-three years (Judges 10:2). He was buried in Shamir.

Eight, Jair, a Gileadite, judged Israel twenty-two years (Judges 10:3). He was buried in Camon.

Israel again did evil and served false gods, and the Lord sold them into the hands of the Philistines and children of Ammon eighteen years (Judges 10:8).

Ninth, Jephthah judged Israel six years. He died and was buried in one of cities of Gilead (Judges 12:7).

Tenth, after him Ibzan, of Bethlehem, judged Israel seven years, died and was buried in Bethlehem (Judges 12:9, 10).

Eleventh, Elon, a Zebulonite, judged Israel ten years. He died and was buried in Aijalon in the country of Zebulon (Judges 12:12).

Twelfth, Abdon, the son of Hillel, a Pirathonite, judged Israel eight years (Judges 12:14). He died and was buried in Pirathon in the land of Ephraim in the mount of Amalekites. Again Israel did evil and the Lord delivered them in the hands of the Philistines forty years (Judges 13:1).

Thirteenth, Samson, son of Manoah, of Zorah, of the family of Danites, judged Israel twenty years (Judges 15:20). He was buried between Zorah and Eshtaol, the burying place of his father Manoah.

Fourteenth, Eli judged Israel forty years (1 Sam. 4:18).

Fifteenth, Samuel judged Israel all his life and then made his sons judges, but the people wanted a king like other nations (1 Sam. 8:5-19). From now on Israel had kings.

BITS FROM THE SCHOOL BOOK OF MARION ASHUTE

THANK GOD every morning when you get up that you have someting to do that day that must be done whether you like it or not.

Being forced to work and forced to do your best will breed in you temperance and self-control, diligence and strength of will, cheerfulness and contentment, and a hundred virtues that the idle will never know.

Judge not the working of his brain
  And of his heart thou cans't not see;
What looks to thy dim eyes a stain,
  In God's pure light may only be
The scar brought from some well worn field
  Where thou woulds't only faint and yield.

True freedom is to share
All the chains our troubles bear,
And with heart and hand to be
Earnest to make others free.

If wisdom's ways you wisely seek,
Five things observe with care;
To whom you speak, of whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where.

Give not thy tongue too great a liberty, lest it make thee a promise. The word unspoken is thine like the sword in the scabbard. If vented, thy sword is in another's hands. If thou desire to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue.

All things bright and beautiful,
  All creatures great and small,
All things wise and wonderful,
  The Lord God made them all.

Two ears and only one mouth have you;
  The reason I think is clear:
It teaches, my child, that it will not do
  To talk about all you hear.

WHO SHALL ROLL AWAY THE STONE ?

DID THE thought regarding the unnecessary anxiety of the apostles concerning the removing of the stone from the entrance to the tomb ever occur to you? "Who shall roll away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" was their cry; but "when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great." Great! Yes, to them it was so great they saw no way of overcoming it; but how small and insignificant it was to the One who caused the stone to be rolled away. Even a greater thing than the rolling away of the stone had occurred, for he who had been dead was now alive, he who was buried had arisen, never again to die, but to live for ever more and give eternal life to all those who came to the Father through him.

As it was with the rolling away of the stone, so it is with all our trials, troubles, and difficulties: to us they are big, they are great, they are heavy; but what are they to him who not only was able to have the stone rolled away but who "raised up Jesus from the dead?" Surely we can take our cares to him. He has promised to carry them for us; then let us trust him. Let us tell him all, see how often our difficulties are turned into blessings, our trials into joys, and our troubles into peaceful rest.

A CURE

ARE YOU almost disgusted
  With life, little man?
I will tell you a wonderful trick,
That will bring you contentment,
  If anything can,
Do something for somebody quick.
Do something for somebody quick.

FROM SECTIONS WIDELY SCATTERED

TO DAY we print three contributed articles: one from Sister Walker (Aunt Bess); another from Miss Stedman; and still another from Miss Ashute—each of a different type, still all worthy. We trust we will have many such articles, as it is the contributed articles that make the page interesting.

MEN ARE TRANSFIGURED

Moses when he came down from the holy mount, had a shining face. The effects of communion reveal themselves even in men's appearance. There is a sort of radiance about the appearance of those who are much with God. There is in their faces a light that never shone on sea or land. J., D. Jones.

In South Africa there is a beautiful flower known as the Fire Lily. Usually about twice a year the grass is burned off certain grazing lands and in just a few days afterwards this delicate red bloom appears here and there over the burnt prairie. Only after a fire is it to be found. So in the Christian life there seems to a special flower of grace that springs up only in hearts that have been swept by fiery trials and rejoiced that through the same they were made partakers of Christ's sufferings (1 Pet. 4:12, 13).

I am responsible before God for the work I might have done and did not do. -R. A. Torrey.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

Southern Texas Meeting

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

WILL YOU please announce through The Restitution that the first conference of the Church of God of South Texas will be held at Kingsville, Texas, Oct. 30th, to Nov. 7th inclusive. All are invited to come. We earnestly ask all who can to take part with us and help put our Evangelist in the field to tell the good news of the coming kingdom. The night is far spent; the day is at hand. What we do we must do quickly. We need your help in the good work. We expect Brother N. S. Bradley and E. O. Stewart to be with us. All who expect to come please notify Brothers J. M. Owens or John Whitley, Kingsville, Texas.

Yours in hope of the soon coming kingdom,

MRS. W. L. ROBBINS.

Gentleness is love reflecting the tenderness of Jesus (1 Thess. 2:7).

Futurism Stated and Answered

3. AS THE fourth kingdom was to be different from all kingdoms, in what essential points or things does the difference consist?

THIS QUESTION is based upon Dan. 7:19. What is true in this respect touching this fourth kingdom is true of all the kingdoms of this vision, for beasts being different one from another must be taken as denoting a difference between the kingdoms they symbolize. One point of difference is noted in Dan. 2:39 between Babylon and Medo Persia: these being the kingdoms symbolized by the gold and silver sections of the image. The latter it is stated, is inferior to the former. Without attempting to show any other difference between these two, or between the third and these, as this is not necessary, I will notice or point out a few things pertaining to the fourth kingdom that will serve to identify it in history. The fourth kingdom was to be very different from the others, as is shown by the fourth section of the image. "Strong as iron," the most useful of all metals, and universally employed to fashion all others into implements and articles of use for civilized man. "For as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these (metals) shall it (fourth kingdom) break in pieces and bruise" (Dan. 2:40). It was to be divided into ten kingdoms; and in this condition be weakened or be "partly strong and partly brittle."

Another distinguishing feature we observe is the "little horn that had eyes and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than its fellows," . . . that "made war with the saints and prevailed against them." The fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly, with teeth of iron and nails or claws of brass, was sufficiently marvelous to attract the attention of the prophet more than the other beasts; but the little horn by its boastful words and persecuting acts excited Daniel's wonder and he demanded of the heavenly interpreter a more lengthy description than all the other beasts and horns put together.

Oregon Bible College

Now the question is, Does Rome fill the measure and answer to the description as given in the two visions of the 2nd and 7th chapters and do the symbols fitly represent her as viewed on the pages of history? As touching the matter embodied in the question I need only add that Rome was through all her history very different in her political constitution from the kingdoms that preceded her, and from all kingdoms great and small. In John's day the sixth form of government was being practically tested, five successive forms having passed away; and a seventh was in prospect.

4. AS THE fourth kingdom was to break in pieces all other kingdoms, did Rome accomplish this?

Yes, I have already shown how Rome by conquest and by will and testament acquired the territory of the four divisions of Alexander's kingdom. It also subdued many other provinces and kingdoms. By a very usual figure of speech it is said that this kingdom "was to devour the whole earth, and to tread it down and to break it in pieces." Roman writers called it "terarum orbis imperium," the empire of the whole world. A judicial Greek writer who lived in the reign of Augustus Caesar, in comparing Rome with the kingdoms that preceded it, said of the former: "The city of Rome ruleth over all the earth as far as it is inhabited; and commands all the sea, not only that within the pillars of Hercules, but also the ocean, as far as it is navigable, having first and alone of all the most celebrated kingdoms made the East and the West the bounds of its empire: and its dominion hath not continued a short time, but longer than any city or kingdom."

If Rome did not do what the prophet in these visions said the fourth kingdom should do, then the other great kingdoms did not do what is foretold of them by this same prophet; for it is written of Babylon, of the ruler or head and his successors, that "wheresoever the children of men dwell and the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven hath he given into thy hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all." Of the third or Grecian kingdom it is foretold that it shall bear rule over all the earth. If Rome has not filled the prophet's measure, then what kingdom has or can? Is it reserved for the future to develop a kingdom that shall be a counterpart of these prophecies, seeing that, as some say, Rome has failed to be such. Will it be mighty Russia, the Gog of the north, that is to fill the measure of universal empire, if such is demanded by the meaning of the prophetic words? But Russia is to meet its doom upon the mountains of Israel before it reaches such a stage of development. And be it observed, that just prior to the fall of that vast army, of which the Czar is chief, God calls for a sword throughout all his "mountains," which is equivelent to calling for an army. There will be at that time vast territory and a numerous population outside the bounds of Russia from whence Jehovah will draw his army to oppose the progress of Gog. England and the United States will not fall under the power of that Colossus of the North. There then seems to be no room on the theatre of the future for the development of such a government prior to the establishment of God's kingdom on the earth. Why look to the future for the fourth kingdom of the visions of Daniel and John? Read carefully the history of the past and compare what is there written with these disclosurres of the prophets.

Good Company

A Collection of Friendly Talks On Gospel Subjects

WE READ in the word that Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom (Matt. 4:23): it also tells us in other places that wherever he went, in all the towns and villages, he preached the same thing; the gospel of the kingdom. It is hardly reasonable to suppose that he preaced Methodism in one town, and Universalism in another; Mormonism in one village, and Catholicism in another. Surely all must agree that whatever gospel he proclaimed in one town, or village, he preached in the next also; therefore, there can be but one true gospel; the one which Christ preached in all the towns and villages; the one which he commanded his disciples to carry to all the world and preach to every creature (Mark 16:16); the one of which Paul was not ashamed, because "it is the power of God unto salvation," if we will believe it; and it shall be our earnest endeavor to determine beyond question just what it was that Jesus preached, and which he called "the gospel of the kingdom."

The word "gospel" means good news, or glad tidings; therefore, the gospel of the kingdom would be good news, or glad tidings about a kingdom. A kingdom consists of a king, subordinate rulers, subjects, territory, capitol city, laws, rules, and usages. Without a king there could be no kingdom; there could be no kingdom without territory, subjects, laws, rules, and subordinate rulers, under the king, to enforce such laws as are necessary; therefore we may expect a study of the glad tidings of the kingdom of God to give us definite information about the kingdom. Who will be its king, and subordinate rulers, who the subjects, where its territory and capitol city, and how long its duration, etc. In answer to these momentous questions we turn to the word of the living God with all confidence, knowing that our search will not be in vain.

Zedekiah was the last prince of Israel to sit on the throne of David; and in the year 593 B. C. God sent this message to him by the mouth of his prophet Ezekiel:

> And thou profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low (Christ), and abase him that is high (Zedekiah); I will overturn, overturn, overturn it (the throne and kingdom of David), and it shall be no more, until he comes whose right it is; and I will give it him (Ezek. 21:25-27).

History informs us that it was thrice overturned, as the prophet had said; first by Nebuchadnezzer; next by the Greeks under Alexander; and third by the Romans; and since the days of Ceasar has been no more. Now listen while Luke tells who it is that is coming whose right it is, and to whom it will be given, to be overturned no more forever.

> And behold thou (Mary) shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end (Luke 1:31-33).

Thus we see it is our dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, whose right it is; he has gone like a nobleman to a far country, to receive unto himself a kingdom, and to return. It is he, our Blessed Nobleman, who gave his precious life for us, that is coming to rebuild that kingdom and throne of David, which has been thrice overturned and destroyed, and sit thereon as king. Now two or three Scriptures selected from many should suffice to conclusively show that under the wise and beneficent rule of Christ, the kingdom of God will quickly spread until it conquers and subdues all kingdoms, nations, peoples, and tongues, and compels all mankind to serve and obey him.

> And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever (Dan. 2:44).

> And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world, are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever (Rev. 11:15).

> I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom which shall not be destroyed (Dan. 7:13, 14).

This gospel of the kingdom of God puts out its tender roots, and is securely anchored in the garden of Eden, breathing comfort and hope to a fallen and sin-cursed people, in the promise that "the seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent;" and like a thread of pure, fine gold, it may be traced down through the ages. It is clearly seen in the Abrahamic promises and covenant, repeated and renewed to Isaac and Jacob. It is the theme of the prophets, and shines bright and radiant throughout the psalms of David; and under the teaching of Christ and the apostles opens out and develops into the perfect gospel plan of salvation through faith and obedience.

To what shall we compare it? It is a tender bud of love and promise for a fallen race, and was planted by God in Eden's fertile soil. In Abraham's day it is seen to swell and burst, like an opening rose, and streaks of beauty and promise begin to show. In the days of Isaac, Jacob, and David, the beautiful leaves open one by one; and as the prophets in turn speak their message, each revelation adds fragrance and beauty to our opening gospel bud, until Jesus and the apostles give testimony. Then the gospel bud of love and promise opens fully and completely, revealing to our admiring gaze the gospel rose in all its matchless beauty and fragrance. And now, dear reader, let us trace this gospel message, from Abraham down the stream of time and watch the gospel rose develop and open.

THE COVENANTS OF PROMISE TO ABRAHAM, 1918 B. C.

And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee (Gen. 13: 14-17).

And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed (Gen. 12:3).

REPEATED TO ISAAC 135 YEARS LATER

Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee; for unto thee, and unto thy seed will I give all these countries; and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father. And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed (Gen. 6:3, 4).

REPEATED TO JACOB 13 YEARS LATER

And behold the Lord God stood above it and said, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed; and thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee, and in thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed. And behold I am with thee, and will keep thee, in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land: for I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of (Gen. 13-15).

REPEATED TO DAVID 718 YEARS LATER

And when thy days be fulfilled (David), and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom. He (Christ) shall build an house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever. I will be his father, and he shall be my son. If he commit iniquity I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men: but my mercy shall not depart away from him as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee. And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee: thy throne shall be established forever (2 Sam. 7:12-16).

The seed promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who will build again the throne of David, and sit thereon as king forevermore, and in whom all the families of the earth shall be blessed, is the Lord Jesus Christ.

Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds as of many, but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ (Gal. 3:16).

And the angel said unto her, Fear not Mary: for thou hast found favor with God. And behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end (Luke 1:30,33).

God has not yet fulfilled these promises; Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, have never inherited a foot of that promised land; and their children are still pilgrims and strangers in every nation.

And he gave him (Abraham) none inheritance in it; no not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession (Acts 7:5).

By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promise. These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them (Heb. 11:8, 13).

These Abrahamic promises will be fulfilled in the kingdom of God, yet future. God will open the graves of those noble patriarchs; and also all others who have entered into covenant relations with him by faith and obedience, gather and bring them to the promised land, and do unto them according to his covenant and word.

There shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God and yourself thrust out. They shall come from the east and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God (Luke 13:28, 29).

To perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to our father Abraham (Luke 1:72, 73).

Therefore the earth (not heaven) will be the eternal home of the righteous.

The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men (Psa. 115:16).

The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth—not up in heaven (Prov. 11:31).

The Lord knoweth the days of the upright, and their inheritance shall be forever (Prov. 37:19).

The righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth (Prov. 10:30).

Wait on the Lord and keep is way, and he will exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it (Psa. 37.34).

The meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace (Psa. 37:11).

For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth, and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off (Psa. 37:22).

The Parables of Christ

Number Six

JESUS SPAKE unto them another parable: The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman seeking goodly pearls. Who when he had found one pearl of great price went and sold all he had and bought it.

THIS PARABLE compered with the preceding one is considered more precious, as it is like a goodly pearl, whereas the other is valued as a treasure. A very insignificant thing may become a treasure. It is different with a pearl. The difference largely exists in its formations. In the evolution of the earth the pearl was formed by excretion, a separation, a throwing off. It could not be formed in an instant or moment. It required long ages. This element in the parable represents something very precious formed, or in the process of formation, for ages. It is one of the basic principles of the gospel of the kingdom of God. It is the most precious. The pearls alluded to in this parable are formed singly through the forceful power of the Holy Spirit.

In this parable it is a merchantman that seeks for a goodly pearl and sells all he has, and buys it. In the preceding parable it is man. In the east a merchantman is wealthy or at least has at his command the means of purchasing costly articles. Therefore we infer that the pearl is in the eyes of the merchantman of great value. This parable embraces the work of the gospel from the time Jehovah made the covenant with the woman (Gen. 3:15) until the coming of the Lord, when this age will close. The law of the gospel requires that men and women heed the gospel and obey it and live a godly life or be an overcomer, when the formative work will have been accomplished. To be called out is an honor conferred; but to be chosen is very much more important. Some of the called out ones may become apostates even while their names are still on the church record; others may fail to use the means of forming the pearl and will not have enough of the spirit to entitle them to a resurrection from among the dead ones. The forming power is the law of the spirit of life. The called ones must apply the law to gain the reward.

The apostle Paul gives us this rule in Phil. 2: 12, 13: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his pleasure." It is not every one who saith Lord, Lord, who shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he who doeth the will of the Father in heaven. To become a pearl of great price requires that each one who has obeyed the gospel must make the work of the good Father the first in his life. The cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches will choke the word, and you will become unfruitful. The safest rule to follow is given by the apostle Peter who admonishes us to diligently add to our faith the seven Christian graces (2 Pet. 1:5-12). These render us fruitful, and then we are assured an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God.

To examine the church record is no evidence that all are pearls in the rough. Ye are a peculiar, a purchased people; purchased by the blood of Jesus the Son of the living God. As such we must show the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into the marvelous light. If we become the sons of God through the resurrection we must wait patiently for the manifestation of the sons of God. We will become the children of God through suffering with him. This parable must have its location in connection with the kingdom of heaven. The material is in the formative process since righteous Abel. In Heb. 11 Jehovah has announced a list of names of worthies whom he has accepted, and the condition which formed them as such. The two basic principles found in the parables of the treasure and the costly pearl are Israel redeemed and the sons of God manifested. How thoughtful and careful we should be when we know that our position in the kingdom will be determined before the tribunal of Christ, and will be based upon our work.

Love

HARK! WHAT friendly voice is that I hear?
Enduring accents! 'Tis the theme of love!
What kind appeals; what admonitions too!
How well designed to search and prove the heart.
Our fair exterior will naught avail;
Love makes the heart its residence and moves
Our deepest sympathies for other's woes
Visits the widow and the fatherless—
Extends to the afflicted kind relief.
The poor, the outcast, the despised, oppressed,
Hardly can fail in such to meet a friend.
Governed by principles which love inspires,
Our joy will be in making others blest,
Do selfish ends our private actions sway?
Look deep within! if we love God, we love
Our brother too, renouncing self; if not
Vain our own gifts, our knowledge, faith or hope!
Emptied of self with love imbued—how sweet
To do and say as Jesus did and taught:
This sojourn here hath mark'd the path in which
He fain would have us go tracing his steps;
In all our words and actions prove our love
Sincere, made pure and like our glorious Head.
Behold, his day makes haste! 'tis at the door!
Rejoice and be exceeding glad. He comes
Our Elder Brother; Friend! and comes to reign,
Taught by the signs he kindly gave, we know
His day already hath begun to dawn;
Expecting soon to hail the Prince of Peace,
Rejoice in hope of everlasting life.
And shall we shrink from duty? shun the cross?
Love will be active—bent on doing good:
Such is the godlike character of love.
Oh! that the spark might soon become a flame!—

Editorial

The Restitution comes out this week in a new dress. How do you like it ?

Slander is the foulest whelp of sin. The worthiest people are the most injured by slander as we usually find that to be the best fruit which the birds have been pecking at.

San-ballats, Tobiahs, and Geshems

DEAR EDITOR:

DO YOU know the following facts relating to yourself:

1. That many papers steal your writings and publish them without giving you credit ?

II. That you are often criticized in papers, and sometimes in extra editions called "supplements" ?

III. That a booklet of 20 pages has been published against you called "To Our Brotherhood No. 4," charging you with proselyting the Author's flock ? How do you manage to keep silent in the midst of all these evil reports ?

Editorial Comments

WE KNOW all that our correspondent has said, and many more of the devices of the adversary of which he is ignorant. How we go on serenely in the midst of this hatred and antagonism is a "secret" which we will now reveal.

I. As for those who "steal our words," we are glad they find something in our humble efforts worth stealing. We take their theft as a complement. This view of the matter makes us feel good and does them no harm.

II. It does not hurt our feelings to be reviewed in papers and supplements. These public attacks cannot hurt us personally, as we are nothing to start with. If the truth is called in question they hear from us in a defence of it that makes their ears tingle. After which there is a great calm.

III. "Brotherhood No. 4" was distributed at our church door after a Sunday morning meeting! As this issue is "No. 4," we presume there have been three numbers before. No matter. "The church" of which the author is pastor no longer exists, being sold; and "my congregation" that he speaks of will number at least as many members as there are words in "congregation." That is, living members. We understand the dead ones are very numerous. There are not enough of the living to proselyte, and we do not desire the dead. We are waiting for "Our Brotherhood No. 5" in "silence."

The fact is, "I am doing a great work, so that I canont come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you ?" (Nehe. 6:3). By keeping so busy at the Lord's work "I cannot come down" to the "strife of tongues" in the camp of our enemies, is what exasperates the San-ballats, Tobiahs, Geshems, Noadiahs, "and the rest of the prophets that would put me in fear" (vs. 14). Were we to cast stones at every dog that barks at us we would do nothing else but cast stones. We refuse to be diverted from labor in the Lord's vineyard by any pretext whatever. Were we as idle as our traducers we would have plenty of time to spend with them in wrangles. But we are a bond-slave of Jesus Christ, and he forbids us to use time other than in his service. Peace be unto our enemies.

True courtesy is not a commodity that cannot be purchased with money. It flourishes only where unselfish love fertilizes the soil and is found in cottages as well as mansions.

Sunday Schools

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

WILL YOU tolerate a few words from me regarding the sending of our children, isolated, or otherwise, to orthodox Sunday schools for religious training. When I was a boy the church of God at Brooklyn did not have a Sunday school, nor did it have any other means especially adapted to instruct or interest the young. Think you that on this account I was sent to one of the orthodox schools to be taught certain errors so that I would have to unlearn them under father's or mother's guidance ? Not so! Father took upon himself our training. He taught us the truth as he knew it, and more than that he lived the truth. His very life was an example for us to follow. We never knew him to thank God for his blessings and then turn round and find fault with the weather, for instance. Sunschool or no Sunday school, the place to teach the young is in the home. If our teaching can be backed up through organized school work, so much the better; but remember this, no matter what the teaching, the young ones must also be trained. In other words, we who are older must set an example to those who are younger. Those who are dependent upon us watch our every word and movement. Never will I forget the sensation I experienced, when on a visit to a church member. We sat at the table for dinner and the father of the house, in a long drawn out, sanctimonious drawl offered thanks for the food, and immediately thereafter began finding fault with everything pertaining to the dinner. It must have been a regular occurrence, for the family took it as a matter of course; but I noticed it, and boy though I was, I could not help thinking that man was a hypocrite.

Have you ever known children of members of the church of God who received their religious teaching in the Sunday schools of sectarian churches take a deep interest in the church of God when they grew to be men and women ? If you have, then your experience has been just the opposite of mine. I am a firm believer in the power of the Sunday school. I firmly believe that every one of our churches should have a Sunday school, even though it consists of but one scholar and one teacher; but even though we have such a school the responsibility of the parent is not lessened—not a bit. It still is his duty both by word and example to instruct his children in the things pertaining to "the kingdom of God and of his Christ"; things one never would hear in a sectarian Sunday school even though he attended it for a hundred years.

What kind of home training has a child received who would "go to the bad" simply because he did not attend a sectarian Sunday school ? If you are isolated, if you have no church of God Sunday school, then take my advice and make one, all for yourself if necessary; you the teacher, your child or children the class, and just watch how interested that "class" will become; and not only that, but see how much benefit you will derive from it yourself by studying to make it interesting for your class. You will receive more knowledge, more benefit, more spiritual food than you have any idea of. And who knows but that your child might bring some of his playmates to the "class" someday, and through the child you will be given an opportunity of reaching the parents; and should they become interested you might in time by "working with God," establish a church of God, and then you will not be isolated. But whether or not you have hope of this greater result, please try the experiment of the home Sunday school and be happy.

In the name of him who loved little children, and invited them to come unto him.

Remarks

HERE WE are on the first month's report of the new year. We have just finished a very prosperous year. What the coming year has in store the Lord alone can foresee. Our calls now take us far along toward the middle of the year. At the close of the conference, which was one of the best of the 35 which I have passed through, I took the grip, and was in bed most of the time for four days. I had arranged with Sister McClelland for a trip to Boise, Idaho, as she had some interested in the truth; so I received a telegram to come at once, as one party was moving always, so I almost got up out of bed to start. Sister Knowls, a very earnest and devoted member of the household of faith, had interested this particular person who wanted to be baptized, and insisted on her getting her man there to do the work, and when the time came, judge of her surprise, when she had left the same morning! I came in without any explanation. They secured the Grand Army Hall just across the street from the state capitol which, by the way, is a wonderful building for a young state. Sister Knowls certainly did a fine job looking for a place in which to hold the meeting. She had to keep track of where we were to meet each evening. First we had to meet upstairs, then that would be occupied and we would meet downstairs; but we got through with but few mistakes. Sister McClelland is always looking for someone who is interested, and she found a Hollander shoe maker, and invited him, and when he came he brought a whole bunch of his countrymen, some of whom had been Russellites, but had read themselves out, and were well versed in the truth. They all came regularly, were good singers, one played for us. They no doubt will be with us some time. Sister McClelland had interested a young man who lived on a ranch several miles out, who came often as possible, and brought his family, and the result was the mother, son and daughter were baptized. They will be a valuable addition to the church. I visited with them a couple of days, and such springs they have which are used for irrigating, and such vegetables and fruits! Mr. Turner, the father, is a genius: he built a cement fountain, and piped the water from a spring high up on the hill, and it throws the water 24 feet in the air, and is as complete as any fountain you will see in the parks. He also made a water wheel, and pipes the water from the same spring, and expects to run a dynamo, and have an electric light plant.

But his greatest achievement is a couple of pictures he has made of seeds. One is a picture of the state capitol, as perfect as any picture taken by the camera. The other is a picture of Arrow Rock dam, built by the government for irrigation purposes. It is hard to describe the beauty and skill of these pictures. The state is talking of making a special appropriation to buy the one of the capitol. It is, however, not the artist and his skill neither the beauty of the picture we are to look at, but remember that in those tiny seeds lie the foundation of every industry in the world. If they should become infertile, how soon would every industry be paralyzed! Man and every living thing die, and the whole world go into a state of chaos. The mines that bring the precious metals to the surface, the coal that is brought, that moves the machinery, keeps the wheels of commerce moving, is made possible by the fertility of these little seeds. Oh the mighty power God hath clothed up in these bits of earthly matter! How wonderful, and how little do we realize it all. We are constrained to say, "Oh the depth of the knowledge and wisdom of God," and stand in reverential awe. Jesus had this in mind when he said, "Except a corn of wheat fall in the earth and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it brings forth much fruit." Jesus is the good seed and was planted, and we are the fruit. Paul had the two seeds in mind in 1 Cor. 15 (I mean Adam and Christ), and each seed gets its body. This we see in the little seeds we have been talking about. It was necessary for Adam to die, or he would have abode alone. There would have been no reproductive power. But we see the world filled with human beings from that planting, but after a while the ravages of disease, war and famine would wipe out the race. Jesus knew this when he said, "Except these days be shortened there would be no man left." And he shortened those days by dying and coming forth an immortal seed; and every seed planted in him will come forth with life in himself, and the danger of the earth being depopulated averted.

Well, I have drifted away from my report. We were nearing the time when we must say goodby to those faithful ones, and our hearts filled with anxiety to know if any visible results would be manifested. We are reminded these things are all in the hands of God. How good and trustful it sounded to hear Sister McClelland say, "Brother Adams, we have done our duty."

Sunday morning came, the last day of the meeting and we were still in doubt, when an auto stopped out in front, and we found three of the Turner family there, ready for baptism. When all were ready we were driven to the Natatorium where there is a large pool filled with natural warm water, and before the morning crowd had gathered, we planted these three in the likeness of Christ's death, and raised them up to walk in newness of life; then hastened away to the hall were a congregation was waiting. After the meeting we all went with our lunches to Brother Bromet's where we ate our dinner together, and hastened back to the hall, where by request I gave a talk on Christ's coming and the object. I showed them that we were taught to love his appearing, but if he was coming to destroy and make havoc of creation, we could not love such an appearing. At the close of the meeting we organized a Berean class, with Sister McClelland as leader, and Sister Edna Turner Secretary and Treasurer.

They think they will have a large class, and will be in good hands under the leadership of Sister McClelland. After those present had given their names to Sister Turner for membership, we were driven out to Sister McClelland's by her daughter and her husband where I packed my grip preparatory to taking the train for home to meet another call. While waiting for Brother Turner to come, Sister McClelland's little granddaughter Nadine Schriber, gave a few readings, which were wonderful. The time came to say goodby, and we were driven to Sister Knowls where we enjoyed a good supper after a hard day's work, and visited till train time with Sister Knowls and her niece, Florence Farney, daughter of Samuel Farney, well known to many of the household of faith. Bidding them goodby we were once more headed East. Arrived home Tuesday night only to say hello and goodby. I am now at Hector, Minn., which, the Lord willing, I will tell you about next month.

OUR WORK

Our tasks proclaim our inward souls
Far more than words and spoken creeds,
Unreached may be our fairest goals,
But greatness lies in all our deeds

The work we do our worth proclaims,
Far more than spoken praise can tell:
Indifferent toil the laborer shames,
But good is he who buildeth well.

The idler, though his speech be fair
Is but an idelr, glib of tongue:
By work alone can man declare
The faith to which his soul has clung.

Our tasks express us as we are,
Men judge as by the things we do:
Good works proclaim the man afar,
In bad work men our weakness view.

Forth from our hands must come our creeds
In substance must our lives be spun,
We are no better than our deeds,
No greater than the tasks we've done.

Who labors daily at his best,
Who does good work from day to day
Has all his dreams of joy expressed
And kept the faith, let come what may.

THE COMPETITION

In the edition of May 25th Sister Bessie Walker (Aunt Bess) offered certain prizes of her own making for the best composition on a Bible theme. She selected the conductor of this department as judge and he now awards the prizes to Miss Hazel B. Titus, of Letcher, South Dakota, a little miss of 12 years whose composition, "The Story of Daniel," appealed in the issue of July 6th. It was hard making this deceision, for most of the articles were extremaly good, and in making it he took into consideration the story, the moral, and the general neatness of the manuscript. We trust the decision will give satisfaction.

A GLANCE INTO THE EPISTLE OF PETER

UNDER THE touch of God we look along the many directions of this epistle and we see it looming up as a thing of glory. "That your faith might be found unto glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ:" "Believing, ye rejoice with joy, full of glory;" "I, a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed:" "When the chief shepherd shall appear ye shall receive a crown of glory;" "The God of all grace who hath called us into his eternal glory."

Who of us even can begin to describe these promises of glory? Could you describe the sun so that a person who never had seen it would know of its grandeur, heat, power and glory? And no more can we, with our puny little minds, conceive of the glory God has in store for us, who come to him through faith in Jesus the Christ the Son of God.

In one direction we look and we catch a glimpse of a most promising inheritance. "Blessed be God, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us into a lively hope to an inhertance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away reserved in heaven for you." Every once in a while we read of great earthly inheritances, but some are "defiled," while others corrupt and others fade away; but this inheritance will never fade. It is safe in the keeping of God who shall give it to all those who look for the appearing of his Christ at his coming.

In another direction we see a spirit quite rare, a spirit of happiness and rejoicing in suffering. We are taught that it is better to suffer for right doing than for wrong doing. "Because through the testing of our faith, being much more precious than gold that perisheth though it be tried with fire, we are to be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." Because when we are reproached for the name of Christ the spirit of God will rest upon us. Therefore Peter urges, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you: but rejoice, inasmcuh as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

One of the most humane pictures in the life of our Lord is when he says to Peter, "Lovest thou me more than these?" and when Peter answered, "Yes," Jesus said, "Feed my sheep." This epistle is part of Peter's response to that command. We therefore can be assured that it contains much spiritual food. Food is that which fits into life to fill an absolute need and for which nothing else can be substituted. This is true of our physical life; it equally is true of the spiritual life. The same one who made the law that our physical life must be fed with nourishing food also made the law that our spiritual life must be fed on spiritual food. As this epistle then forms part of this most necessary spiritual food, in spending much time in the study of its matchless treasures, we can have the rich satisfaction of knowing that we are partaking of that which will add to the glory of God and our own eternal life.

"I have written briefly, exhorting that this is the true grace of God. Stand ye fast therein" (1 Pet. 5:12). Let us accept this admonition of Peter and reap the reward promised by God to all those who love and obey him.

PRAYING WITH PERSEVERANCE

SOME PRAYERS like some plants mature slowly. At times the husbandman needs "long patience." The most precious fruits of intercession must often be attended "with perseverance."

In the Solomon Islands we have a class of native dogs that suffer from chronic starvation. As might be expected, they have but little spirit, so that when they take hold of anything, it does not take much to drive them off and discourage them. They have often afforded an apt illustration for our converts of the way many Christians take hold in prayer in the islands yes, and in the homelands! And I have told them how bull-dogs, when they take hold, will die almost before they let go. Many a time since then, a native, ever quick at parable, has prayed: "O Lord, make us bull-dogs in prayer!" Such, indeed, are the intercessors who are needed in the church today. Men who will cry with the patriarch, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." Men who will set their faces to pray on with what God has laid upon in quiet confidence that what God has laid upon their hearts to ask, that, he is certain in the end to give, when patience has had her perfect work. For it is our privilege to serve a Master who can foresee the future, and who only inclines our hearts to ask that which he is prepared to give, to cheer and encourage us to ask and believe for greater things. Bull-dogs in prayer! How many of us could be described like that?—The Evangle.

CHRISTIAN LIFE GUIDE

Growth in Grace

God's Command. "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pet. 3:18).

How to Grow in Grace

1. Confss Christ with the mouth before men every opportunity you get (Matt. 10:32, 33; Rom. 10:9).
2. Be baptized and partake regularly of the Lord's Supper (Acts 2:38-42: Luke 22:19; 1 Cor. 11:26).
3. Study the word daily (1 Pet. 2:2; Acts 26:32; Acts 17:11).
4. Pray daily and every time you are tempted (Luke 11:9-13; Luke 22:40; 1 Thess. 3:17).
5. Put away out of your life every sin and everything that you have doubts about and obey every word of Christ (1 John,1:7; Rom. 14:23; John 14:23).
6. Seek the society of Christians (Eph. 4:11-16; Acts 2:42-47: Heb. 10:24, 25).
7. Go to work for Christ (Matt. 25:14-20).
8. When you fall into sin don't be discouraged, but confess it at once, believe it forgiven and get up and go on (1 John 1:9: Phil. 3:13, 14).

Earnestly desiring to grow in grace, according to God's command, I purpose to openly confess Christ, to observe all his words, to study a portion of his word daily, to pray regularly, to seek the society of his people, and to seek each day some work that I can do for his sake.

TOMORROW

IF NOT today, tomorrow then,
  Will bring us blessings surely;
The hand that weaves the fate of men
  Holds every thread securely!
Our hands are frail and often fail
  But he is always thorough;
And right will win whate'er assail
  If not today, tomorrow!

If not today, tomorrow then,
  The dreams that have been dearest
Will come to pass; the fears will fade
  That have been darkest, nearest!
The kingdom will most surely come
  And therefore we can borrow:
What God hath promised shall be done
  If not today, tomorrow!

Remember the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

Must the fruitful bough be pruned? Must the knife cut even the best and most useful? No doubt it is so, for very much of our Lord's purging work is done by means of affliction of one kind or another. It is not the evil but the good who have the prunes of tribulation in this life.

God's Will

Just to be tender, just to be true,
Just to be glad the whole day through,
Just to be merciful, just to be mild,
Just to be trustful as a child;
Just to be gentle and kind and sweet,
Just to be helpful with willing feet;
Just to be cheery when things go wrong,
Just to drive sadness away with a song;
Whether the hour is dark or bright,
Just to be loyal to God and right;
Just to believe that God knows best,
Just in his promises ever to rest;
Just to let love be our daily key,
That is God's will for you and me.

Futurism Stated and Answered

Posthumous Work of Brother John L. Wince, of Pierceton, Indiana

6. WHEN DID the Roman Church sit in the temple of God?

THE QUSETION to accord with the language of Paul may be put thus: When did the Man of Sin sit in the temple of God? This is in shape to be answered by the historic expositor who understands by "Man of Sin," an official succession. The apostle speaks of an apostasy or a falling away, and the Man of Sin as the result of this operation. He also styles the apostasy the "Mystery of Iniquity," which began to work in his day. The mystery of Christ is the gospel; but here in this second chapter of the 2nd Thessalonian letter is a msytery which is the very opposite of the "mystery of godliness" (1 Tim. 3:16). The one was preached by honest men, such as Paul, who "renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God" (2 Cor. 4:2); the other proclaimed by "men of corrupt minds and destitute of truth" (1 Tim. 4:5); "grievous wolves" concerning which the apostle to the Gentiles gave the note of warning, saying, "Of your our selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them" (Acts 20:29, 30). These perverters of the truth were to arise in the church or temple of God. "The mystery of iniquity" was to work in the body of believers, and the falling away was to be from the truth of the Christian system, and not from Judaism. It would be marvelous indeed if the false teaching and the working of the mystery in Paul's day have not yet resulted in the development of a man or succession of men to meet the requirements of Paul's prophetic description of the Man of Sin. Nothing in sight yet answering to it!

The fact is that the Man of Sin came on the theatre of this world centuries ago, and has played most consummately his part in the terrible drama of sin and shame and crime; in a word, has been chief actor. No seven years or three and a half years Antichrist, though he might be the embodiment of every satanic attribute, could match the long line of popes, scarcely any of which possessed a redeeming trait that would ally them with the human.

We have in this prophecy of Paul a man set over against the one exalting himself, as hindering him and standing in the way, for a time, of his full development. If the Man of Sin is one single actor, so is the other. If the first is not yet in sight, the age of the hindering man will have to be enormously prolonged in order that he shall be an actor at the proper time. Paul says of this latter one that he now hinders: using the present tense. So this places before us two historic men as actors: the one to continue until the time of our Lord's second coming to be destroyed: the other to be taken out of the way so as to allow the first to mount to the dizzy pinnacle of supremacy to which he aspired. So we have from these considerations a succession, as the Man of Sin. Our task as expositors is to identify the power that fills the measure of prophecy. The early Christian church understood that the hindering one was the Ceasars representing the secular power of Rome; and this information, according to Irenaeus, was imparted by Paul through word of mouth when present with the Thessalonian church. With this agree Paul's own words: "Remember ye not that, when I was with you, I told you these things?" (vs. 5). Irenaeus was a disciple of Polycarp who was a disciple of John the revelator. From Irenaeus [illegible] fathers are unanimous in this assertion. Paul says, "ye know"; the early church (though not the identical generation) tells us what they knew. There is a very strong presumption that they were right, for how should Irenaeus and the fathers invent such an improbable notion? They were far more likely to imagine the Roman Emperor to be the Antichrist than to imagine him to be the great hindering cause to Antichrist's development, for pagan Rome was a persecuting power. Now there can hardly be any question as touching the self-exalting utterances and the self-exalting practices of the popes. They are on record. All that Paul ascribes to the Man of Sin finds its counterpart in the history of the papacy.

"But," says one, "when did the Man of Sin sit in the temple of God?" The question is in part answered by the fact that the apostasy is in the church. There is where Paul places it. It can be easily traced in its gradual unfolding. It was in the church and at Rome that the bishops began to claim and exercise authority beyond what was assigned to them in the New Testament; which was that of overseers in a local assembly of Christians, and enjoying the right of franchise on questions touching the welfare of that particular body. The bishops gradually extended their power: first over the metropolitan churches; later over country churches of large districts; and later still came up the question of primacy between the Patriarch of Constantinople and the Bishop of Rome which by the help of the emperors of the East combined with certain circumstances, was settled in favor of the latter. This all the while was being carried forward in the church, styled by Paul the "temple of God," "a holy temple," "a spiritual house." In this temple and not in one of wood or stone, the Antichrist, the false christ, the Man of Sin, was to be seated and attain his prodigious exaltation.

The Futurist objects to this by saying that the church of Rome cannot possibly be meant by the temple of God; that it is most grotesquely absurd to so designate it. And it surely would be if the church was at the beginning what it is today, and has been for centuries. But it started pure and was gradually corrupted by the Romish bishops in order to their own aggrandizement. By virtue of what it was and what it was designed to be it is called in the prophecy the "temple of God." It is a Bible idiom that persons and things are spoken of according to what they once were or professed or are professedly thought to be though not really so either formerly or at present; e. g., 1 Cor. 1:21, "The world by wisdom knew not God." Jesus said, "The whole need not a physician." God called Israel "an holy people" when their [illegible] had culminated and the wrath of God had come upon them to the uttermost.

It must be remembered, too, that the Man of Sin had his period of youth and early manhood during which time he was at his iniquitous work while the church was yet in a comparative sense pure. What would the Futurist call a church in a given locality which had been pure in practice and faith, but in which a little later is discovered fraud and deceit, the elder claiming rights and privileges transcending those laid down in Paul's instructions touching the office of an elder? The membership might be partially corrupted in faith and morals by the false teachings of this self-exalted elder. He would very naturally and in harmony with a Bible idiom call it the temple of God in which the elder or Man of Sin was putting forth his boastful claims, and enforcing his authority beyond divine precedent and precept.

We are shut up to the fact that the apostle here means by the temple of God the church of God because the history of more than twelve centuries presents to our view the counterpart of Paul's description in every other particular and in this without unreasonably or unscripturally forcing the meaning of the word "temple." I feel quite safe in my conclusion from the fact that it is the very opposite of the theory put forth by high Roman authority and with the view to ward off the blows aimed with such deadly effect at the head of the Roman church by the Reformers, who, to a man, held the historic view of this and the parallel prophecies of Daniel and John. They showed that these prophecies as a mirror reflected the papacy in all its lineaments as face answers to face before the glass. This view ably and persistently was one great factor that helped to give Europe freedom, progress, civilization, prosperity, learning, and letters, and an open Bible. These Reformers held up the papacy as the deadly upas that had for long centuries blasted and blighted every thing wherever it came. Who gave the world the theory of a future Antichrist? Roman writers and theologians who smarted under the pains and wounds inflicted upon them by the leaders of the Reformation. They were obliged to make an effort to show that the Antichrist belongs to the future to exonerate themselves from the charge of being themselves the Antichrist.

Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of your liberties; write its precepts in your hearts, and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this Book we are indebted for the progress made in civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." U. S. Grant.

The Parables of Christ

Number Seven

THE KINGDOM of heaven is like a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind which, when it was full, they drew to the shore and sat down and gathered the good into vessels but cast the bad away. So shall it be in the end of the world (the age): the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

THE ABOVE parable has some of its features like the parable of the wheat and the tares. We would make it co-ordinate with that parable with this difference that a drag net is introduced to show the means used in the gathering and the place from which they, the wicked and the just, are gathered. Note please that the use of a net introduces a force used in gathering: second that the use of the word "sea" implies that the gathering was from the people. The word sea as used in the Scriptures relates to all people. The four Gentile nations were seen by Daniel arising from the sea.

These two facts are positive proof that this parable does not occupy the same period or age as does the parable of the sower. In this parable the seed is sown broadcast and its growth depends upon the soil and necessary conditions. As we have before stated, the character of the judgments is distinctively different. The judgment brought to view in this parable and that of the tares is identical as to form and kind. The wicked in these two parables are visited with a retributive judgment. The time is not when Jesus comes but when the great white throne judgment occurs when a mixed judgment takes place.

When this judgment is rendered, sin will meet with its final destruction. There will remain nothing for judgment. Then will Jesus and the saints deliver up the kingdom to the Father who will be all in all. Then will the last enemy, death, be vanquished (1 Cor. 15:24-28).

In these two parables there is a slight difference. In the first the product of the good seed is the children of the kingdom; those of the tare seed the children of the wicked one. The product of the good seed and the tare seed is incident

*From this statement it seems that Brother Nelson understands there will be no "retributive judgment" for to a specific time and condition. In the later parable there is no mention made of the growth or product of a seed, good or bad. The net therefore must be cast into the sea when God's longsuffering and patience has been brought to a close. The probationary period or the time when Jehovah will withdraw his protection will have ceased. During the "little season" sin will increase so rapidly that persuasive means will prove of no avail. There can be but one result—the uprooting of all evil and the introduction of everlasting righteousness which has been accomplished through the earth being filled with an immortalized race when there will be one God and one tongue to proclaim "The Lord reigneth: he sitteth between the cherubim; let the earth be moved. The Lord is great in Zion, he is high above all people." Then will the angels again rejoice and sing the song for the redeemed of every people, tongue and nation in the earth.

After this parable had been given to his disciples, Jesus said, "Have ye understood all these things? They said unto him, Yea, Lord. Then said Jesus unto them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed into the kingdom of heaven is like a man that is a householder which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." The above is proof sufficiently conclusive that these parables were specially intended for the instruction of the apostles in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. If these parables are to be confined in their teaching as found in the parable of the sower they could not be instructed into the kingdom of heaven. This embraces the time and work of the coming age. Israel restored or the kingdom restored to Israel, and the manifestation of the sons of God through the power of the resurrection. Again will the morning stars sing together and sons of God shout for joy.

"Go–Preach the Gospel"

REPORTS FROM our ministers everywhere show that some good is done wherever the gospel is preached, and that there are more calls for meetings than our Evangelists can fill.

As we are all impressed by the signs of the times that the time for the gospel work is short, and as my heart is more in religious work than in any other work, I have decided to make an appeal for pledges, so that I may feel justified in giving up carpenter work at $6.00 per day for the gospel work. I am willing to sacrifice in salary as long as enough comes in to meet the needs of my family; but for three seasons that I preached, in all eighteen months, the free will offerings averaged less than $12.00 per month; yet my family were humiliated by letters from brethren asking why we "always seemed to be hard up," and "why we had to beg money from the church." I assure such inquirers that I do not need to either beg or be hard up if I will do like many of these professed disciples of Christ—stay at home and chase the dollars—while Kansas and a score of other states have no conference or evangelist to represent the truth we profess to love.

I need no money for myself above the free will offerings where I preach, but these will not support a family in the city in these times of high prices.

If $400.00 is pledged, I can drop worldly work and plan for five or six months preaching where little classes want meetings. If $1200.00 are pledged, I want to hire some building in a large city where I can start a mission work, where I can teach the Scriptures every night, and visit the people every day. I would calls it "The Truth-seeker's Non-sectarian Union Mission"—a place where every Bible subject could be investigated and discussed.

Send no money, but drop a post card with your pledge to be paid between December and March next. Address W. L. CROWE.

the wicked when Jesus comes. In The Restitution of Sept. 7, 1920, page 356 he says: "He (Christ) will come with the reward due the faithful who have gone to sleep and those who are still living. These rewards are determined at the judgment seat of Christ (2 Cor. 5:10). None but the righteous have a standing in this judgment." 2 Cor. 5:10 states that some are to receive "bad," others "good." Surely some one other than the saints has a "standing" in the judgment of this verse. We can understand how the righteous will receive rewards good, better, and best; but none of them receive "bad," do they? As far back as Enoch, "the seventh from Adam," "retributive judgment" at the coming of Christ was taught in this explicit prophecy: "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convict all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him" (Jude 14, 15).—Editor.

DEAR BEREANS:

WE ARE starting on a new year's work, and the time to get started is now. We were all much pleased over the report of the Berean Conference held in Indiana this year. People are just finding out the good this society is doing in its many departments. The lessons keep an interest up, and a subject before the class aids to their sociability, gives confidence to the young, gives cheer to the isolated, and so many other things that it has become a part of the church. The very beginning or foundation of the Bible study class is ORGANIZATION, the setting to order. There has been a new organization committee appointed for this coming year, and it is only through the co-operation of the members everywhere that we can accomplish anything.

We want you to help us by sending names and addresses of state officers, also congregations were there are two or more members, and also by beginning this year with a Berean Class. Even two can get a book and study the lesson and send either of us a report of it.

Let us all get to work and do our best this year to do our part. We ask God's blessing upon this work.

A NEW DEPARTMENT

AT OUR annual meeting this summer the subject of a "Helping Fund" was brought up and discussed. Our committee in their work have found a great many places where a helping hand would mean so much. As there is no fund from which to draw the committees have been going down into their own pockets. Now in the matter of sharing we should all have a hand and not allow the committees to have all the pleasure. So it was decided to create such a fund. Then state societies, local societies, and individuals could all support it and be glad to know that they were sharing with those within the housthold of faith.

If you wish to contribute to this fund send your money to our treasurer, Mrs. Grace M. Marsh, 511 Park St. Mashalltown, Iowa, and mark it "Helping Fund."

PESSIMISTS IN PRAYER

A PESSIMIST is one who habitually looks on the dark side of things, who counts the discouragements, and discounts the deliverances. applied to human affairs, it is excused that "if you expect little you will not be disappointed."

But such a state of mind, such an outlook and expectation applied to earthly things, is apt to become habitual, and unconsciously become our attitude towards spiritual things as well. Thus there is adopted a God-dishonoring attitude that undermines the expectations of faith and causes prayer with many of God's children to become a power unavailed of.

God has no use for pessimists in prayer.

"Ye have not because ye ask not" is the Spirit's explanation of the usual poverty of soul. "Expect great things from God and you will get them," is the sober triumphant verdict of George Muller, the latter day apostle of prevailing prayer. Surely, then, seeing we have the resources of the Savior on which to draw, we may safely be the most habitual optimists in prayer. For abiding in him, being led out by him, we shall not be confounded. To the ardent soul who would excel in prayer, pessimism is a state of mind which needs to be consciously and constantly guarded against, even as constantly we need to enlarge our expectations by recording and recalling God's deliverance in the past.

THE EVANGEL.

It is utterly impossible for you to be strong in the Lord so long as you fail to search his word. Therefore, read it carefully, search it diligently, and meditate upon it prayerfully.

Elsewhere we publish an appeal entitled "Go Preach the Gospel." In a lettter accompanying the article Elder Crowe says:

> I see no need for a miraculous, fleshly begettal to make the head of the Christ-body divine, any more than for the members of his body. And while Jesus is given pre-eminence as Captain and Leader and Head of the body, the church, neither is nor Paul nor any writer of the Epistles made any claim for the divinity of Jesus other than [illegible] of the Holy Spirit which every other member of his body could possess. Jesus was the Light of the world, the bread of life, the Son of God, divine, from above, God manifest in the flesh, one with the Father, [illegible] holy and the true temple of God; yet all the above terms are also applied to the Church or Christ-body.

As our readers know, Elder Crowe believes that Joseph was the father of Jesus. He was formerly also a Sabbatarian, but has lately rejected the bondage of the law for the liberty of the gospel. We were hoping that while he was investigating and discussing Bible subjects, and changing his views on the Sabbath, he would see that placing Christ to the level of humanity was a dangerous error. But it appears from his letter that he still sees [illegible] need for Christ to be anything other than a mere man. The same "terms" that are applied to Christ are also applied to the church, and mean [illegible] in the one case than the other. Christ as Captain, Leader, and Head [illegible] of "pre-eminence" is only one. Personally we love and [illegible] Elder Crowe and are glad to count him our brother [illegible] so long as he rejects the proper [illegible] of Christ he has no personal Savior and no Savior to preach to others. "The Truth-seeker's Non-Sectarian Union Mission" shows that [illegible] "Seek and ye shall find." When [illegible] [illegible] investigator and defender. Committed to Christ he is publicly identified with "the sect everywhere spoken against" (Acts 28:22), and is, therefore, a sectarian. A "non-sectarian" is nobody. "Union" with Christ and the people of Christ is what Jesus prayed for in John 17; but a "non-sectarian union" smells of orthodox confederation and compromise. The fervent prayer we breathe is that God may lead Elder Crowe to see that there is only "one faith, one Lord, and one baptism" (Eph. 4:4), and that nothing but a definite belief of the gospel and profession of faith in the Son of God crucified can give us any inheritance in the kingdom of God.

The Valley of Dry Bones

Skeleton Notes of the Editor's Sermon

THE HAND of the Lord was upon me and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord, and set me down in the midst of the valley which was full of bones, and caused me to pass by them round about. (Ezek. 37:1, 2)

LAST SUNDAY evening we gave an address on what we called The Supreme Question found in Acts 16:30. In giving that discourse, we were led to see that the Bible was a book of questions. The questions are there to enlist interest and impart information. In keeping with the thoughts of last Sunday evening, you will notice in the third verse that Jehovah asked the "Son of man, can these bones live?" and the prophet in utmost modesty replied, "O Lord God, thou knowest." Jesus often asked questions to arouse attention and to lay before his disciples such matters as he wanted them to consider. He frequently put questions to them for the purpose of proving them. A case in point occurs in John 6:5, 6. Vast multitudes of people are in the desert cut off from access to the ordinary necessities of life. We read: "When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat? And this he said to prove him: for he himself knew what he would do." Here in the desert is a vast congregation of people. Supper time arrives and Jesus [illegible] the question of how they are going to [illegible]. We [illegible] told that [illegible] Philip "to prove" [illegible] knew all the time what he was going to do.

[illegible] and helplessness in the matter replied, "O Lord God, thou knowest." After the prophet had felt the touch of God's hand he was carried out in the midst of the valley which was full of bones, and was caused to pass round about, and lo there were many in the open valley, and they were very dry. This exhibition of inanimation called attention to the greatness of the work to be done. The question and observation humbled Ezekiel and glorified God.

One more prefatory thought. In the 11th verse Ezekiel is told, that the valley full of bones represents "the whole house of Israel." "Behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts." Such is the picture we are invited to look at in the 37th chapter of Ezekiel.

THE WORLD IN THE VALLEY OF DEATH

The first thought in the consideration of this Scripture is the lifelessness and helplessness of Israel. In verse 11 the prophet is told specifically that the valley of dry bones represents the whole house of Israel, so taking this narrow view of the matter, the prophet's attention is directed towards the house of Israel. He sees that they were very dry.

We are now ready to discuss a delicate question: Will false religion save? If a person is honest and sincere; if a person is doing the best that he can, he is sure to be saved, says the world. The world is filled with good religious people; and now don't you think these are Christians? Rejectors of Christ Christians? Are Mohammedans Christians? Are Pagans Christians? There are many sincere Jews; Pagans are just as devout as we are. Will false religion save? I will answer that question presently by the Scriptures themselves. Pope's universal prayer, universally admired, is that the same infinite being under different names is adored in every age and clime, and therefore it makes no difference what God is adored, whether Christ [illegible] or not. Pope's idea was that the same infinite mind and the same infinite being under different names is worshipped, yet it is the same God that is adored. Then you find sentimental people coming around saying, "Don't you think that sincerity is a substitute for the [illegible] of the Almighty?" Well they are just hearing for [illegible]. Without having any "race prejudice" let us see what is the condition of the house of Israel today. From the mouth of Jesus [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Father's sake.

and ye receive me not; another will come in his own name, and him ye will receive." Now Jesus was a Jew. He had no national prejudice whatever, yet his estimate of the Jews is that they would not come to him that they might have life. They did not seek for the honor that comes from God. They did not believe Moses or else they would have believed him. They rejected Christ. They said away with this man; we will not have him reign over us. "Let his blood be upon us and our children forever" (Matt. 27:25). Now look back for twenty centuries: we see the nation of Israel as dry bones. They invoked upon themselves the blood of Christ and it is resting upon them today. Rejecting Christ they are not Christians. I repeat the assertion, the Jewish nation is not Christian. They are just a bundle of dry bones. This is the condition of the Israelitish nation today.

But suppose we enlarge our vision a little. Suppose we look away from the borders of Israel, what do we see? Of Israel God says: "The Lord hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself above all people upon the face of the earth (Deut. 7:6). Remember that they are the very best people upon the face of the earth, and that they are a special people above every other people on the earth. After proper scrutiny God selected the Israelitish nation as the very best. Then if the best nation is bad, are not the rest worse. Let us open our eyes a little wider, and we see millions of Mohammedans. In Rev. 9 they are said to issue out of the abyss and fill the air with smoke. They were the chief instruments which caused the downfall of Rome. But are they Christians?

We look again and see millions more called Pagans. Think of China: of Asia; of the serpent and sun worshippers and multiplied millions of others who are pagans; but all of whom are not Christians. Just a question or two: Are the Jews Christians? Are pagans Christians? Are Mohammedans Christians?

"Christian Rome"—is that not a misnomer? Referring to this system in 2 Thess. 2 Paul says there was a mystery of iniquity working then. Because they receive not the love of the truth that they might be saved, God will send them a strong delusion, an intoxication, that they might believe a lie and be damned.

We have now had a survey of the world in the valley of death. Jews, Pagans, Mohammedans, "Christian" Rome—all are outside of Christianity. A little body of protestants only are left. Are they Christians? Without discussing that point now, remember that all protestants came from Rome. You will find differences of discipline and church government between them, but you will not find one vital difference of a doctrinal nature. They are all members of the same family. They are six of one and a half dozen of the other.

WHAT SAVES?

The world, then, is a valley of death. Turning again to Ezekiel 37, beginning with the 4th verse, we read, "Son of man, prophesy upon these bones and say to them, O dry bones, hear the word of the Lord." Why "prophesy?" The word "prophesy" means to proclaim publicly, publish, preach (Young). "Son of man, prophesy the word of the Lord. So I prophesied, and as I prophesied there was a noise, a shaking, and bones came," etc. Israel lying prostrate in the valley were made alive by prophesy and prophesy is a proclaiming, and the thing proclaimed is "the word of the Lord." Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel, says Paul (1 Cor 1:17). He sent me to prophesy, just as Ezekiel says, "not with the wisdom of words lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect."

What is the power God uses to save? From my boyhood up, from the time that I wore knee pants to the present day, I have been told that the cross of Christ is the thing that saves. But listen to 1 Cor. 1:18: "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us who are saved it is the power of God." Not the cross, but "the preaching of the cross." Son of man prophesy! He sent me to preach, to prophesy, and the very essence of the proclamation is the preaching of the cross. What does that do? Why it saves. "Unto us who believe it is the power of God." "Where is the wise, where is the scribe, where is the disputer of this world?" Preaching the cross, preaching the gospel in the sense of prophesy or of proclaiming, is the very power that reanimates the dead. The Jews wanted a sign, the Greeks sought after wisdom; but we preach Christ crucified, unto them that are called, both Jews and Gentiles, "Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." Jews and Greeks are alike dead in trespasses and sins. The whole world is a valley of death. God's word for it, if life from the dead eventually comes; if the dead in trespasses and sins are ever quickened it will be through the instrumentality of the gospel preached.

Communications

They spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it.—Mal. 3:16.

DEAR RESTITUTION:

Recently we have had an able man from Little Rock, Ark., who holds many things in common with the Church of God. While he tried to disabuse their minds of the idea that dead folks do not become angels, and quoted how we used to sing, "I want to be an angel, and with the angels stand," etc., but he went so far as to say that angels did not occupy space any more than a thought, and that our Lord was a Baptist—proof: John baptized him! Thus he comes to us wearing John's title instead of the Father's name as our Savior did (John 5:32-47). So we had the privilege at the close of an eight day's meeting to call attention to John's mission and his last recorded words (John 3:25-30). He left an appointment to come again. We would like to know soon when Brother Almus Adams can come and preach the gospel of Christ here? Like Paul, we do not know what will befall him (Acts 20:17-24). We feel our need of encouragement. Our neighbors and children need help!

Yours in hope,

R. A. HUMPHREYS.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

BROTHER T. A. Drinkard arrived from Kennard Monday, Oct. 25th.

We had a Bible lesson that evening and also Tuesday evening. The attendance was quite good, a number of the Kennard brothers and sisters being present.

The lessons were very instructive and were enjoyed by all. We look forward to having him with us again next month. In the meantime we will try to carry on the work to the best of our ability. The lessons were held at our home on the edge of town.

Your sister in Christ,

BIRDIE KROGH.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS:

JUST A few lines of thanks for all the help we received in our hour of need. Pen cannot describe the gratefulness of our hearts towards you all for your loving words of encouragement and kind deeds.

Thanks be to God and his dear Son, for we know he is watching us and taking care of us during these perilous times. He commanded that we love each other as he loves us and to come out from the world and be a separate people. He is the head, and the body must be perfect as the head. Being members of his body we must strive to be perfect. When one member suffers all other members suffer too. We hope we may be able to help others some day, as it is more blessed to give than to receive.

How comforting to know we are all brothers and sisters with our hearts open and our hands extended to all good work while here looking for the Savior's coming. I have asked you all to write to us, as we are isolated and need your loving words to comfort us. Please let us know what is going on in the churches.

Pray for us, as the prayers of the righteous are always heard. May we meet meet when Jesus comes, and so ever be with him. Then we will meet face to face, partakers of the same honor and glory. May your reward be great, is the prayer of us both. Hold fast: do not go back to walk with the world. When Jesus comes he will not look for his saints in orthodox churches. They do not believe in the Jesus we do, and no doubt are the ones to whom he will say, "I never knew you; depart."

I will write again to you all through our dear Restitution. Love and prayers for all.

Your brother and sister in Christ,

A. ASHUTE.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

ARRIVED AT Kennard, Neb. and began a few days meeting last night.

I wish to take a little time to offer a few words of commendation on "Orthodox Sunday Schools."

This is a question which I have had before the brotherhood for a number of years, and one upon which you have to argue much to convince some of the faith that they are absolutely wrong. Sometimes we are found wondering what the sectarian world thinks of the Church of God. I know what I would think if I were them. I would very quickly conclude that there was something wrong somewhere. I do not object to going to the so-called churches to hear and consider what may be said; but I do object to the advice that we should unionize with them and use Cook's works instead of God's word.

Sister Lapp says: "I believe if we should ever get one of our preachers to come here and hold meetings, there will be a better chance of getting those people to come to our meeting than if I had not been to their." I would like to see Sister Lapp try this plan and see how it will work. I have seen brethren go through just exactly the same thing and finally come out so disappointed and discouraged as to indicate failure. And I have in mind several places, one where some are working with that kind of people who turn a scoffing ear to God's word, and another where they are using union literature to persuade (?) and convince the unbelieves of their ungodly deeds. It is enough to cause us to weep, as did Jeremiah when thinking of Israel's plight. If Sister Lapp believes much good can be done in her community, suppose each state contribute enough to send someone there for a series of meetings. Perhaps I can arrange to go there for expenses. I have seen so many efforts to unionize come to nought that really I would be surprised to see it otherwise.

As a people we have been wondering why the majority of people who are religious are so absolutely ignorant of Bible themes, when we can see the reason very clearly if we will look. They have used union literature, which is made up by un-Christian men, until their vision is darkened and obscured. With these facts before them, some go right along teaching their children the same things, and even today there are some who are of the opinion that it makes but very little difference just so you are honest and sincere. I often wonder how a man can really be honest and sincere and do those things that they know are not right. Often times in the past I have meditated on Paul's words regarding a departure from the faith, and wondered really would the time come when brethren would actually depart from the faith.

I am of the opinion that this departure will be a gradual work. And as I look around me I see first the idea taking hold of some, let us work among them, use their weapons; we might do some good, it is all right. Let me offer a little warning, you stand a chance of losing out, of being wholly engulfed in the meshes of entanglement. Stay out of them. I do not favor sending my children to union Sunday schools, neither will I send them there. I will teach them at home. If people do not like the procedure they will have to do the best they know.

When our brethren teach union literature instead of God's word, in that way, and to that extent they are compromising the truth. To pay out money for the same and to teach it among themselves just to please outsiders is a pity and a shame. I shall oppose until Jesus comes.

I speak from experience. I have seen it tried. I am out among the people daily, and they hardly like to see a men try to please all sides. I appreciate seeing your stand on the question, and pray that others who are carried away with the idea of union will yet see the error of their way.

Yours for the truth,

T. A. DRINKARD.

MY BIBLE AND I

WE'VE TRAVELED together, my Bible and I
Through all kinds of weather, with smile and with sigh.
In sorrow and sunshine, in tempest or calm,
Thy friendship unchanging, my lamp and psalm.

We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
When life had grown weary and death e'en was nigh.
But all throught the darkness of mist and of wrong
I found thee a solace, a prayer or a song.

So now who shall part us, my Bible and I?
Shall ism or schism or new lights who try?
Shall shadow for sunshine or stone for good bread
Supplant its sound wisdom, give fully of life?

Oh, no my dear Bible, revealer of light,
Thou sword of the spirit, put error to flight,
And still through life's journey, until my last sigh,
We'll travel together, my Bible and I.

CHRIST IS BOTH WILLING AND ABLE

THAT WAS an eventful day on the western shores of Galilee two thousand years ago: for it was the day Jesus came down from the mountain after delivering his memorable sermon, and the multitudes were waiting for the great Healer. The first to meet him was the leper who said, "Lord, if thou wilt thou canst make me clean." That was the day the centurion of Capernaum asked healing for his servant, at whose faith Jesus marveled, saying, "I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel." That day Jesus went to the house of Peter to eat a simple meal and take a few moments of quiet from the ever increasing throng. But finding Peter's wife's moter laid, and sick with a fever, forgot his own needs and by his healing touch the fever left her and she arose and ministered unto them.

After casting out evil spirits and healing all that were sick, Jesus seeing the great multitudes about him entered into a ship with his disciples and departed for the other side. He now left those trusty seamen in charge and sought a place to rest, finding a pillow in the hinder part of the ship he rested his head upon it and was soon rocked into peaceful slumber. As the disciples watched the sails and guided the ship, they talked of the events of the day and conjectured of what awaited them on the morrow when suddenly a cloud of inky blackness swept down upon them.

Before skilled hands could lower the sails the tempest struck the boat and in spite of their efforts it was soon filled with water. But it was not until they had exhausted their own strength and ability and their lives were in jeopardy, that they remembered the presence of one in the boat whose saving power they had evidenced in their own lives, and seen in the lives of others, that they hastened to look for him, and awoke him saying, "Lord save us; we perish." The cry for help was no sooner made than Jesus rose and rebuked the wind, and a great calm followed.

How many of us sailing on life's stormy sea are trying in our own strength to keep our frail bark from being engulfed by waves of temptation, trial, suffering and sorrow, until our hearts grow faint and the billows have well nigh gone over our heads, forgetting that Jesus embarked with us and is near enough to hear the faintest cry for help, and he will rebuke the tempest and give peace.

CHRISTIAN LIFE GUIDE

Part Three

How to Use the Bible

1. Own a good print, well bound Bible, a Concordance and the "Topical Text Book."

2. Set a portion of each day sacredly apart for Bible study. Let your body go unfed rather than the inward man go unnourished (Acts 12:11).

3. Choose an hour for study when your mind is clearest.

4. Study with a humble, teachable mind, not to see what you can make it teach, but what God meant it to teach (Matt. 11:25).

5. Pray for the guidance of the Author of the book (Psa. 119:18; John 14:26; 1 John 2:27).

6. Read the whole Bible through consecutively, again and again (Luke 24:27).

7. Study, not skim, weigh each word; look up all references and read them carefully; search the Scriptures with Text Book and Concordance to see how God handles such words and subjects as Sin, Salvation, The Cross, The Blood, Repentance, Faith, etc. Analyze books of the Bible verse by verse, writing down all the teachings of each verse (Joshua 2:8).

8. Read it as the word of God (1 Thess. 2:13), submit your judgment unhesitatingly to its teachings, believe all its promises, heed all its warnings, obey all its commands, always and at once. Remember it is God's message to you.

9. Study and accept not only what you like, but all God has to say (John 7:17).

10. Commit to memory at least one verse each day (Psa. 119:11).

11. Carry a Bible or Testament with you for the improvement of spare minutes (Eph. 5:16; Acts 8:28).

DAILY THOUGHTS

Hold fast the form of sound words	2 Tim. 1:13
Let none that wait on thee be ashamed	Psa. 25:3
Take pleasure in reproaches for Christ's sake	2 Cor. 12:10
Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased	Matt. 23:12
Serving the Lord, rejoicing in hope	Rom. 12:11, 12
Little children it is the last time	1 John 2:18
According to thy mercy remember thou me	Psa. 25:7

FULFILLING THE LAW OF CHRIST

WE ARE told to "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." To do this as God would have us do it we must shake ourselves out of ourselves and put ourselves into the other person, which is no easy thing to do; but until we learn how to do this we cannot help others, even a little, to live their lives.

Prejudices, timidity, selfishness, unfeelingness all stand up within us, and the wheels of good purpose move so slowly, and the least little thing, such as want of time, or "what's the use," so checks our enthusiasm that we forget to make allowance for the difference in education and mode of living between the other person and ourselves; and so more often condemn than help them bear their burdens. Therefore let us put ourselves in the other persons's place, helping to bear his burdens and so fulfill God's golden rule.

GOOD ENDS REQUIRE GOOD MEANS

LET NO man turn aside, ever so slightly, from the narrow path of honor, on the plausible pretense that he is justified by the goodness of his end. All good ends can be worked out by good means. Those that cannot, are bad; and may be counted so at once, and left alone. CHARLES DICKENS.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of men to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, NOVEMBER 10th, 1920. NUMBER 43

Good Company

A Collection of Friendly Talks on Bible Subjects: By Brother S. H. Thomas

Jesus and his saints will then rule and govern all the nations and peoples and compel them to serve and obey him.

And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying: The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever (Rev. 11:15)

He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him, and his enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of Tarshish and of the Isles shall bring presents, and the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts; yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him (Psa. 72:8, 11).

And judgment was given to the saints of the Most High and the time came that the saints possesed the kingdom (Dan. 7:22).

Do ye not know that the saints shall judge (rule or govern) the world? (1 Cor. 6:2).

To execute vengeance upon the heathen (Gentile nations), and punishments upon the people (who rebel, and refuse to recognize the authority of Christ), to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron, to execute upon them the judgments written: this honor have all the saints (Psa. 149:7, 9).

And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works to the end, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron (Rev. 2:26, 27).

The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever (Dan. 7:18).

And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven (not up in heaven) shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him (Dan. 7:17).

In the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also (the twelve apostles) shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging (ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. 19:29).

To accomplish this, the Lord Jesus Christ will, in the near future, return to the earth in power and great glory, awaken the sleeping saints, and change the living from mortality to immortality, and associate them with himself as their glorious head, the future rulers of the world, Jesus himself being their visible head and king.

Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead (saints) shall be raised incorruptible, and we (the saints who are alive) shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality (1 Cor. 15:51, 53).

For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up, together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air (2 Thess. 4:16, 17).

And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them . . . . and they lived and reigned a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection. On such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years (Rev. 20:4-6)

When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory (Mat. 25:31).

Jerusalem will then be the capital city of the world.

At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord: and all the nations shall be gathered into it, to the name of the Lord to Jerusalem (Jer. 3:17).

For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem (Isa. 2:3).

Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem gloriously (Isa. 24:23).

So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain; then shall Jerusalem be holy (Jer. 3:17).

Then, and not until then, will bloody wars and savage murders cease, and universal peace prevail from pole to pole. God speed the day!

> And he shall judge among the people, and rebuke strong nations, afar off, and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more; but they shall sit, every one under his vine, and under his fig tree, and none shall make them afraid, for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it (Mic. 4:3-6).
> And I will rejoice in Jerusalem and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying . . . . and they shall build houses and inhabit them: and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another inhabit: they shall not plant and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands (Isa. 19:22).

Even the savage beasts of the forest and field will then partake of the spirit of universal peace, and become gentle and harmless and rend, tear, and destroy each other no more.

> The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid: and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow, and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea (Isa. 11:6-9).

This dear reader, is a brief picture, copied from God's word, of the kingdom of God to be set up on the earth, doubtless during the life of this generation. Consider how beautiful, reasonable, satisfying, and scriptural is the God-given gospel plan of salvation for a sin-cursed earth, and a death stricken race. It promises to restore the Edenic state, remove the curse from man, beast, and land, banish forever sickness, sorrow, pain, and death; and give to his ransomed ones a perpetual title to, and an endless inheritance of, this same old mother earth which gave us birth, and on which we live.

Lift up your eyes and behold yon mountains, capped with perpetual snows, those grass covered hills and fertile valleys. God offers all these, a free gift, a perpetual inheritance, to his people. Those rippling streams, and rushing, waring, rivers, flowing into mighty lakes and oceans – they have been ours from infancy, and even under the curse we love them still; therefore, with what joy and rapture, with what profound gratitude and thankfulness, do we contemplate God's promise of a resurrection of the dead, and everlasting life to his people, and a perpetual inheritance of this earth which gave us birth.

Now compare this grand substantial gospel with the foolish fables and heathen traditions of popular theology: it is like comparing a mountain with a mole hill. Think, if you can, dear reader, of an immortal soul, as described by theologians, both Protestant and Catholic. The soul (they say) is the real man; the body is merely the house in which the house lives. The real man, or soul, is immortal and therefore cannot die; it is only the body, or house that dies. When that event occurs the house is bedecked with flowers and sorrowfully buried; but the man himself is, in some mysterious way, transported to either heaven or hell. An immortal soul is described by priests and clergy as follows: It has neither size, odor, nor shape, and occupies no space; it cannot be seen, felt, heard, or smelled, and God himself who made it, cannot destroy it; for it is immortal and therefore indestructible. The whole fabric of Christian religion is built upon this fable of the immortality of the soul. The chief effort of all Christian (so called) denominations is to save immortal souls from eternal torments in hell, and find for them a home in heaven.

But the word declares that "God only hath immortality" (1 Tim. 6:16). Also, "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Eze. 18:6). That "the day that cometh shall burn them up, and leave them neither root nor branch" (Mal. 4:1). And the same God-given word declares that "the heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men" (Psa. 115:16). If therefore, God only hath immortality, how can the souls of men possess it? And, if "the soul that sinneth must die," be burned up root and branch, and become "as though it had not been," how can it be tormented forever? And if we believe God's word, that "he has given the earth to the children of men," and that "the meek shall inherit it and dwell therein for ever," and that "the righteous shall never be removed," but that "they shall be recompensed in the earth," we surely must abandon the pagan dream of a home in heaven when we die. Truly he who can be lulled to sleep with such a flat and tasteless thing, knows but little of the glories that God has promised in the ages to come to those of his creatures who by faith and obedience prove themselves worthy.

Dear reader, are you an alien from the commonwealth of Israel? are you a stranger from the covenants of promise? If so, you are like the Ephesians were before their obedience (Eph. 2:12), "having no hope and without God in the world." If this is your deplorable condition, my heart goes out to you in earnest pleading; I stretch eager hands across the gulf toward you. Salvation is free; why will ye die? The door is yet ajar, but the time is short; just how short, God only knows. I offer you the only gospel given under heaven, whereby you may be saved. There is none other; it is God's message to you. We ask you to believe and obey it, and so have a part in the glories of the ages to come. It is your glorious birthright, purchased for you by the precious blood of Jesus. O cast it not away as a worthless thing! Exchange it not for a mess of pottage. There is no other way given under heaven. There is but one God, one Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ; and but one gospel message, which I hand to you. Reject it and you die.

Futurism Answered

Rome's Continuous Existence

6. AS THE fourth member of Daniel's vision (chap. 7) is to found in full power when Christ appears for his saints, how can the Roman kingdom fulfill this prophecy when it has ceased to have an existence?

ROME HAS not ceased to have an existence in some form, for according to Nebuchadnezzar's image of empire it was to continue to the end of this dispensation. The fourth section of this image corresponds to the fourth or nondescript and terrible beast of the 7th chapter and the little horn that waxed exceeding great toward the south and toward the east and toward the pleasant land (Palestine) of the 8th chapter, called in the brief explanation in the closing verses of this chapter, "the king (kingdom) of fierce countenance." Up to the fourth section of the image all expositors are agreed; believing that the third or Grecian kingdom was continued in the four divisions under Alexander's generals. But when the point in the vision is reached where the little horn is seen to rise out of one of these divisions, diversity of opinion begins: and yet, it seems to me that the easy and natural conclusion to be reached is that Rome is denoted by these various symbols. On the pages of history the next great kingdom succeeding Greece is Rome, for this kingdom acquired by conquest all that was embraced in the former under its four divisions. In the same year that Antiochus, by the command of the Romans retired out of Egypt and set up the worship of the Greeks in Judea; the Romans conquered Macedon, the fundamental empire of the Greek empire and reduced it to a Roman province, and thereby began to put an end to Daniel's third beast. Following the fall of Macedon, Illyricum, and Epirus were conquered; thirty-five years after by the last will and testament of Attalus, the last king of Pergamos, they inherited that rich and flourishing kingdom that is all Asia west of Mount Taurus; sixty-nine years after they conquered the kingdom of Syria and reduced it into a province; and thirty-four years after they did the like to Egypt. By all these steps Roman arms stood up over the Greeks; and after ninety-five years more, by making war upon the Jews, they "polluted the sanctuary of strength and took away the daily sacrifice and cast down the place of his sanctuary." As truly as history represents Rome as doing this and following closely the third great kingdom, so we find the power symbolized by Daniel's fourth beast represented by the prophet as doing the like things and following without a break the third or Grecian kingdom. The parts of the image are as consecutively and closely joined as are the corresponding parts in the human figure. After getting hold of the key to the meaning of the symbol the first thought that strikes us is the consecutiveness of the prophecy as shown by the several parts, not only down to the division of the Grecian kingdom (which no one has found reason to dispute), but on till the stone kingdom smites the feet of the colossal figure of empire and lays it in ruins. The whole history of Gentile times is covered, and no room left for a break in the chain of events nor pause by the clock of time.

So we have Rome before us in these marvelous visions as truly as we have Babylon, Medo-Persia, and Greece; and it becomes us as honest and prudent expositors to not guess what Rome has not done or what she has done; what she is and what she is not. Mighty Rome is voiced in universal history and is embalmed in song and sculptured in marble. Milman says the Romans conquered like savages and ruled like philosophic statesmen. There can be no question as to Rome's greatness. The iron in the image and the nondescript beast are not inappropriate symbols as applied to Rome.

The fourth member of the vision does not go down to the end in full power, if division means weakness, and it surely does, as denoted by the language, "partly strong and partly brittle." The little horn of the 7th chapter and contemporaneous with the other horns is Roman. The government denoted by it is in existence down to the end of the age. Though its utter destruction is at the coming of the Lord, its judgment precedes its destruction, the sentence against it being the taking away of its dominion to consume and destroy it unto the end" (Dan. 7:26). In John's vision (Rev. 17) there is brought to view a woman sitting upon a scarlet colored beast: and from the description given we identify her as the Roman church, supported by the Roman secular power as symbolized by the scarlet colored beast. Though mighty Rome was shivered to pieces by the shock of northern arms, the head or form of government existing in John's day and later wounded, as it were to death by the Gothic sword, yet Rome was destined to live (for the deadly wound was healed) to play her part of what remained of the prophetic program down to the end to meet her final doom at the brightness of Christ's coming.

Minor Questions--Conclusion

7. DID ROME not make conquests of the kingdom she subdued ?

THIS QUESTION seems to be tautological. Conquest is a noun and means the act of conquering; the act of overcoming or vanquishing opposition; in war by force of arms. As applied to persons, territory and the like, it usually implies or includes a taking possession of. Subdue means to conquer by force, to bring or subdue under permanent subjection or dominion. Rome did this when she broke in pieces the kingdoms into whose territory she marched her conquering legions.

8. DID ROME not utilize the nations she subdued for her own aggrandizement instead of exterminating them ?

Yes; but what if she did ? To break in pieces a nation does not mean the extermination of every individual.

(Thus ends "the last words" of our beloved Brother John L. Wince. In memory of him The Restitution Pub. Co., has published "Futurism Answered" in booklet form, and readers may now order it at 5 cents per copy. Its publication now is very opportune, and we bespeak for it a large circulation.--Editor.

ISAIAH 49:22, 23

"THUS SAID the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard by the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and their daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders, and kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers. They shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord; for they shall not be ashamed that wait far me."

I AM pleased to give herewith a report of the work done in Nebraska by me during the month of October. During the month of September I began work in Mulberry Ridge, thence to Pleasant Ridge which together with Mulberry Ridge are near Moorfield. It is indeed a pleasure and consolation to meet with the brethren and sisters at these two places, and talk of the things that pertain to life beyond the vail where sin and sorrow will never be permitted. After we closed our few days work there I came home on the 6th, going to Cambridge on the 9th where Brother Jim Stedman met me. I began a meeting at Pleasant Hill near where he lives, continuing there until the night of the 15th. We missed having service on Thursday evening, however, on account of rainy weather. The truth was sown in that part of the world, and as to whether it will do any good, God knows. Brother Stedman and fomily are doing all they can to hold up the banner of truth there, and our prayer is that they will be rewarded for their devotion and service of love.

I came home on Saturday night, and preached here the following day. On Thursday I left home for the eastern part of the state. On the way to Kennard I stopped off and took dinner with Brother and Sister Newell on Friday. They live at Arlington. After having an enjoyable visit with them for a few hours I took the afternoon train for Kennard where we had service that night. We had a very nice attendance during this month's work there. At the Sunday morning service our hearts were made glad to see two young people take a stand for our Master. I baptized them in the afternoon One of them was Miss Josephine Mead, daughter of Sister Mead, of Blair. The other was Miss Clarabella Mehrens, the daughter of Brother John Mehrens who lives near Little Sioux, Iowa. They came some 40 miles on Sunday at attend service. Our prayer is that these young people will hold out faithfully, and finally be given a home in God's kingdom. On the following Monday and Tuesday nights we conducted Bible Lessons at the home of Brother and Sister Krogh at Blair. A number of the faith at Kennard attended these services. On Wednesday I left for home, but stopped over for one night with Brother Newell at Arlington, where a number of us enjoyed a study on an important Bible question.

Obituary

Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.--Psa. 116:15.

MARTHA J. KNODLE

AT THE close of a lingering illness Mrs. Martha J. Knodle passed from her sufferings at the family home on North Sixth St., Oregon, Ill., on Wednesday morning April 21st. Martha J. Wagner was born in Oregon township, May 2nd, 1839, and at the age of two years, with her perents' family, located on a farm home in the town of Rockvale, where she was educated in the public schools and continued to reside until 1865, when she was united in marriage with William Knodle and with him went out and establised a home for themselves in the same town, in the Silver Creek neighborhood.

To this union were born six children. A son, Walter preceded her in death. The surviving children are Miss Mina, and Fred and Roy, who have remained in the home with the mother; Merritt, of Oregon, and George, whose home is in Texas, also three grandchildren.

Mrs. Knodle was the youngest of a family of eight children born to a pioneer family of this vicinity- Jacob and Mary Wagner, and the last member of the family. Had she been spared a few days more, until May 2nd, she would have reached the age of 81 years. Her husband passed away 21 years ago.

When a young lady of 18 years she united with the Church of God, her baptism being administered by Dr. Samuel I. Jacobs, one of the pioneers of the faith in northern Illinois. During her long life, Mrs. Knodle has remained faithful to all of her life's duties. Her faith and her home were her objects of worship. Her desire was to have her children close to her and have them espouse the faith that had so long sustained her in every time of need. Her home was a place not only for the entertainment of ministers, but for large numbers of members and friends of the church who came sometimes long distances to be at the meetings.

At the time of the organization of the Church of God in Oregon some twenty years ago, it was she who suggested that the organization be effected and she also furnished the means to make possible the transaction that made the stone church property the property of the organization and in which building for twenty-one years the gospel has been heard and embraced by many. After moving to Oregon her home was always a popular retreat for many of the attendants at the conferences held from year to year, her sincerity in the handshake and smile being satisfactory evidence that the welcome was from the heart.

In time of sickness she was always on hand to give any attention that she was able to give and her qualifications were such on occasions of this kind that her presence was very desirable and always appreciated. Her sunny disposition made for her a character that need only to be known to be loved.

Farewell, dear mother, sweet thy rest,
  Weary with years and worn with pain.
Farewell, till in a heavenly place
  We shall behold thy face again.
'Tis ours to miss thee, all our years,
  And tender memories of thee to keep.
Thine in the Lord to rest, for so,
  He giveth his beloved sleep.

A FRIEND.

Editorial

Copy is so abundant and pressing we are compelled to condense reports, weddings, and funerals. Probably heretofore these have been unnecessarily long anyway.

We thank many readers for words of commendation regarding recent editorials on Sunday Schools One brother writes that the Sunday School in his community has so far eclipsed the church that the church has been given up while the Sunday School is maintained. The Lord's supper is never observed; the brethren are strangers to the Lord's ordinances in the Lord's house; they never meet to praise and worship God "The question here," says the brother, "is not, 'Do you belong to the church? but 'Do you belong to the Sunday School?'" What a shame! Is it true that Bible Lesson XII has been written in vain? Or have they never read it?

—o—

A republican landslide exceeding all precedent in plurality marked president-elect Harding's election over Mr. Cox. Political landslides show that after people have selected men to serve them the elect consider themselves dictators and not servants. Mr. Wilson was elected under the promise of keeping a neutral nation out of war; immediately after election he began to flirt with the crowned heads of Europe, and hastily plunged this country into the greatest war in its history. After pouring out the blood of unnumbered American boys, he has, since the war closed, incessantly plotted by means fair and foul, to force the rest of the people into a league that would make us active participants in all wars that may henceforth arise in the world. So long as republican forms of government continue the people who boast of freedom will continue the foolishness of putting a man in office and then, within a short while, of repudiating him. For several years we have been restrained from publishing a book entitled, "Should Christians Fight?" After Harding occupies the White House in March we shall no doubt have the liberty to go ahead with our proposed work. War is not far off, and we want to take advantage of the present precarious spell of peace to educate our young brethren in non-combatantacy that they may keep themselves separate from the ungodly militarism of the last days.

1260 Prophetic Years

Skeleton Notes of the Editor's Sermon

INTRODUCTION

IN PROPHECY there is a period of persecution called indifferently "a time, times, and the dividing of time" (Dan. 7:25), "forty and two months" (Rev. 11:2), "a time, times, and half a time" (Rev. 12:14), and "a thousand two hundred and three score days" (vs. 6). A year in prophecy is sometimes used in a literal sense (Isa. 7:8; Jer. 25:11, 12; Dan. 4:25); but the famous prophecy of the seventy weeks in Dan. 9 shows that ordinarily in prophecy weeks of years are used instead of weeks of days. Three years and a half obviously mean years of years, so the time variously expressed in prophecy during which the church would be delivered into the persecuting power of the Little Horn equals 1260 years. If any one questions this fact we refer him to Num. 14:34 and Ezek. 4:4-6, where it is distinctly said that days in prophetic language mean years.

THE 1260 YEARS NOT PAGAN PERSECUTION

It is not our purpose in this address, however, to vindicate the year for a day theory. We shall presume upon your intelligence in that matter, and invite you to consider the commencement and termination of this time period. Pagan persecution may have been worse and more continuous than the Christian, but it forms no part of the 1260 years in the prophecies of Daniel and John. Chronologically pagan persecution is an impossibility. The famous edict of Constantine in which he abolished all persecution was in A. D. 313. The primitive believers therefore were only subject to the persecution of pagan Rome for the space of 313 years, while the Little Horn was to persecute them 1260 years.

Clearly, then, it seems to me, the pagan Roman Empire had no connection whatever with the 1260 years of persecution marked off in prophecy. Of course the persecutor lived within the territory of the old Roman Empire. The Little Horn, the Ten Horns, and the last head of the Fourth Beast all arose out of that beast; the Roman Empire therefore comprehends all of these powers. But observe, pagan Rome was undivided; Christian Rome was divided. It is important to notice, as fixing the commencement of the 1260 years, that the Roman Empire had embraced the gospel before its division into Eastern and Western Rome (Dan. 2), and later into ten horns or ten kingdoms (Dan. 7). Daniel says the Eleventh Horn was contemporary with the Ten, and all these were converted to Christianity soon after they were founded. The Eleventh or Little Horn, then, was at least nominally Christian.

THE 1260 YEARS A CHRISTIAN PERSECUTION

The Little Horn is a type for some Christian power. The ten horned beast described by Daniel appears in Rev. 17:3, 6, 9, 18 as standing in "the wilderness." John's description of him omits his Little Horn; instead of it John sees the beast supporting a harlot who, precisely as the Little Horn is said to be the persecutor of the faithful; "drunken," says John, "with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus." Now an adulterous woman is the type of an apostate and idolatrous church (Isa. 57:3-10; Jer. 2:20; 3:1-20) The apocalyptic harlot, then, must represent an apostate church. What church? John answers that the harlot was the "great city" that in his day reigned over the kings of the earth, and whose seat of empire, combining beast and woman, state and church, was founded upon seven hills. Rome, the "eternal city"; Rome, the seven-hilled city; apostate in all its parts; Christian Rome was to persecute the saints 1260 years.

COMMENCEMENT AND EXPIRATION OF THE 1260 YEARS

Having now learned that the 1260 years do not belong to pagan Rome but that they pertain to the Eleventh Horn of the divided empire, we are prepared to understand their commencement and expiration. In prophecies which are not definitely chronological, no dates are given. No date can be fixed to individual criminality. This is why no date is given for the rise of the man of sin in 2 Thess. 2. Dates are not based upon insulated and unauthorized acts of individuals. Apostasy is first of all an individual condition, then national. Paul describes apostasy in its individual character, hence he gives no dates; but Daniel and John give its national and triumphant commencement and duration, and this is why both of them give dates. To illustrate my meaning: you cannot say precisely when monkish celibacy and veneration of angels and saints began. These superstitions started first with individuals and began to manifest themselves in the fourth, fifth, and sixth centuries. It is impossible to date precisely the date of their commencement as to individuals; but after complete manifestation definite dates begin to be possible. Daniel and John give chronological prophecies, so they date, not from individual apostasy and persecution, but when these become public and authorized. Their 1260 years is the period of apostasy in the sense of public dominance of the apostasy

So far all seems clear. Now both Daniel and John say with exactness and reiteration from what era these particular years are to be counted. Daniel says we are to date them from the time when, by a public act of the state, the saints were delivered into the hand of the Little Horn. "They (the saints) shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of times" (Dan. 7:25). In as definite a manner John teaches us to date them from the period indicated in the words, "It (the holy city, the church) is given to the Gentiles, and they shall tread it under foot forty and two month" (Rev. 11:2). They measure the time during which the two witnesses prophesy in sackcloth and ashes (vs. 3); when the woman, the true church, "fled into the wilderness from the face of the serpent" (Rev. 12:6). Now to locate the exact date when the 1260 years began we have only to recall when the Bishop of Rome became supreme head of the church. The proud title of "Universal Bishop" began in A. D. 606. Individual apostasy before culminated officially when Emperor Phocas, representing the sixth head of the beast, declared pope Boniface III to be Universal Bishop.

The apostasy, understand, in its individual capacity, was in existence from the days of Ananias (Acts 5), but as soon as the conception of sin in the bride of Christ had time to mature and come to birth, that is in A. D. 606,[*] then commenced the 1260 years of the apostasy in its matured, public and dominant capacity.

1260 YEARS PLUS 75 YEARS

The 1260 years began in A. D. 606; they expired in 1866. The loss of temporal power by the pope marked the expiration of the prophetic date. Dan. 7:26 says that after the 1260 years expire, "the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end." The 1260 measure the time of Romish dominance, after which its dominion is to be "consumed" a gradual work. "The end" is quite distinct and separate from the 1260 years. But when the end arrives "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the saints of the Most High" "the end of the matter" (vss. 27, 28).

Is there any indication of how long it will be from the expiration of the 1260 years to "the end" the coming of Christ? We think so. Answering the question, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" the response is, "It shall be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished" (vss. 6, 7). By the "end of these wonders" is meant, not the continuance, but the termination of the 1260 years. The "holy people" were to be restored after the 1260 years. How long after? The question is repeated, "O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" The answer is definite: "From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days" (vss. 8, 11). 1290 years adds to the 1260 thirty years. At the expiration of the 1260 years, in 1866, the pope lost his temporal power; at the termination of 1290 years, in 1896, the "holy people" began to revive. But "the end" is not yet. What next? "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days"—forty-five years more. This makes a total of seventy-five years for "the time of the end"; adding this to the 1260 will bring us to 1941. Beloved, God says to us as he said to Daniel, "Go thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days" (vss. 12, 13). Twenty-one years at the longest and Michael will "stand up" for the deliverance of his people! The watchers and waiters will then be "blessed" with Daniel, and stand in their lot by the side and on the throne of the Prince of Peace.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

THINKING IT might be of interest to some of the readers, I am sending a report of the meeting just held in Kennard.

Brother T. A. Drinkard came Friday evening and held meetings over Sunday, with good attendance at every service. Sunday morning he gave a lesson on "The Day of Vengeance" which was very interesting, after which two young ladies expressed a desire for baptism. In the afternoon we met at the home of Brother Wm. Nelson, where they were planted in the likeness of Christ's death.

Sunday evening Brother Drinkard spoke on "Zion." It was a very interesting and instructive discourse. He left Monday morning for Blair, where he expects to spend a few days.

Your sister in Christ,

LAURA BATES.

DEAR BRETHREN AND FRIENDS OF JESUS:

SOME TIME ago a stern rebuke came out in The Restitution which we hope did no harm (Titus 1:9-14; 2 Tim. 4:2-5). "Rebuke not an elder" is God's word (1 Tim. 5:1-20). James leaves word how to deal with one astray (James 5:16-20).

Joseph knew that Jesus, Mary's first born, was not begotten by him (Matt. 1:18-25). Hear the testimony of another in Acts 13:33, 34. "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee" (Psa. 2:6).

See how an able man was taught the way of salvation more perfectly in Acts 18:24-28; 19:1-5. So some of our writers may need correction or conversion as the case may be (Prov. 23:7; Acts 3:19). Our Savior knew that Joseph was not his father (Luke 2:48-52), and we should not be led by the fleshly mind (Col. 2:16-19; Rom. 8:5-8).

Your "contending for the faith" (Jude 3) is good: who among us could equal it? Methinks not one. With heart-felt thanks to God for your past favors, and asking an interest in your prayers that we may hold out faithful to the end (2 Tim. 4:1-8).

Yours in hope of life when Jesus comes,

R. A. HUMPHREYS.

October 12, Elder F. L. Austin began a week's meeting at Dry Run, Shenandoah Co., Va. The attendance and interest were good. However, no one obeyed. At the close of the meeting at Dry Run he began a week's meeting at Maurertown, Va., our home church. The attendance and interest were very good in this meeting. On the last night of the meeting the wife of Brother Hugh McInterff and Miss Ruth Mae Bauserman requested baptism. On Thursday Oct 28, Brother Austin left for his home in Canada. Brother Austin's daughter Mary was with him during his meeting in Va.

On Sunday, Oct. 31, we preached in the Mauerertown Church on the subject of baptism, and at the close of sermon three young ladies requested baptism. In the afternoon we went to the water and another young lady requested baptism. So we had the pleasure of baptizing Mrs. McInterff, Miss Bauserman, Ella and Gladys O' Neal, Sadie and Maggie Anderson, our own daughters. May God bless and keep these young people in the narrow way that leads to eternal life, is our prayer.

While we were rejoicing that God's word had fallen on good ground and some had obeyed at Maurertown, our oldest daughter (Millie) who had been complaining for some time with her side, was taken worse and the doctor said she must be taken to the hospital for an operation. She was taken yesterday and stood the trip well. The operation will be performed this morning. Her mother is with her and we trust the Lord is too. Will say to those interested in the work in N. C. that my last visit was postponed till the second Sunday in March because of special meetings in Va. Should our daughter's complaint be such that we cannot get there for the second Sunday, we will, the Lord willing, go for the fourth Sunday in March.

J. H. ANDERSON.

Fallen Asleep

JACOB REED was born in Stark County, Ohio, Dec. 16th, 1840, died Oct. 20th, in Arkansas City aged 79 years 10 months, and 4 days.

At the age of 14 he moved with his parents to Stark County, Indiana, where he grew to manhood. He served in the Civil War during the year of 1864-1865.

He was united in marriage with Harriett Anderson, March 27, 1861. To this union were born seven children. Mrs. A. J. Chaplin, Mrs. I. U. Vickery, and Andrew Reed of this vicinity; Clarence Reed, of Yeiser, Colo.; Edward Reed of Holly, Colo.; Mandas Reed, of Attica, Kans. One daughter, Olive, preceded him in death.

He with his wife and children, located in Kansas in 1884. Later they proved on a homestead in Oklahoma where they resided until 12 years ago, when they came to Arkansas City, which has since been their home.

He united with the Church of God at Eagle Creek, Ind., in 1881, and has ever been a devoted Christian. His time and his means were the Lord's; all were consecrated to his service.

Beside his wife, children, grandchildren and 6 great grandchildren, he leaves to mourn his loss, one Sister Mrs. James Eaton, of Newkirk, Okla., and one brother, Thomas Reed, of Wisconsin, besides numerous other relations and friends.

Brother J. J. Heckman, of Komalty, Okla., conducted the funeral service, and on Sunday Oct. 25th he was laid to rest in the Mercer Cemetery. Like Paul of old, it can be truly said of father dear, that he fought the good fight and kept the faith, and will receive a crown of righteousness when Jesus comes.

He was loved and respected by all who know him. Words cannot express how we are going to miss him in the home, in the church, and in all the walks of life. But God's sustaining grace will help us, for underneath all our trials and griefs are the everlasting arms. Soon Jesus will come and unlock the prison house, and set the captives free. For that we wait.

Are you a better Christian today than you were yesterday? If not, why not?

[*] It is a curious and interesting fact that the time of gestation from conception to birth is 280 days. Believers are now "espoused to one husband" and will be presented as a "chaste virgin to Christ" at his coming (2 Cor. 11:2), if they do not play the harlot while he is absent. Three thousand were betrothed to Christ on the day of pentecost. The first sin of which we have any record was by Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5), which was in A. D. 33. The second Eve was now impregnated with sin; the germ of "the man of sin" was now in the womb of the virgin bride. "The mystery of iniquity" began to work (2 Thess. 2:7), and in 280 years, the woman, having given birth to Constantine, the "man child" (Rev. 12), he published his edict which ended all persecution of Christians in A. D. 313 exactly 280 years from the sin of Ananias. The woman was then delivered from the sanguinary oppressions of paganism, but had to flee into the wilderness from the "devil and satan" of Christian Rome and remain there for 1260 years.

GOLDEN TEXT: Isaiah 40:29

NOW IS THE ACCEPTED TIME

THE SPIRIT came in childhood,
  And pleaded "Let me in."
But, ah! the door was bolted
  By thoughtlessness and sin.
The child said "I'm too young yet,
  There's time enough; today
I can not open." Sadly
  The Spirit went his way.

Again he came and pleaded
  In youth's bright happy hour:
He called, but heard no answer,
  For, lured by satan's power
The youth lay dreaming idly,
  And saying "Not today;
Not till I've tried earth's treasures."
  Again he turned away.

Again he came in mercy
  In manhood's vigorous prime,
But still he found no welcome:
  The merchant had no time
And so, repulsed and saddened,
  The Spirit turned away.

Once more he called, and waited;
  The man was old and ill:
He scarcely heard the whisper.
  His heart was cold and chill.
"Go; leave me; when I need thee,
  I'll call for thee" he cried:
Then sinking on his pillow,
  Without a hope he died.

HONEY AND WAFFLES

And the Daily Study of the Word of God

"And the taste of it was like wafers made with honey." Read Exod. 13-31.

After their wonderful deliverance at the Red Sea, one would supose that the people of Israel never would murmur again; but hardly were they finished singing their song of deliverance before they began to complain of their privations, and long for the flesh pots of Egypt.

What was God's answer? Honey and waffles. "The manna was round and white and the taste of it was like waffles made with honey."

This story illuminates, like a powerful searchlight the duty of daily Bible reading, for while the manna answered their objections and assured them of God's protecting care, it also was to be a test of their obedience.

First, It must be gathered freshly each day. It would not keep till morning, much less could one gather a week's supply on a single day. Neither will half a dozen chapters read on Sunday suffice for our spiritual needs all the week.

Secondly, each person must gather the manna for himself. No foraging squad could gather for the whole tribe any more than your pastor, elder, or leader can gather for the whole congregation. There is a blessing in the gathering which the individual cannot afford to miss.

Thirdly, the manna was suited to the needs of all. The strong and the weak, the aged and the young, the male and the female alike found it suited to their tastes and needs. And this manna diet was furnished by God during all the forty years of their wandering in the wilderness. No wonder they called it "bread from heaven" and "angel's food"; for so it was.

Fourthly, one peculiarity of their supernatural food was this, that when they came to measure what they had gathered, the most eager and industrious had nothing over, and the feeble had no lack. This certainly was miraculous. But no more so than the way in which God illumines the word and applies it to our daily needs.

For devotional uses the Psalms are always appropriate, because they cover so wide a range of experience. As a morning lesson read Psalm 19, and then in the evening Psalm 8. Others will suggest themselves to you as you proceed. What a blessed thought we take with us when going on a journey we read Psalm 127.

The gospels also are excellent for devotional reading, because in them we come in contact with the works, words, and thoughts of the Master. We see how he lived in the home and by the way side, in the carpenter's shop, and by the open grave. We see him in private life and in his public ministry, always the same, never hurried, never worried, always thinking of others but never of himself. We see him playing with the children, watching the hens in the door-yard and the birds in the trees, the growing grain and the fading flowers, and in everything he saw the power and the love of God.

In studying the Bible read until your heart burns. You may read a book, a chapter or only a single verse, but read, if you can, until you are consciously in touch with God; then feeling that you have actually talked with the Father and the Father with you you are fit to meet the outside world.

Some people feel that they cannot spare time for the morning watch, but I question whether any child of God can afford to do without it. Our "inner man" needs to be fed daily as well as the "outer man," and the Bible is our spiritual food.

When one has read a Bible lesson it is a good thing to ask yourself

1. What is the subject of the lesson?
2. Is there any example in it for me to follow?
3. Any error in it for me to avoid?
4. Any duty for me to perform?
5. Any promise for me to claim?
6. Any prayer for me to offer?

Remember that one verse of Scripture committed to memory and really believed and obeyed, is worth more than the whole book read hastily and without thought.

THE VALUE OF TROUBLE

THE EMOTION of pity is quite generally possessed, but unfortunately it so frequently takes the form of self pity. Always to be genuinely sympathetic is not an easy achievement. We are so prone to think our own troubles are about the worst than can exist.

In the great East Side of New York City we have the home of the poor. Here can be seen every form of sorrow and trouble the mind can conceive. We presume every community has a like settlement. If you are feeling particularly sorry for yourself, get in close touch with someone of this class, those so much worse off than you that you will notice the difference yourself. Keep on mingling with them, and administering to their needs until you can accept your own troubles with courage, and by this means learn to be genuniely sympathetic to others.

We can capitalize on our troubles as profitably as on our joys, and sometimes more so, if we will but learn the lesosns they teach and will apply them.

Patience, fortitude, courage, mental strength, tolerance, all are taught us in the Golden Rule. If we will but follow the teachings of the humble and sympathetic Master, genuine sympathy will be ours, and trouble will be accepted in the proper spirit.

THE BIBLE THE GREATEST TEACHER

THE BIBLE is the most up-to-date book in the world. No statesman or philosopher, apart from the Bible, can tell what is going to happen within the next few years, or the next few months, or the next few days. But the Bible tells us not only what has happened, but what is happening and what is going to happen. When the great War began none of the world's military leaders saw the British capture of Jerusalem; but it is there, in the Bible, and those who knew their Bible were wiser than all their teachers. In the same way the Bible tells us what is the present religious and moral condition of the world. It says "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons." The time to which these times refer has now arrived. Since the war, spiritualism or doctrines of demons has advanced by great strides, and is still advancing. There is therefore more need than ever for the testimony of this church regarding the scriptural doctrine of the state of the dead.

CHRISTIAN LIFE GUIDE

Part Four

Hints on the True Christian Living

1. All promptings of duty are leadings of the Spirit. Follow them always and at any cost (Eph. 4:30; 1 Thess. 5:10).

2. Never go where you cannot take Christ with you (Matt. 28:20; Psa. 139:7).

3. Never go where you would not be glad to have Christ find you if he should come; never do what you would not be glad to have Christ find you doing (Matt. 24:44-51; Luke 21:34, 35; 1 Thess. 5:2-4).

4. Do nothing that you are not confident that you can do to the glory of God (Col. 3:17; 1 Cor. 20:31).

5. When in doubt as to any proposed act, do not do it, if it is clear that loyalty to Christ does not positively demand it (Rom. 14:22, 23; 1 John 3:21).

6. Seek the blessing of God upon all you do (Psa. 127:1; Phil. 1:6, 7).

7. Do not try to discover how little Christ will accept of you, but how much you can do for him (2 Cor. 5:14, 15; 1 Chron. 4:10).

8. The best man is an unsafe example, so follow Jesus only (Jer. 17:5; Gal. 2:11-13; John 8:12).

9. Seek at once and continually an enduement of "power from on high" (Luke 24:40; Acts 2:39; 4:31).

10. Take all your doubts and troubles and burdens to Jesus and leave them with him (Matt. 11: 28; 29; Psa. 55:22; Isa. 50:10).

11. Trust your salvation wholly to God (Eph. 2:8; 2 Cor. 1:9, 10; 1 Pet. 1:5; Jude 14).

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"—Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, NOVEMBER 24th, 1920. NUMBER 44

Desire

"Thou shepherd of Israel and mine,
  Thou hope and desire of my heart;"
I long for to be wholly thine,
  And forever be where thou art.

Earth's joys are fast fleeting away;
  They are empty, and vain, and cold;
They please but an hour or a day,
  Thus soon we grow weary and old.

Oh, we long for that haven of rest,
  Where peace shall ever remain;
There the righteous shall be blest,
  When Jesus our Lord comes again.

Can finite mind ever picture,
  Can finite tongue ever tell,
The joys of that final meeting,
  When with Jesus we ever shall dwell?

A Collection of Friendly Talks on Bible Subjects: By Brother S. H. Thomas

DID JOSEPH BEGET JESUS?

I ANSWER emphatically, he did not. I write thus positively, for the reason that in my opinion satan has never advanced an error so seductive and fatal, and at the same time so easy to refute as is this one. I consider it the solemn duty of the church of God, and also of each one of its members, to make no uncertain sound when dealing with this subject. He who believes this false doctrine rejects one of the first principles concerning the name of Jesus Christ, therefore he rejects the gospel. To such we have no right to extend the right hand of fellowship, nor wish them Godspeed. For he who holds and teaches this doctrine "maketh God a liar, because he believes not the record that God gave of his Son."

There is perhaps no error advanced by satan which has so little ground upon which to stand as this one. Jesus himself never once referred to Joseph as his father, and there is not a single passage in the entire Bible which will bear such a construction. Not one passage which says that Joseph begat Jesus, or that Jesus was begotten by Joseph; but there are hundreds which assert that Jesus is the "Son of God," that he is the "begotten, Son of God," and that he is the "only (thus) begotten Son of God." And yet, most strange to say, there are men reckless enough to reject God's word and accept this doctrine of men, thereby exchanging their precious birthright for a mess of pottage.

The prophet foretold our Lord's divine nature and miraculous conception by plain and unmistakable language, by inference and by type (Isa. 7:14; 9:6). Take for an example of type, the miraculous conception of Isaac, which is admitted by all to have been a true type of Christ. Both Sarah and Abraham were past age, and, so far as generation was concerned, "as good as dead." Nothing short of a miracle could cause her to conceive under such circumstances. Therefore Isaac, the type of Christ, was called "the child of promise."

Now, Mr. Josephite, if Isaac was a type of Christ, will you kindly tell us what in your opinion his extraordinary conception prefigured? If not the miraculous conception of Christ by the power of God, as recorded in the first chapter of Matthew and Luke, then what?

There is also another question, I would like to ask. In Luke 3:23 the genealogy of Christ begins as follows: "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli," etc. If Jesus was the son of Joseph, why does not the spirit so state it? Why record that Jesus was only "supposed" to be the son of Joseph?

Oregon Bible College
Oregon, Illinois

A multitude of such unanswerable questions might be asked, but space forbids. The Scriptures so clearly teach the miraculous conception of Jesus, that in order to maintain even a semblance of authority the Josephite is compelled to cut out whole chapters of Scripture as spurious; many of them even going so far as to discredit the four gospels entirely. The first two chapters of Matthew and Luke alone, leave the Joseph not even the fragment of an argument, therefore he is compelled to destroy them or surrender his position. No combination of words could be selected from the English language to more clearly and positively assert the miraculous conception of Jesus than does the statements found in these Scriptures. Therefore it is only necessary to establish the genuineness of these chapters in order to deprive Mr. Josephite of even the fragment of an argument. The following are a few of many reasons for our belief that the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke are genuine:

The Authorized Version of the Bible, being a translation by the ablest Greek, Latin, and Hebrew scholars of the world at that time contains them.

The Revised Version both English and American editions, being a translation by the world's ablest scholars of modren times, contain them.

The whole world's Biblical scholars, both ancient and modern, and without any exception whatever, recognize and pronounce them genuine; and yet you, Mr. Josephite, in the face of the scholarship of the entire civilized world, both ancient and modern, have the assurance to lift your comparatively feeble voice in opposition!

But to continue the evidence: It is a fact which no scholar of note will deny that the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke are found in all except one of the ancient manuscripts now extant which are entire; they are also found in a genuine epistle of Ignatius, the only apostolic father who had occasion to refer to them. Justin Martyr, Hegesippus and Clement of Alexandria, all of whom lived and wrote in the second century, have referred to them. Also Irenaeus and the fathers who succeeded him; Porphry and Julian, enemies of Christ and the Christian faith, and who wrote and labored to destroy it, mention these chapters. Thus we have an unbroken chain of evidence reaching back to the apostolic days. No room is left for doubt.

Mr. Josephite, you contend that the Bible, as originally written, did not contain these chapters, but that at some time since they have been added to the original text and that this corrupt Bible was palmed off upon he world, instead of the original, genuine text, and that you have just discovered, in these last days, this inconceivable deception and fraud. Now please tell me, do you think it possible today to add several chapters to the Bible, and the fraud not be discovered? No, of course you don't! Do you think that there has ever been a time since the Bible was written when such a fraud was possible? If you will consider a moment I think you will see that such an act would be absolutely impossible, either now, or at any other period in the history of mankind. Therefore, the bare fact that they are there—with no existing record of their having been added to the original text—is proof positive of their genuineness.

God, who cannot lie, hath caused to be written in a book his will and purpose concerning this planet and its people, and therein make careful detail of how earth's children may become his people and share in the glories of the age to come. This book he placed in the hands of the children of men, to guide them in all things while time lasts. Mr. Josephite, do you really ask us to believe that Almighty God is so feeble, that he has been unable to protect his word form corruption, and has permitted satan, or some other agent of evil to engraft into his holy book several chapters of lies and falsehoods? Or has he merely been careless, or heedless in the matter, and so permitted the corruption of his word, thereby giving his people for their guidance in these last days a corrupt Bible, containing a mixture of truth and lies? Can it be possible that he who cannot lie, calmly sits upon his throne above and permits this monstrous deception, bearing the stamp of his divine approval, to deceive his people? Or has be deputized you, Mr. Josephite, to go through his holy word, scissors in hand, to revise, reconstruct, and restore the same to what you conceive to be its original purity?

Again, Mr. Josephite, don't you honestly think it would be more in harmony with faith in, and duty to God, as his trusting and obedient children, to thankfully accept the book which he hands us as his word, believing that it comes to us exactly as he intended it should from the beginning? If we believe this, then who will dare to tamper with it or attempt to discredit, or destroy any portion of it?

Mr. Josephite, did it ever occur to you that your sect is not confined to these last days? I find that you were quite numerous, even as far back as Jesus' time. As evidence I submit the following Scripture: "The high priest asked him and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am. Then the high priest rent his clothes and saith, What need we any more witnesses? Ye have heard the blasphemy. What think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death" (Mark 14:61-64). "Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him and crucify him, for I find no fault in him. The Jews (Josephites) answered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God" (John 19:6, 7). Poor silly fools! They thought he was the son of Joseph!

"And the high priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God. Jesus saith unto them, Thou hast said. . . . Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy. What think ye? . . . They answered, He is guilty of death. Then did they (the Josephites) spit in his face, and smote him with the palms of their hands" (Matt. 26:62-67). They said, "Is not this Jesus the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know?" Your ancient brothers and ye modern Josephites are as near alike as two peas. They were "offended at him," and cruelly tortured and murdered him, because he dared to proclaim the grand old truth of which he was so justly proud. "I am the only begotten Son of God," not the natural son of Joseph, as the Jews ignorantly believe.

Oh my Josephite friend, are you safe and satisfied in such company? Are you willing, when he comes, to be numbered with those who cruelly murdered the Lord? Surely you stand on dangerour ground! And why? What possible advantage is gained by such a position? Granting for argument's sake, that God has done so unaccountable thing as to cause to be written in a book for the salvation of the world his will and purpose, and then permitted false doctrine, by human agency, to get into this book, and so allowed it to reach us in these last days corrupted, and mixed with error and false doctrines, but bearing the stamp and authority of his holy word, and also his command for us to accept, believe and obey it and we do obediently believe what we find plainly stated therein. Will God hold us responsible if what we find and believe be error? Nay, verily, Mr. Josephite; the ground you occupy is surely unsound. We stretch friendly hands across the chasm and invite you to come, but you must leave your hobby behind.

The Bagdad Railroad

AMONG THE many signs of the near approach of the kingdom of God there is none more wonderful than the so-called Bagdad Railroad. To the casual newspaper reader it means nothing more than the building of any other railroad; to the watcher who is "posted" biblically, and who reads between the rails, it means a lot. Bible students are familiar with the many passages in prophecy, particularly in Isaiah, that refer to the highway that "shall be there" then. When "the way of the Lord" is prepared, of the "highways of the people,' the way "made in the desert for our God." Many people treat these texts as spiritual, and no doubt they have an important significance, even when they refer to "the highway out of Egypt to Assyria;" but one must be warped mentally that can see no geographical significance in them.

Indeed, the present civilization depends largely on the intermingling and communion of the various peoples by rail and telegraph. Railways have made the United States a nation although composed of the chips and scraps of the peoples of disintegrated Europe, and the more advanced of the European nations are so by reason of the iron bands and copper wires that tie them. So also in the greater civilization of the coming era, righteousness and peace will be expedited by the "highways.' So important is this matter in the divine word that we read in the Revelation to John that one of the vials poured out on the River Euphrates dried it up 'to prepare a way for the kings of the east.'' Many symbolize this passage altogether and refer it to conditions in the Turkish Empire—so far so good—but then the River Euphrates has dried up, and is now so in actual fact. This great river is not navigable except to small crafts and row boats, and in the dry season not even to them it seems. I have seen a photograph of it at a certain place where a good jumper could have cleared it, I think. By some peculiar geographical alteration the vast quantity of water that still comes down from the high land seeps into great wide marshes and absorbs it while the summer heat evaporates it in its shallow and spread out condition. With such a remarkable condition in connection with such a remarkable and specific prophecy, it is not worth while looking for further "interpretation," although there may be a secondary significance in its application to the empire of Turkey, for it may have gone the way of the Euphrates too.

Now that we have these facts in regard to this well known river, so often spoken of in sacred as well as profane history, what can be the connection with this new "way ?" Simply that the water was being obstructed, another and more perfect way had to be prepared for connecting up the nations, for as Bible readers know, in the good time coming the nations of mankind will freely meet and mingle at Mount Zion when they go up to the house of the Lord to be taught of his way, from whence also the law will go forth; so the next question will be the linking of this "highway of the nations" with Mount Zion. We will come to that later on.

In connection with the subject I have before me a book entitled, "The War and the Bagdad Railway" by Professor Morris Jastrow, of the Penn. University, in which he treats of the strange manner in which this "highway of the nations," as he calls it, has come to be constructed, and the intense political excitement that it caused in the "chancelleries of Europe. "All the great nations looking on with jealous eyes, England, France, Russia, Germany and the others made a powder magazine where a spark flew and we all know the result of the explosion.' The professor claims and I think he proves his point, that the main underlying cause of the great "world war" was this railway. He says in this connection, "The railway has been a nightmare resting heavily on all Europe for eighteen years— ever since the announcement in 1899 of the concession granted to the Anatolian Railway Co., no step ever taken by any European power anywhere has caused so much trouble, given rise to so many complications, and has been such a constant menace to the peace of the world. No European statesman, to whom the destinies of his country has been committed, has rested easily in the presence of this spectre of the twentieth century . In the last analysis the Bagdad Railway will be found to be the largest contributing factor in bringing in the war, because through it more than any other cause the mutual distrust among European powers has been nurcured until the entire atmosphere of the international diplomacy became vitiated. The explanation for this remarkable phenomenon, transforming what appears on the surface to be a magnificent commercial enterprise into a veritable curse . . . . is to be sought in the history of the highway through which the railway passes. The control of the highway is a key to the East, the near East and the further East as well."

The most interesting part of the professor's book to me, however, is the map that accompanies it showing the ramifications and connections of this road, completed as well as proposed up to its publication.

In conclusion, we may consider now those points in connection with this wonderful era: when completed it will be 1875 miles long, extending from Constantinople to the Persian Gulf. All Asia Minor will be connected by branches. Southward through Syria from Aleppo it runs by connections on the east of the Dead Sea to Arabia, west of the Dead Sea. It runs to Jerusalem and through Palestine to Egypt, connecting all Africa. It touches seven Mediterranean ports, three of which are in Palestine—Joppa, Haifa, and Acre. During the war it was completed to Bagdad, and now is being carried down the western shore of the Euphrates. At the present writing it is complete past Babylon (Hillah) where, during the war, it is said that a "wireless" was erected on one of the high mounds there reputed as the remains of the tower of Babel. At present, the British, who are completing the road to the Gulf, are having difficulty with the wild Arabs of the desert and are constructing it, as the Jews of old did Jerusalem, with the sword in one hand and the spade in the other.

Hoping these lines may interest the watchers as well as cheer them,

The Parables of Christ

Number Eight

THE TALENTS AND THE FOUNDS

WITH THESE two parables we take up a second grouping of the parables. They relate to the kingdom, but have a slightly different application to the seven found recorded in Matt. 13th chapter. They are as follows: The Talents and the Pounds; The Two Sons; The Vineyard let out to Husbandmen; The Marriage Feast; The Wise and Foolish Virgins; The Sheep and Goats.

In the study of these parables care should be exercised as to whom Jesus was talking, and about what he was speaking. Some parables may be understood by what precedes; others by what follows. We should avoid being influenced by present day theology. The nominal churches interpret their meaning in harmony with their doctrine formulated in their schools of theology. The two parables at the head of this article should be considered together, as both relate to the same subject, although recorded by different writers and occurring at different times. Luke records the parable of the pounds in the 19th chapter when Jesus and his apostles were on their way to Jerusalem. The parable of the talents is recorded by Matthew 25th chapter after they had arrived in Jerusalem.' Both writers record the same event of a person going into a far country to secure kingly authority. He gave his goods to his servants and directed them to occupy till he returned. Luke uses the word Nobleman; Matthew, "a man." Luke assigns the reason for the utterance of the parable, "because the apostles believed that the kingdom of God should immediately appear" Matthew records this parable in connection with the two parables of the ten virgins and the sheep and the goats which we think affords the key to their application. These being kingdom parables they must be interpreted in harmony with the prophetic utterances regarding the work of that age. The purpose for which these parables were given was to teach that the kingdom would not immediately appear, but that Christ must go into a far country for an indefinite period. After his return he would reckon with those to whom he had entrusted his good. The judgment that follows his return reveals the reason why he left his goods. They evidently were instructed to add to what was to them a gift. See the judgment applied to the servant to whom he left the one pound or talent. This parable, as were all, was spoken to Israel. and must be so applied. It has no reference to the judgment of the saints because this judgment is for those living when Jesus returns. Those subject to this judgment are still in their mortal state. No saint, possessing the character of the one having the one pound, can appear before the judgment seat of Christ. It is a well astablished truth that the resurrection gives the beneficiary immortality, which can not be destroyed; whereas the one who possesed the one talent was bound and cast into outer darkness, where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth. To each of the others was given commensurate with the use made of the pounds or talents. One was made to rule over ten cities, another five cities.

The question may now be answered, to whom do you apply this parable, and under what conditions ? When Jesus returns from the Father's right hand he will immortalize the saints and distribute their rewards according as their works have been. They will then relieve the Jews from the toils of "Jacob's trouble," at which time a remnant will be saved and acknowledge Jesus as their Messiah. Then will begin the judgments alluded to in the parables. Through the prophetic utterances some will have accumulated the knowledge which will entitle them to greater trust than others. A certain class will be entitled to rule over ten cities when the kingdom is set up. Some may object to having more rulers in the kingdom than the apostles. You should remember that each of the apostles will reign over one tribe. The territory assigned to the tribes will extend from the Mediterranean Sea eastward to the Persian Gulf and the Euphrates River; a much greater extent of territory than was allotted to the tribes under the law. States will need governors; cities will need mayors; and each class will need helpers. In that day there will be a just system of civil service reform. It will not be simply how much they know about arithmetic. grammar, civil government and the international laws; but their ability to act as an executive officer and administer justice to all. This government will be true and a just democracy under kingly authority. Under these conditions Israel will become a peculiar treasure, above all nations, a kingdom of priests, a holy nation. The subjects in the kingdom will be subject to the laws enacted in Zion and Jerusalem.

A new traslation of Isa. 65:20 gives us light on this subject: "No more shall there be an infant short lived. not an old man who hath not fulfilled his days: for he that dieth at an hundred years shall be deemed accuresd." Thus we see that probation is extended to individual Israel in the work of establishing the kingdom. Sinners will die at the age of one hundred years, and will receive a retributive judgment. Under these environments the kingdom will naturally become a holy nation. Each century will find righteousness increased by the destruction of sinners. Thus will Jehovah's name be magnified and glorified in Judah and Israel. The leaven of righteousness will therefore leaven the whole lump.

In the discussion of this subject little has been said of the work which Jesus has assigned to the saints. If we read aright the testimony concerning their assignment will be the disciplining of the nations. Those who have been deemed worthy will be given a trust equivalent to their knowledge of statesmanship. The rulers will be graded. Each political power will have assigned an executor who will judge righteously. The incorrigible exner will not have the hundred year probation extended to him, as the saints will be able to determine their moral and mental calibre, and their judgment will be rendered, which is extinction. Thus the nations will be gradually leavened with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth (1 Cor. 5:8).

The Young People's Society met at the home of Kathryn Kieffer the evening of Nov. 12th. During a short business meeting the Constitution was amended. The leader for the evening was Florence Linsenmeir who talked on the friendship of David and Jonathan. As the characters of these two men were discussed, the society was not only impressed by the beauty of their friendship, but also gained much interesting information concerning the kingdom of David.—Alice Chappelle.

A brother writes in a mood of disappointment because he tried to arrange a debate on Larger Hope between a competent brother and "our friend," a champion of that theory. "I tried very hard," the brother writes, "to have him debate with Brother Heckman on the Larger Hope theory, but failed. Brother Heckman was willing, very much so, but our friend was not, for various reasons. I finally challenged him myself, but got no satisfaction." Of course not. Larger Hope theorists are not looking for competent opponents.

Parabolic Chronology

BROTHER ROBISON is giving us a very interesting series of articles on the parables of Christ. He deals with them in an expository form and sometimes in an original way. Parables may illustrate a truth already proved, but they cannot be legitimately used to prove it. Chronologically they are often misapplied. As Brother Robison expounds them topically and also applies them chronologically, he naturally provokes thought, criticism, and commendation; but for his encouragement we wish to say that the majority of correspondents that have remarked upon his parabolic elucidations have only written words of appreciation.

Parabolic chronology is not a dogmatic science, and Brother Robison has not enlarged upon it indulging the idea that all of our readers would agree with him in the details of his interpretation. In the rebound from "mortal emergence" we think he has perhaps been forced into untenable positions in applying some parts of the parables. No doctrine, not even "mortal emergence," can be proved by parables; so the battlefield for this dogma lies elsewhere. As illustrating what we consider a mistake, with Brother Robison's permission, we quote the following extract from his article this week:

> Sinners will die at the age of one hundred years, and will receive retributive judgment. Under these environments the kingdom will naturally become a holy nation. Each century will find righteousness increased by the destruction of sinners. . . . The leaven of righteousness will therefore leaven the whole lump.

"A new translation" of Isa.65:20 is said to sustain this theory, but there is no better translation of the Old Testament than Leeser's and he translates the passage: "There shall no more come thence an infant of days, nor an old man that shall not have the full length of his days; for as a lad shall one die a hundred years old; and as a sinner shall be accursed he who (dieth) at a hundred years old." The lad dying stands opposed to the sinner accursed. The lad in contrast to the sinner must represent the righteous, yet the lad dies! "Retributive judgment" upon sinners when they have reached their hundredth birthday is not in the text, and were it there it would play havoc with many other parts of holy Scripture. For instance, if all sinners were executed when they reached the age of one hundred years, "the kingdom would naturally become a holy nation." But does it? "Each century would find righteousness increased by the destruction of sinners." Till finally there would be none? "The leaven of righteousness would therefore leaven the whole lump." And then you would have nothing left but righteousness! Just the reverse of all this is the truth. One-sixth of Gog and Magog left at the coming of Christ (Ezek. 39:2) so "leavens" the kingdom with wickedness, flourishes with such rapidity that at the end of the millennium they are in number like the sand of the sea (Rev. 20:8). The devil, only bound temporarily, is loosed and leagued with this mighty host of rebels at the end of the thousand years. "Executive judgment" during the millennium would kill off the sinners and preserve the saints; and in that case "each century would find righteousness increased" until at the end there would be no sinners at all. A theory that leads to just the opposite conclusion to that stated in the Bible is probably wrong. If the reader is interested in the discussion of this subject he will find it elaborated in Bible Lesson VI, pages 79-83.

Communications

They spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it--Mal. 3:16.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

THE TIME is at hand for me to renew my subscription for the dear Restitution that has been my weekly visitor for over forty years. Many good lessons have I learned from it. How it cheers me to read the letters from the brothers and sisters of the one faith, especially from Brother Adams who has made us so many visits to help us on the way to the kingdom. I send greetings to the household of faith, and expect to spend the winter in California. I will start soon, so please change the address of my paper.

Yours in hope,

Mrs. M. CALKINS.

DEAR BRETHREN:

I AM sending money to renew my subscription to The Restitution for another year. Two dollars for the paper and one dollar for the Helping Fund. We prize The Restitution; it is a feast of good things all the year. Hoping this finds you all well, as we are, and with love to all the brothers and sisters, your loving sister in the faith,

ESTHER BURTON.

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

In regard to Brother and Sister Kistler, of Logansport, Ind., Rt. No. 3: I was over there today. They are in very poor circumstances. I think they are worthy and should have help. If you could see the place they live in you would be convinced. I will do all I can to help them. Perhaps some of the brethren and sisters will help them. I am poor myself.

Yours in hope of the soon coming of the Lord,

Baptisms

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 14th Mrs. James L. Banning and Anna and Martha Hammond after a confession of their faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, were buried in the likeness of Christ's death by the writer. Sister Banning has wrested with the truth for some time, and now voluntarily comes out from mystery Babylon and is to be commended for her open and frank confession of Christ. Brother Banning accepted the truth some three years ago and the patient but firm manner in which he holds forth the words of life to his household is worthy of emulation. Anna and Martha, our daughters, have had instruction in the manner of Brother Donaldson's recent suggestions on "Sunday Schools" with the exception that we did not always wait for Sunday to have our school. Three more stones have been taken from the quarry to be chiselled and fitted for the Father's house. May they always willingly yield themselves to the hand of the Master Workman.

J. E. HAMMOND.

Christadelphian, Wrong Name

I HAVE felt quite satisfied for some time that the name Christadelphian is not scriptural. In the "instructor," in trying to establish the scripturalness of the name, the writer propounds the question: "Who is it that has given the name 'Christadelphian' to the followers of Christ ?" (or words to that effect). He then gives the answer, "It is Christ himself who has done so." Then the passage is quoted in which it is said, "He is not ashamed to call them brethren" (Heb. 2:11). This is poor reasoning; for the question of a name was not being considered, and it is obvious that our names always come from our Father, not from our brethren, whether in the natural or spiritual world. I have six brethren in the flesh whom I am not ashamed to call "brethren," but both they and I received our name from our father. And so with Christ and his brethren: both he and they receive their name from the Father. Again, while it is pleasing to know that Christ is not ashamed to call us brethren, it is hardly in keeping with a godly humility for us to tag ourselves as "his brethren," especially as his exclusive brethren, as Christadelphians believe themselves to be.

Obsessed with Militarism

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(Special Cor.)—According to the United States Bureau of Standards, 93 cents out of every dollar of Uncle Sam's money this year goes for war, past, present, or to come.

Only one cent out of every dollar goes for education and the improvement of the public health.

Copies of this remarkable analysis of our national budget may be secured on application of D. E. B. Rosa, United States Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C.

Whereas the cities spend an average of $6 per capita for education per year, and the States and private agencies about $3 per year per capita for education, Uncle Sam, with his huge billions, only spends 6 cents per capita for education, and some of that goes to the "land grant" colleges for military drill.

Without anybody in the country realizing it, your Uncle seems to have become obsessed with militarism to the exclusion of the normal, balance interests of government. Of course the truth is merely that the army and navy have developed a "technique" for extracting from Congress huge appropriations whereas the other departments have not.

According to the analysis quoted above, the national government is levying a tax of $50 this year upon every man, woman and child in the United States, and of this amount $46.50 goes for war and militarism.

Now on top of it, that ex-actor Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, genially proposes a system of universal military training which will cost the country, according to Congressman Mondell, the Republican floor leader and watch dog of the treasury, in the neighborhood of one billion dollars ($1,000,000,000) a year.—Selected by Brother Jesse Titman.

Corrupt Christianity

THE TIME will come when they will not endure sound doctrine (2 Tim. 4:3). In the latter days some shall depart from the faith (1 Tim. 4:1-3). In the last days perilous times shall come (2 Tim. 3:1). Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse (2 Tim. 3:13). Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth . . . . men of corrupt minds (2 Tim. 3:7, 8). Which some professing have erred concerning the faith (1 Tim. 6:21). Of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things (Acts 20:28, 30). Shall be false teachers among you . . . . which have forsaken the right way (2 Pet. 2:1, 15). Another Jesus (2 Cor. 11:4). Another gospel (Gal. 1:6). If any man preach any other gospel let him be accursed (Gal. 1:8, 9). Which corrupt the words of God (2 Cor. 2:17). Men of corrupt minds and destitute of the truth (1 Tim. 6:5). They shall turn away from the truth and shall be turned unto fables (2 Tim. 4:4). Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy . . . . after the traditions of men (Col. 2:8).

Separation: Its Need

SHOULD WE do as worldly people or come out from among them and be separate ? "What agreement hath the temple of God with idols ? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you; and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. 6:16-18). "Depart ye, depart ye; go ye out from thence, touch no unclean thing, go ye out of the midst of her; be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord" (Isa. 52:11). "And I heard another voice from heaven saying, Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues" (Rev. 18:4). "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts" (1 Pet. 2:11). "For we are strangers before thee and sojourners as were all our fathers; our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding" (1 Chron. 29:15).

We are told to separate ourselves from the world in this life; and the Lord will separate us from the world when he comes. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all his holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. And before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left" (Matt. 25:31-33). "So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from the just" (Matt. 13:49).

If we do not separate ourselves from the wicked in our daily life he will not separate us when he comes to gather his elect. Should we be ashamed to be a separate people ? "Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's and of the holy angels" (Luke 9:26). "Whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 10:33). "He that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God" (Luke 12:9).

We must not be ashamed to let our light shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16). "Ye are the light of the world" (Matt. 5:14).

If we are light of the world, how should we walk ? "Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children, and have no fellowship with unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. Be not ye therefore partakers with them. For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light" (Eph. 5:1, 11, 7, 8). We should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for the blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works (Titus 2:12-14).

THE BEREANS will be interested to know Brother Clyde Randall, of Mora, Minnnesota, was united in marriarge on October 7th to Sister Ruby Broberg, of Mora, Minn. We extend our best wishes to this happy couple, and may their lot be a happy one.

October 17th Catherine Maylow came to live with Mr. and Mrs. Leland Roose, Charter Oak, Iowa. October was set aside as self-denial month for the Bereans of Illinois, and any Berean out of the state who felt like helping. Some of the locals have failed to send in their self-denial money. Please send your money to Anna E. Drew, 629 North Galena Ave., Dixon, Illinois. We plan to help some of our people who are needy, and in past years much cheer has been our lot.

GRATITUDE

A recent news item stated, "A dear old woman on leaving one of the city hospitals turned around, and as she looked back said, "I could kiss every brick in that building, it has been so good to me." Of course the building had not done anything; it was the doctors and the nurses she referred to; and if the "dear old woman" felt such deep gratitude for being relieved of bodily pain, what should our attitude be to our God and his Christ for all they have done for us ? God in his love furnished a Redeemer. Christ willingly gave us his life. To repay a debt ? No; while we were enemies this was done. Such depths of love ! Surely the least we can do is to show our gratitude by telling others of this love that they too may glorify, honor, and praise our Lord.

GOLDEN TEXT: Psalm 32:8

ONE OF OUR BLESSINGS

I REFER to solitude,
A day off every now and then
Apart from all the human brood,
In the heart of some deep glen,
Where only winds and shade intrude,
Beyond the thought of worldly gain
Or streets where pallid faces haunt,
Beyond the reach of greed and pain,
Of trickery and fear and want —
Where one can sit and dream a bit
Unravelling some mental twist,
Where no white flame of fame is lit
That lures to disappointment's tryst,
Close to the mother of the clan,
The earth, that madmen still defile
With blood and tears through life's brief span,
Where each one has so short a while
To dream of something better than
The endless strife of man and man.

"THE END OF THE LORD"

ARE YOU critical in your reading? Have you ever noticed James 5:11, where the above passage occurs? In full the verse reads: "Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard ofthe patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy."

In this passage "Lord" refers to God, Jehovah, the Creator, who has no end; for concerning him we read, "From everlasting to everlasting thou art God" (Psa. 90:1-4). If God has no end, it does not mean what is written, and if it does not mean this, what does it mean?

With seven different translations of the Scriptures before me I find that five, King James, Revised, Douay, Literal Reading, and Emphatic Diaglott translate as above; then is it really a fact that the people who lived nineteen hundred years ago saw the end of the Lord? Has the universe had no God in all these years? I, for one say that God is still existent, and we see the fruit of his love and the glory of his power every moment of the day.

One of the other translations, Farrer Fenton's, puts the word "object" in place of "end," making the passage read: "Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the object of the Lord." "Object" in this case has the meaning of aim, design, intent, intention, purpose. When we read the passage with either of these words in place of "end," we get a much clearer idea of its meaning. For instance, "And have seen the intention of the Lord." That makes it very plain, does it not?

But we still have have the other translation (Syriac) which puts it still clearer. "Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the result which the Lord wrought for him." Now we have it, and O so clear! Still all the translations agree perfectly; for the result is the end; and the "object" we have in doing a thing is to gain a certain end or "result."

Then again, the word "end" has many meanings, one of which is "conclusion," which again has different meanings, only one of which has any interest to us at this time. I refer to that one which we will define as "having made up your mind;" as "I have come to the conclusion to buy an automobile in place of a horse and wagon." If in reading James 5:11 we give it this thought, we have, "Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the conclusion of the Lord—or, the conclusion at which the Lord has arrived—that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." In so reading it you have the meaning the apostle wishes you to have.

At no time, nor under any circumstances would it be possible for our God to have an ending; for "he liveth and abideth forever." So does his pity, patience, and tender mercy; and it is this thought —the exact opposite of end—that the text would have us know, understand and believe.

"LET YOUR LIGHT SO SHINE BEFORE MEN"

"THE ABOVE is a quotation from the words of the Master. It is a part of what is known as the sermon on the mount. It is well worth reading. It may be found in the fifth chapter of Matthew. For my sake—if not for your own—kindly turn to this great discourse and read every word, meditating on it, and when finished say to yourself, "As far as in me lies, I will follow my Lord's advice. I will do his will, I will strive to let my light shine, for many people judge my Lord by my acts and sayings."

Light is the symbol of knowledge and good deeds. In using the above words the Lord told his apostles to do unto others what he had done to them, to tell others what he had told them, to give unto others what he had given unto them, for by so doing the Father would be glorified. If we have one dollar and give half of it away, we have but fifty cents left, and so with all material things. But not so with the spiritual gifts the Lord has blessed us with. If we have love, the more we give to others the more remains with us. The more of God's truth we impart to others the more we retain. It is like a certain spring on one of the Eastern roads that bears this sign:

> I have given myself away day and night through all the years to all who came, and I never have been a loser thereby.

An old English writer once wrote: "Is thy light less for lighting mine?" No; there are some things we gain by giving away. Some things we increase by parting with them. So let us "share the light we have with others," for it is a most horrible thing for man or boy, woman or girl, to be a dark lantern.

DEEDS AND WORDS

WHY COMPLAIN of ingratitude? Do you want to be paid twice for a kindness rendered, a service performed? Were you not amply paid for your generosity, your thought, your action by the pleasure you experienced in doing good?

The receiver of any kindness should acknowledge the gift, but gratitude is a false sentiment when it is expressed by too many "thank you's," when it is indiscriminately proclaimed abroad.

If the heart of the giver is in the right place he wants the grateful to show their appreciation by passing on a kindness to another, by making good use of the gratuitous thing they have received.

Deeds, not words, best express gratitude.

A BIG LESSON

TRANQUILITY IS to our heart what the warm spring sunshine is to the earth.

The peaceful calm, the hopeful, brave submission to things we cannot control, keeps our hearts from shrivelling up and our minds from getting clouded.

Unresentful resignation helps us to act well the part in life assigned us. When we learn to accept chastenings and leave the measure of our rewards to the eternal God—whose judgment is so far superior to the best of human's that the two cannot be compared—we have learned a big lesson in the book of life.

CHRISTIANITY

THE SHORTEST, safest way to convince the world you are a Christian, is to be a Christian.

Do you realize what this means? To be Christian is to follow Christ in all his ways. Christ came into the world to do his Father's will; and he did it.

Are you ready, are you willing to give up your own idea of things and strictly live according to the Father's will? Your answer to this question settles whether or not you are a Christian.

JOHN WESLEY'S RULE

DO ALL the good you can,
  By all the means you can,
In all the ways you can,
  In all the places you can,
At all the times you can,
  To all the people you can,
As long as ever you can.

And let us add that while we are doing all this let us keep smiling.

* * *

Every man is my friend until he proves he is not, and even then he hurts himself more than he can harm me when he tries to convince others that he is absolutely right and I am altogether wrong.

* * *

Not by the way one acts in the times of prosperity can real strength be measured. The conduct when adversity spreads her dark mantle over the path is what tells the story (Prov. 24:10).

* * *

The best and in fact the only way to overcome sin in the life, whether secret or open, is to deny self, shoulder the cross, and follow Jesus.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

The Restitution

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"—Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, ~~NOVEMBER~~ 24th, 1920. NUMBER 44

"Don't Stop My Restitution!"

Don't stop my Restitution brother;
  Don't strike my name off yet;
You know the times are stringent,
  And dollars hard to get;
But tug a little harder
  Is what I mean to do,
And scrape the dimes together,
  Enough for me and you.

I can't afford to drop it,
  I find it does not pay
To do without my paper,
  However others may.
I hate to ask my neighbor
  To give me his or loan,
He don't just say, but means it,
  "Why don't you have your own?"

You can't tell how we miss it,
  If it by any fate
Should happen not to reach us,
  Or come a little late:
Then all is in a hubbub,
  And things go all awry;
Ah, brother, if you're married
  You know the reason why.

I cannot do without it,
  It is no use to try;
For other brethren take it,
  And so of course must I.
I, too, must keep well posted,
  And know what's going on,
Or feel among the others,
  Like any simpleton.

Then kindly keep it coming,
  If pay be somewhat slow,
For cash is not so plenty,
  And wants not few, you know,
But I must have my paper,
  Cost what it may to me;
I'd rather dock my sugar,
  Or do without my tea.

So, don't you stop it, brother,
  Unless you want my frown,
For here's the year's subscription,
  Be sure you put it down,
And send my paper promptly
  And regularly on
Its weekly tour of blessing
  To your sincerely,

-Selected and revised. JOHN

The Subjects of the Kingdom

Are They Inferior to the Bride of Christ? The Question Answered Biblically

BRETHREN HAVE written me recently concerning certain phrases of the gospel, the greater number of whom we judge to be after the truth, whatever the cost may be to them. Such inquiry is always gladly received. God knows those who are his, their every need, and amply provides for it. If we can be used even in a small way by our heavenly Father in the building of his eternal temple, which shall be filled with his glory, how willingly we should work! It has been our experience, however that long, drawn-out discussions through personal correspondence or heated verbal encounters are of little value. We do not believe it is God's way to force the truth on anyone. Our advice to brethren who realize that error in many places is being advocated, is to apply themselves to a constant daily searching of the Scriptures themselves, and not depend too much upon another to search these things out for them. Everyone, from the least unto the greatest who will thus apply themselves as is well pleasing in the all-seeing eyes of God, will not lack the assistance needed. There is no slackness in God's work, but it is characterized by thoroughness and completeness. For every Eunuch there is a Philip, and for every Cornelius there is provided a Peter.

DISCUSSION OF DOCTRINAL SUBJECTS PROFITABLE

We do believe in the discussion of Bible themes, but nothing of a personal nature should enter into them. No thought of any person should be in our mind, no effort to condemn or pull down, nor exalt in a personal way. But if in hewing to the line of truth, chips, falling here and there, cause a sensation, let us remember that ruffling winds many times precede a down-pour of refreshing rain to nourish and bless the famished earth. Neither let us forget that a workman is known by his chips. Coming into general favor with the brotherhood by advocating doctrine that may be pleasant to the eye and apparently good for food, as a rule, proves a snare, the works of satan. We could name a number of writers to The Restitution whose discussions we have followed with great profit. While we have met very few of these writers yet we know them as friends, for the light they have given. We find that plain speaking characterizes those who spake the oracles of God. John the baptist rather gruffly spoke to the multitude coming to him for baptism, in straight forward language without a vestige of deception: "Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance," etc. (Luke 3:7, 8). Those who believe a perverted gospel, or a gospel altogether foreign to the gospel Christ preached, seek to discourage discussion of doctrine for the reason that the truth is always accompanied with fire. Nevertheless God sanctifies by the truth. An occasional word of encougarement extended to those who flinch not from speaking the truth is not altogether out of order, instead of camping on their trail looking for something to advertise in a personal way derogatory, and placing them in disfavor with the body of believers.

A brother writes me in a commendable spirit, saying that many things are not clear to him and asks, among other things, this very searching question: "Will the subjects in the kingdom of God be inferior to the bride of Christ?" This question suggests an array of food for thought, and we are replying through The Restitution in the hope that others more able to answer it may have something to offer. We think we guess the brother's difficulty and to be definite and able to go straight to the root of his trouble we will state the question in this form:

IS THE WORLD JUSTIFIED IN REJECTING THE GOSPEL?

This may seem rather a startling question, but if the past and present world constitute material from which subjects are to be selected in the next, rejection of the gospel by them, is justified. If this be true, the world never has had, and does not now have, any effective operative remedy to stay or right the wicked condition into which it has drifted. Yet God has ordained the gospel, a power which can regenerate and cause men and women to think and act more godly, but who decrees that the mass of these wordly creatures cannot now know anything about it for the reason begotten of wisdom that they are not good enough to be a part of Christ's bride. Looking at it from this viewpoint, we ask with all candour and reverence, who then is responsible for the wicked condition of the world in these last days, God or man? The notion that a man or woman is accounted worthy to be a subject in the kingdom of God and at the same time unworthy to reign with Christ, is conspicuously absent in the teaching of Bible writers. Listen while Peter speaks, Acts 10:34, 35: "Then Peter opened his mouth and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable with him." Notice the qualifications. God takes care of the fitting for service. Let us preach that whosoever will may come, and make it plain that dispensational salvation or the apparent lack of natural, judicial or kingly ability excuses or disqualifies anyone from immediate compliance with the terms of salvation. God knows the unbelieving as well as those who will believe the gospel. Preachers of the truth everywhere find generous samples of the first class. It is discouraging enough to preach the gospel two or three weeks in a place where only one or two will believe it; but how would we feel to be sent to the hundreds of thousands of places destitute of a single soul that will believe? Many times brethren and sisters go through hardships and privations to get the truth to one person called of God, but that one is precious in God's sight for reasons known to him, and everyone of these is gathered into the fold. The Lord is a shepherd that searches to the uttermost. To him one of his lost lambs is as precious as ninety and nine safe within the fold. According to the wisdom of Solomon it is evil that stands in the way of right judgment, for says he, "Evil men understand not judgment, but they that seek the Lord understand all things" (Prov. 28:5). The Lord declares, Exod. 33:19: "I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy upon whom I will show mercy." Let us once get fixed in our minds the truth that Paul declared to the Grecians, that God is not far from anyone, if haply they only will reach out after him (Acts 17:27). Bear in mind that Paul was not here speaking to the church but to the heathen (the world), those who are without God because they feel not after him, with the result that they are without hope. If it is not in a man or woman to feel after God in this life, what reason have we to preach that they would if they did have a second chance.

Our answer to the question, then, is that the nature of the service rendered to God, whether it be menial or of a higher order, does not determine his estimate of the individual, but rather the spirit of obedience, whether it be willingly and cheerfully performed or otherwise. We believe that when the thousand years reign of Christ is finished, completing the work of restituion, that every one of God's children will be on an equal footing. The big thing to work for is salvation, eternal life, immortality. David's hope: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness" (Psa. 17:15). Contrary to the view that the nations of them that are saved during the times of restitution, constituting the subjects of the kingdom, are to be inferior to the bride of Christ, one would naturally conclude that a people living under the beneficent reign of Christ would develop characteristics at least equal to those who have lived in other ages.

The Restoration of Israel

Zionism a Fulfilment of Prophecy

I HAVE a friend who is a Seventh Day Adventist: and in talking with him on various Bible topics, there came up for discussion, the return of the Jews to Palestine. When we had parted there immediately came to my mind this question, Do not many who look for the second coming of Christ walk in darkness? Then as quickly came the answer, Yes, they surely do in midnight darkness.

As a sample of those who have gone forth to meet the Bridegroom, who are destitute of gospel light are the Seventh Day Adventists and the Second Adventists. What is the light they need? They need the light concerning the essential features which constitute the gospel of the kingdom, as preached by Jesus and his disciples, as the message of life. What is it that alienates from the life of God? Eph. 4:18 reads: "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them." What is one of the teachings that will alienate from the life of God? Let me direct special attention to a passage of Scripture which enumerates doctrines, which if not believed, will alienate such a disbeliever from Christ, and as far as the future is concerned, such an one is in the sad and lamentable condition of being without hope (Eph. 2:11, 12). "Wherefore remember that ye being in times past Gentiles in the flesh, that at that time ye were without Christ, (on account of) being alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world.

There are many who believe in the second coming of Jesus who are ignorant concerning the restoration of the commondealth of Israel. Those known as Second Adventists and Seventh Day Adventists teach that Israel will never again exist as an independent commonwealth. They say that Israel as a nation will never return to the land covenanted to their fathers, but must ever remain as a scattered and hopeless ruin. Now how about the covenants of promise? As far as they relate to the land covenanted to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and their seed, the Christ, is concerned, their teaching would render such covenants null and void, by affirming its destruction by fire prior to its being possesed by those to whom it was covenanted. Tell me, what personal interest can any people have in a commonwealth, they would consign to a hopeless ruin? It is certain they can have none. They are in need of gospel light. See 2 Cor. 4:4: "The light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." Without it they will be unable to see clear enough to find the "narrow way" which leads to the kingdom of God. Nothing but gospel light will guide anyone through midnight darkness unto the coming Bridegroom.

Now are the Scriptures clear in their statements about the future restoration of the commonwealth of Israel? Yes, indeed; they are very clear, very explicit. Listen: "Thus saith the Lord God: Behold I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen (nations) whither they be gone, and I will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations; neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all" (Ezek. 37:21, 22). Now we know there once was a commonwealth of Israel. But did not God suspend this commonwealth? Yes, he did, but not forever. "It shall be no more, until he comes whose right it is; and I will give it him" (Ezek. 21:27). Is it possible for the gospel of the kingdom to be preached independent of the commonwealth of Israel? No, it is not, see Matt. 27:37: "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." Jesus could never reign as "king of the Jews," should the Jews forever remain a dispersed people, and not reorganized as a commonwealth. Now the Adventists boldly affirm that God will not "bring them into their own land," and will not "make them one nation in the land." They strongly affirm that Jesus will never reign over restored Israel, as "King of the Jews." They do not hesitate in declaring that the exiled sons of Jacob will never, in a national capacity, occupy their fatherland. Is not such teaching contradictory to the angel's message to Mary, the mother of Christ? Certainly. See Luke 1:32, 33: "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever: and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

What does God tell us to teach concerning the Jews who have been led away captive into all nations? Listen to him: "Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock" (Jer. 31:10). This is the grand truth the Lord wants us to preach. Yes, he tells us to tell it. Why? Because the restoration of Israel is of exceeding great importance. And why so important? Because should you eliminate the restoration of the seed of Abraham as involved in the covenanats of promise, you invalidate the gospel message. When there was no one else to preach it, the cross thundered forth in three languages, "This is Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews." Christ the great King, the little flock on the throne with him, the twelve apostles upon "twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Luke 22:30); and all principalities and powers being subject unto him. It was for this hope Paul was bound with a chain. "For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain" (Acts 28:20).

"When the Lord builds up Zion, he will appear in his glory," says David. He is sure to build her up. His words cannot fail. There is a set time to favor Zion, we are told. Paul knew what he was talking about when he said, "As touching the gospel, they are enemies for your (Gentile's) sake: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' (Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and all the old faithful worthies) sake."

What instruction did the Lord leave us recorded in Matt. 24:42? "Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." Now in watching we should watch the national movements of Israel. Why? Because Israel is the great sign nation of the world. They are a sign around which all other signs must cluster. Is watchfulness along this line absolutely necessary? It is. Unless we do so we may find ourselves walking in darkness. Indeed, no better watchwords could the church of God have than these, "Watch Israel." Have you, dear reader, a citizen's interest in the commonwealth of Israel? If you have, then zealously watch and preserve your rights. The benefits that citizens will possess over aliens are simply immense, and so we cannot afford to trifle with that interest. It is said of the Ephesian Gentiles: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers (from the covenants of promise) and foreigners (from the commonwealth of Israel), but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." None but citizens belong to the commonwealth of Israel and the household of God. Let those, who, through divine grace are members of the spiritual Jerusalem, rejoice in that name and say —

Glorious things of thee are spoken,
Zion, city of our God.
He, whose word cannot be broken,
Formed thee for his own abode.
On the rock of ages founded,
What can shake thy sure repose?
With salvation walls surrounded,
Thou mayest smile at all thy foes.

Savior, if of Zion city
I through grace a member am;
Let the world deride or pity,
I will glory in thy name:
Fading is the worldling's pleasure,
All his boasted pomp and show;
Solid joys and lasting treasure,
None but Zion's children know.

STERLING GROVES.

Items of Interest

BIBLE SEARCHERS is the name suggested by Sister Icel Stedman, who is one out of eight of our young people that belong to a circular letter club, and that name will no doubt be adopted permanently by the members of the letter route. As these letters consist mostly of Bible questions, answers, discussions on the signs of the times, much good is expected to be conveyed from them. That others of the church may also enjoy and perhaps benefit by them, I am attempting to select from these letters and other sources, the most intresting and instructive extracts, and sending in, at least once a month, "Items of Interest."

Brother Melville Lyon writes concerning circuit letter writing: "Remember this circuit plan does not prevent special correspondence in case any member wants to write a private letter to another member; it enlarges the circle of acquaintances. But nearly always what we write to one will be of interest to all. We must keep in mind also that one of the objects of this circuit is mutual help and uplift, to bind us closer together in the church. Many of us are isolated, and this gives opportunity for broader reasoning through knowledge of others ideas."

"We are evidently approaching some great crisis," writes Sister Ruth Spencer, "but just what, no two seem to be of the same opinion. Apparently there are perilous times just ahead. The darkest hour is just before day. We will truly have many things to test our faith, loyalty to God and love to each other, before the end. Have you ever pictured in your mind for a moment what it would mean to us to be safely housed in the kingdom of God, free from the turmoils of this life? There to live a life that would measure with the life of Deity; to enjoy the society of the good of all ages and never more to whisper 'farewell' to friends and loved ones. We are commanded to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. When I read of the faith of father Abraham, Job, and other ancient worthies, I am led to wonder if we really love the faith once delivered. Christ said, 'if we had faith as a grain of mustard seed (which is a very small seed) we could remove mountains.'"

The subject of milking machines comes up. Sister Rhoda Hanson lives on a dairy ranch in Michigan, and wrote an interesting description of those useful articles called milking machines. By the time our circuit letter made its round trip, we discovered that there were more than one kind of milking machine. Sister Ruth Spencer wrote the following concerning the model she uses: "I run a machine known as the Armstrong Brand. It is the only kind I have ever seen. This machine is very simple, consisting of four fingers and a thumb." To help the fun along, Aunt Bess contributes this: "I think the model is better than any yet described, as it not only milks the cows but takes them to and from the pasture. In fact, girls, I liked the model so well I married it."

Sister Rhoda Hanson wrote on April April 19th: "Sister Woodward preached a fine sermon here last Sunday, her subject being Social Responsibility. She impressed upon our minds the duty of the Christian toward his fellow men. How often we shun the duties set before us; but we should stop and consider that no one was too lowly for our Master to stoop and help them. Why, then, should we walk past on the other side of the road, as we find in the story related in Luke 10:28-37? I believe that sermon sunk in every heart in the church, and no tellin' how many, many people may be benefited just by that one sermon."

The apostle Paul wrote in Corinthians: "Now I beseech you, brother, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you, but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment." Do we do this? Are we of the same mind, without divisions among us? Let us examine ourselves closely lest we be found "wanting" in this very essential point.

THANK GOD

THE PSALMIST says, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof" (Psa. 24:1). Have we life? It is loaned to us, for we belong to God. Have we loved ones around us? They are loaned to us for a short time. They belong to God, and very soon we must breathe a sad farewell, and return them to God. Have we riches? Do silver and gold flow into our coffers? It is not ours, but belongs to God; and he will require us to render a strict account of the use made of the blessings which he has heaped upon us. This being so, to daily give grateful thanks to God for life and its blessings, is surely our reasonable service. What do you suppose God thinks of the man or woman who prays to him for some rich blessing, greatly desired, and when he receives it, proudly tells his friend what a lucky man he is, and forgets to thank God to whom he prayed.

Again what do you suppose God thinks of the man who, when stricken with mortal pain, prayed to him for relief, and at the same time sends for the nearest doctor; and on the morrow, when the pain is gone, greatly praises and richly rewards the doctor, but forgets to give thanks to God, who answered his prayer?

The next issue of The Restitution will be dated Dec. 7th.

They are not reformers who simply abhor evil. Such men become in the end abhorent themselves.

Great powers and natural gifts do not bring privileges to their possessors, so much as they bring duties.

For every Eunuch there is a Phiilip, and for every Cornelius there is provided a Peter.—Brother J. E. Hammond.

We extend warmest welcome to Brother and Sister Cantwell Drabenstott, of Hartford City, Ind., rho have come to the city to locate permanently.

When flowers are saturated with heaven-descended dews, they always hang their heads; but vain men hold theirs the higher the more they receive, getting proud as they get full.

A man in the right, with God on his side, is in the majority, though he be alone; for "if God be for us, who can be against us?" God is multitudinous above all populations of the earth.

November 14th, the following young people were baptized into Christ after witnessing a good confession of faith: Barbara Bremner, formerly Presbyterian; and Robert Giles, formerly neutral, son of Brother Samuel Giles.

Sowing in Tears

I WOULD like to say that on Saturday, October 23, I left Pueblo for Rocky Ford, where Brother J. W. Grimsley met me and took me to his home, which is fifteen miles from there. I had never met these dear brethren, but they did not seem like strangers, as we who are in Christ are of one family. We are all brethren. How good it was to be with these who are letting their light shine in the locality where they live.

I saw the result of their labor in the Lord. Brother and Sister Grimeley were the only ones in the truth when they located there, and through their efforts and the meeting held by Brother Almus Adams a year ago, a number were baptized, and other are favorable to the truth. I trust that these will put on Christ by baptism when Brother Adams goes back. What a glorious thing to be in the ark, Christ Jesus! Storms may rage without, but they cannot harm us.

On Sunday we went to the church, which is about two miles from Brother Grimsley's Brother Grimsley teaches the older ones, and Sister Grimsley has charge of the children. She has a very systematic way of preparing the lessons, and I was sorry I could not hear them recite; but I am quite sure that under her teaching they will learn the truth fast. She has three of her own boys, and it seemed good to see them all anxious to get ready for Sunday School.

On Monday we went to Rocky Ford. There I had to say goodby to these dear brethren. May the Lord continue to bless them in their good work.

While in Rocky Ford I distrubuted some tracts and papers. If any one doubts that we are living in the times spoken of in the Bible which reads, "In the last days shall come scoffers walking after their own lusts and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning," just let them go from house to house giving tracts and talking with the people. They will surely find that this Scripture is being fulfilled. One lady said, "O these things have been preached for years and years, and I don't think Christ's kingdom will come very soon." In fact I don't think she is looking for it to come at all. I said, "The Lord said to watch the Jews as that was a sign," ands he said, "Yes, they have preached that for years, too." So we see scoffers on every hand. I would certainly get discouraged if I did not know that the Bible says only a few will lay hold on these precious truths. I found one lady who seemed very much interested, and I felt that I was repaid for my work by finding her.

May the Lord help us to preach the news that the kingdom is at hand, yes even at the door. The time is short. Let us work.

Yours in Christ,

HANNA BARBER.

The Second Death

IT IS very generally thought that the second death is only once referred to in the entire Bible. Indeed, I have seen it so stated by at least one Bible commentator. But Revelation 20:14 is far from being the only mention of it in Scripture (see Rev. 2:11; 20:16; 2:8). There are quite a number of passages that have unmistakable reference to it. The importance of this is not sufficiently recognized; for if the doctrine of the second death can be shown to be one of the teachings of the Old Testament, it cannot be denied that there, resurrection from the dead is taught also, both of the just and the unjust.

It is indisputable that before a second death can take place a second life must have been lived. No honest reader of the Bible will dispute that a second life, which is to be everlasting in its nature, is promised to the righteous, therefore if the second death is proved, the conclusion is irristible that there is to be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and the unjust.

PSALM 9:17

Perhaps the most noticable instance in the Old Testament is in Psa. 9:17, R. V.: "The wicked shall return to sheol." The use of the word "return" necessarily implies that they were formerly there, otherwise language would be meaningless. That sheol in Scripture signifies the grave in its general sense, as being comprehensive of all forms and places of burial, is amply verified by the translators in the Revised Version in spite of their avowal to the contrary in their preface. The fact that "nations" are said to go there is strong evidence that the "hell" of the theologians (so-called) is "not in God's thoughts," nor did it "come into the mind" of Jehovah to consign whole nations to such an unmerciful fate.

JOB 21:30-32.

This passage seems to be of precisely the same import as that of Psa. 9:17. The evil man is "reserved," then "brought forth," and again (vs. 32) he is brought to the grave when he is to "remain in the tomb."

JOB 24: 19, 20.

The finality of the language used here seems to cover more than the first death.

PROV. 10:2; 11:4.

Perhaps these verses are generally understood in the sense of Dan. 12:4. where evidently a lengthening of the present life is implied; but surely here, as in other Scriptures, a further fulfilment is part of the burden of the message.

PROV. 11:18, 19, R. V.

"He that is steadfast in righteousness shall attain unto life, and he that pursueth evil doeth it to his own death." This passage as it reads in the Revised Version, is a most remarkable instance: for the promise of that "life which is to come" could scarcely be more explicitly stated even in the New Testament; and as "it is appointed unto men once to die," the reference to death would be without signification if the second death is not the death spoken of. Neither could it be said that a living man was appointed (or to attain) unto life after his "appointed" death. It is interesting to note that the Septuagint reads "is appointed unto life." Ezek. 18:26; Matt. 10:22; 24:13; Mark 13:13; Heb. 3:6, 14 should be read in connection with the Revised Version of this passage.

EZEK. 18:23.

"Have I any pleasure in the death of the wicked, and not rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live?" Much the same remarks apply here as to Prov. 10:22; 11:4. The reference, however, seems a little more pointed to the life and death which are to come.

EZEK. 18:26.

"When a righteous man turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity and dieth therein; for his iniquity that he hath done (after being righteous) shall (future) he die" (the second death). See Psa. 69:28; Exod. 32:32; Rev. 2:5.

DANIEL 12:2.

"And many (not all) of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (margin, abhorance). Here, clearly enough, resurrection to eternal life is predicated, and by antithesis the second death is as distinctly foretold.

MATT. 25:40.

This passage might well be called Dan. 12:2 in the New Testament. The same remarks apply here, for "everlasting destruction" or death is the rational and natural antithesis to the everlasing life which is promised and when our God-given reason is allowed to rule the mind, there will be no quarreling with the fact that death is the only punishment that can be everlasting for every other punishment when carried to excess invariably ends in death. If everlasting life is eternal the "punishment" is eternal also. Therefore it is further evident that the second death is here referred to.

MATT. 10:28; LUKE 12:4.

These two passages are reports of same message by Christ to the people. Man truly has power to kill souls as Scripture repeatedly testifies, but none can only send his fellow to hades (the first death), the grave, from which a resurrection both of the just and the unjust is divinely foretold, and though because of this prophetic promise they need not fear man, yet they are warned whom they should fear. They are warned to fear him, whom, after he has killed, is to destroy both soul and body in Gehenna, the second death. See Isaiah 8: 12, 13. Man is called a soul because he has a soul or life, but what life is still remains a mystery; hence the impossibility of man being able to destroy it utterly, though he severs its connection with any created being.

MARK 9: 43-48.

Here Gehenna, the lake of fire which is the second death, is referred to in the previous passage.

LUKE 13:5.

"On those eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell and killed them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you Nay: but except ye repent ye shall likewise perish." How? By being killed or slain (see Luke 19:27), "sudden destruction." The threat would be meaningless if the Adamic death were here alluded to, as the "all" of whom Christ spoke would most of them at least lie a natural death in the ordinary course of events. Again, the death referred to by Christ could be averted by repentance ("except ye repent"), the natural or first death could not, for none can save alive his own soul. It is appointed unto men once to die.

LUKE 19:27.

"But these mine enemies which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me." Here were Jews living at the first advent of Christ who were to be slain after his return (see verse 15). Hence they must have been resurrected to be slain at the second advent by the second death. It would seem that the second death is almost invariably an inflicted death in contradistinction to the natural death. Some other passages which seem clearly to have reference to the second death are: Rom. 6:23; 8:6; James 1:15; 5:20; 2 Pet. 2:9; 3:7; Heb. 9:27; 2 Thess. 1:7-9; Rev. 2:11; 20:6, 13, 14; 21:8.

SPECIAL NOTE

Throughout the Bible life and death

1. Are always in contrast.
2. Both words are elementary.
3. They have 20 synonyms.

They cannot therefore be replaced by other words.

Nor can they be supplied by any attempt at definition.

Even when used in a secondary sense the primary meaning is always involved.

Sin and death, righteousness and life are the themes of this Book. Hence to deny the reality of death amounts to a denial of the gospel of Christ, the Son of God, who came that he might redeem us from death.

It is repeatedly asserted in the New Testament that Jesus Christ died and was buried and that God raised him from the dead; an assured fact that differentiates Christianity from every other religious system. Has it occurred to you what tremendous issues would be involved had God not raised him from the dead? Paul says faith would be in vain! The question is a reasonable one—it deserves consideration—it requires an answer. Every doctrine of the Christian religion is affected thereby. For instance, in how many ways would it affect the doctrine of the Trinity? Test every item of belief by this searching question and the inevitable result is that he would have remained dead.

R. H. JUDD.

Revenge is usually suggestive of evil but not all revenge is wrong. There is a godly kind that is perfectly legitimate for a Christian (Prov. 25: 21, 22).

The Peace League

THE PRESENT peace league of the nations is different from anything going before it that is revealed in the history of the world. "The alliances of the greatest historical importance are the Triple Alliance (1688) of Great Britain, Sweden and the Netherlands against France; The Grand Alliance (1689) of the Emperor Leopold I, and Holland subsequently joined by England, Spain and Saxony, against Louis XIV; the Quadruple Alliance (1718) of Great Britain, France, Austria and Holland, against Spain; the Holy Alliance (1815) of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, for the maintenance of peace and the establishment of the existing dynasties; and the alliance (1851) of Great Britain, France and Turkey against Russia" (Ency. Brit.)

The nearest approach to the present peace league is the Holy Alliance of Austria, Russia, and Prussia (1815) after the wars of Napoleon; but it is small when compared with the present peace league.

They were only three nations, while the present league is composed of about forty nations, and is only in its formative condition. The material of which it is made is hard to control; but after the United States, Russia, and Germany join it, it will be strong, and will function all right for some time.

Only big things are noted in the book of the Revelation, and the peace league is one of the things noted therein. The future dispensation is to be ruled by Christ and his brethren; but the present is ruled by the angels; and in Rev. 7:1 four angels are seen by John holding the four winds, and another angel ascending from the sun-rising (R. V.) having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a great voice saying, "Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God on their foreheads." Here is a work to be done while the winds are being held, and that work is sealing God's servants in their foreheads, twelve thousand out of each of the tribes of Israel. The Jews were very ungodly in rejecting the Son of God, their Messiah, who gave full proof of his mission.

But Paul says, "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, ... that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins. As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sake; but as touching the election they are beloved for the fathers' sakes. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance" (Rom. 11: 25-29).

This doctrine of God's calling, and gifts without repentance is being badly neglected by professing Christians in our days. See Paul for an instance. He madly persecuted the poor saints unto death. But what says God? "He is a chosen vessel to carry my name to the Gentiles." God was able and did convert Paul; he is able and will convert the Jews. He will turn away ungodliness from Jacob. The Jews have the knowledge of the one living and true God; and the sealing work in their foreheads will reveal to them Jesus Christ, God's Son as their Messiah.

Before the sealing they had the Father's name written in their foreheads, and in chapter 14 they stand with the Lamb on the Mount Zion "having his name and the name of his Father written in their foreheads" (R. V.). God's faithfulness is pledged by covenant to turn away ungodliness from Jacob, and here in the sealing of the 144 000 out of the twelve tribes, is the only place in the Revelation where such a work is revealed in fulfilment of God's covenant with Israel.

It should not be forgotten that the book of the Revelation was given to "shew unto his servants things to come" (Rev. 1:1). Israel was ungodly in refusing the evidence of Christ's mission; they are still in ignorance, and need to be enlightened, and what objection can be urged against this sealing work being for their enlightenment according to God's covenant? The signs of the times indicate the approaching end of this dispensation.

The hand of God is seen among the nations favoring the return of the Jews to their promised land. Big bodies move slowly; therefore, patience brethren. God's word is sure to be fulfilled.

A PRAYER

Based on Col. 3:12-17, showing Christian conduct.

OUR HEAVENLY FATHER:

IN THE name of thy Son and as thy elect we ask thy guidance and aid so we may be filled with and practice mercy and kindness, humbleness and meekness, together with longsuffering and forbearance. And O Father, give us the spirit of forgiveness even as thou and thy Christ hath forgiven us. But, above all else, O Father, may we practice charity, which is thy bond of perfection; and as we are called in one body may thy grace rule us and at all times and under all circumstances may we be thankful. Let the word of Christ, which is wisdom, dwell in us richly; and whatsoever we do, in word or deed, may we do it in the name of thy Son, through and in whom we thank thee giving thee praise and honor and glory. Amen.

GOLDEN TEXT: 1 Timothy 6:11, 12.

A PRAYER

By Dorothy Lyon

GIVE ME the pure, sweet love that will repay
The love thou hast for me, in some small way,
That I may seem more thankful, Lord, I pray,
For thy beloved Son.

Help me in friend and foe alike to see
Something that's nobler far than aught in me,
That I may more like my dear Savior be,
That meek and lowly One.

And O, from every word and action take
All thought of self, and my whole lifetime make
An offering for thine and other's sake,
To thee, dear Lord, above.

And grant that sweet humility may lend
Its quiet influence to gain this end—
That e'en the least may count me as his friend,
A messenger of love.

From every stain of sin, Lord, cleanse thou me,
Let my whole soul be filled with love for thee
That in my heart, with sacred purity,
May shine thy word.

While others, day by day and week by week,
For joy and pleasure, fame and fortune seek,
Just make me ever kind and pure and meek,
And make me loving, Lord!

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE RESTITUTION

"Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Some four or five years since I, Mrs. Charles H. Thomas, wrote a few articles asking certain questions regarding dancing. I did not uphold the spending of money nor the wasting of our time in such amusement, but I was a musician and as such thought that to play at a public dance was not wrong. Then after consideration I was in doubt and wishing to be on the safe side I stopped studied the matter from the Bible standpoint and took it to the Lord in prayer. Now I regret that I ever engaged in such an undertaking, for I would be very sorry to think that my influence caused one of God's dear ones to stumble.

Can a Christian go to dances and still be a warm, live Christian? My answer is, No.

Can a person of good morals go to dances? To this question my answer is yes. But what has the question of morals to do with those to whom are given the command, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate."

The dance craze has almost the same hold on some of the younger element that the thirst for alcohol has on some older people.

After my marriage I lived for some years beside a dear relative who had heard the truth and obeyed in baptism. I then was a Methodist and never before had met one in the truth. I had been taught to obey the "law of the Sabbath." This relative would make light of my belief but never during my stay of three years was I shown what the truth was, neither in example nor precept. I never saw a Bible in the house, but that dear girl was an attendant at all dances. Did she go morally wrong? No. Today, she as then, is too strong minded to lose herself; but in the same town many young girls have fallen, helped by the dance. But, as before said, we are not interested in the morals of the question. As for myself, after years of fighting I am firmly convinced that we can not be of the family of God—real live Christians—and be a seeker after, nor a partaker of the pleasures and allurements of the world. We must be separate: we must daily feed on God's word. Four years ago, when I was trying to decide this matter, this relative came to my mind, and the thought that lodged there was, If from the time of her baptism, this dear girl had kept herself separate, daily studying God's word, could I have lived with her for three years without finding out she was one of God's children? I do not condemn her. I have done worse. My desire is to pass to others the lesson I learned. Brethren and sisters, pray the heavenly Father to give me strength to guide my own little ones in the way of truth and grace, and make me strong so I can be separate from the gloss and glitter of the world, working for him. Then I will always be your sister in Christ.

In Paul's epistle to the Colossians there are but foud chapters. Suppose we read them, especially chapter three, asking God for strength and guidance so we can understand, believe and practice. We will be better Christians for so doing.

WRITE ME A LETTER

TO DAY, in another column, we print "An Open Letter to the Young People of The Restitution," written by a sister, herself a mother, desirous of bringing up her children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

We imagine that in the term "dance" Sister Thomas refers to public dancing, such as balls, etc. We would like our readers to take up this question in a serious way and let us have their views on the matter, not for controversy, nor yet as opinions; but as conclusions based on Bible study. As Christians we have an exceeding high calling; we have many privileges but we also have many duties, duties that cannot be put aside, if we are children of God. Then we must obey our Father, we must honor and love him as Paul, in Colossians says, "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father in him;" and again in 1 Corinthians, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsover ye do, do all to the glory of God." Let us hear from you.

"NOT SLOTHFUL IN BUSINESS"

A GREAT thinker once said, "Not as little as we can, but as much as we dare," or words to that effect. How true this is as pertaining to our works that cometh through faith that we read about in James 2:14 to end. We know that works cannot save us. Our salvation comes through faith in Jesus, who was holy, just and good, and obedience to the commands of God. Through our faith and obedience we partake of the perfection of Jesus Christ who covers us with his righteousness. This in turn forces us to do our duty which is to honor and glorify God in all our ways. God demands this and it is very little for us to do when we consider all that God has done for us. We can neither honor nor glorify God by shutting ourselves in a closet, but we can both honor and glorify him by telling men, who know him not, of his love, his mercy, his grace. We can honor him by doing his will, we can glorify him by accepting his plan of salvation which is through his Son our Lord. We can have works without having faith, but we can no more have faith without works than we could be in the dark while the sun was shining upon us. When we pray God to increase our faith let us also ask him for strength to work in his vineyard so we can receive the pay of "well done thou faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

TO THE GRUMBLER AND THE FAULT FINDER

THE FOLLOWING little talk was overheard one morning recently by the writer as he was on his way to the station going to business. Immediately in front of me, was a man who by his dress we know was a laborer, and by his tongue it was no guess to tell he was of celtic origin. Some distance away was a milkman who addersing the laborer said, "Hello, Jim, good morning"; to which Jim replied, "Good morning."

Then in a few moments the milkman again said, "Jim, its a rotten morning." There had been a heavy fog, and now a fine drizzle was falling. I wish it were possible for me to give you that rich, sweet sounding Irish brogue Jim used as he replied, "No, its a good morning." Then after a moments thought, "I've learned that in things I can neither cause nor cure, never to find fault with them."

O, noble Jim! I wish I had reached your philosophic height. For many years I have tried to, but I most always fail, and especially so on damp, foggy mornings. Yet why should we? If we as Christians, believe that "all things work together for good," why should not the fog be as welcome as sunshine? I imagine it's a case of "O, ye of little faith"; and if the repeating of this little incident will do you as much good as the hearing of it did me, it has not been written in vain.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, DECEMBER 14th, 1920. ● NUMBER 46

The Christian Watchman

Watchman, tell me does the morning
Of fair Zion's glory dawn?
Has the signs that mark his coming
Yet upon my pathway shone?
Pilgrim, arise! look around thee,
Light is breaking in the skies!
Gird the bridal robe around thee,
Morning dawns! arise! arise!

Watchman, see the light is beaming
Brightly still upon the way,
Signs through all the earth are gleaming,
Omens of the coming day,
When the Jubal trumpet sounding
Shall awake from land and sea,
All the saints of God now sleeping,
Clad in immortality.

Watchman, hail the light attending
Of the grand sabbatic year,
And with voices loud proclaiming
That the kingdom's very near;
Pilgrim, yes, arise! look round thee,
Canaan's glorious lights arise,
Salem, too, appears in grandeur,
Towering 'neath the cloudless skies.

Watchman, in that golden city
Seated on that jasper throne,
Zion's King arrayed in beauty,
Reigns in peace from zone to zone.
There on sunlit hills and mountains
Golden beams serenely glow,
Pearly streams and crystal fountains
On whose banks sweet floweretts grow.

Watchman, see the land is nearing,
With its vernal fruits and flowers;
Oh! just yonder, oh how cheering!
Bloom forever Eden's bowers
Hark! the choral strains are swelling,
Wafted on the balmy air,
See the millions, hear the singing,
Soon the pilgrims will be there.—Selected by

John 5:28, 29 and Russellism

Universal Resurrection Shown to be Fallacious and Unscriptural: John R. Fiske

IT IS contended by Russellites that John 5:28, 29 teaches universal resurrection and probation for the dead. We believe them to be wrong. To our mind John 5:28, 29, together with other passages, plainly refutes both theories. If one will notice verse 29 carefully he will doubtless see that the "all" that "comes forth" is limited by the Master to a certain class. Who is the "all" of whom he speaks? It is "they" who are good or evil doers under the law which gives its servants either a resurrection of life or of condemnation. What is that "law" which gives its obedient servants a "resurrection of life" and its disobedient ones a "resurrection of condemnation"? Is it not the "law of faith" (Rom. 3:27)? If so, then those not under that "law" can not receive either resurrection promised. As there are none other promised the dead but these two, it follows that John 5:28, 29 teaches the non-resurrection of those not in the "resurrection of life" or of "condemnation."

THE GOOD AND EVIL DEFINED

Merely being "a man righteous" and "devout" (Acts 10:22, Rotherham) will not put one in the "resurrection of life" if ignorant of the faith (Acts 11:14). Likewise mere wickedness will not put one in the "resurrection of condemnation" if ignorant of the law of faith. Since "they who have done good" means strictly they who have known and obeyed the "law of faith"—not the righteous who are ignorant of it; then "they that have done evil" does not mean the uninstructed wicked, but strictly those who have known and disobeyed the "law of faith."

Oregon Bible College
Oregon, Ill.

SUMMARY OF PROOF TEXTS

This is (what is?) that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light.

2. Where there is no law (of faith or any other kind) sin is not imputed.

3. Where there is no law (of faith or any other) there is no transgression.

4. Times of this ignorance God winked at.

5. He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is a sin.

6. If I had not come and spoken unto them they had not sin; but now they have no cloak for their sin.

7. He that believeth not is condemned.

8. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. He that believeth not shall be condemned.

LIGHT CREATES RESPONSIBILITY

Surely these are sufficient. Here we are taught that light precedes responsibility; that though men sin without law yet it is not imputed against them: that if they hear not the words of Christ "they have a cloak for their sin." That in "times of ignorance" God "winks" at the acts of men whether good or bad as far as future responsibility is concerned.

THE WICKED RAISED—WHO?

That the evil doers of John 5:28, 29 is restricted to them who have known the truth but have disobeyed it is a clearly revealed doctrine. Are not the good and evil doers of John 5:28, 29 the "just" and "unjust" that are to be raised (Acts 24:15)? Are not the risen "just" and "unjust," the "righteous" and the "wicked"? If so, then who are the wicked that are to be raised? "The wicked shall return to sheol, even all the nations—people—that forget God" (Psa. 9:17, Revised Ver.). Since we cannot "forget" anything unless we have first known it, so these "people" who "forget" God have once known him, but have failed to "keep in memory" (1 Cor. 15:1) the things of God. These are they who are the wicked that arise from sheol and must return to sheol even all the people that forget God. Since the ignorant have not known him, they cannot forget God; hence are not among the risen "wicked" that "return to sheol."

THE WICKED FURTHER DEFINED

"Flee from the wrath to come:" "Wrath against the day of wrath." "The wrath of God cometh on (whom?) the children of the disobedient." "Jesus who delivered us from the wrath to come." "The great day of wrath is come." "They (the wicked) shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." Whom is this "wrath" treasured up against? "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousness." Hence they who hold the "truth in unrighteousness" are the ones who get the "resurrection of condemnation." These alone are the recipients of "the wrath of God" which will be executed against them in the day of wrath and destruction (Job 21:30). The ignorant, not "holding the truth in righteousness," though they may sin, it is not "imputed" against them. Therefore the evil doers of John 5:28, 29 refers to them alone who "hold the truth in unrighteousness," even "all the people who forget God."

A LIMITED RESURRECTION

Notwithstanding the foregoing arguments there may be certain ones who will still contend that John 5:28, 29 teaches an unlimited resurrection. Well, we believe firmly it teaches a limited one: which is right? Let inspiration settle the question. Does John 5:28, 29 mean all that are in the dust, or simply "many of" the all? That is the question to be settled. Well, which does it mean? Here is the answer; pray accept it: "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." "Many of" never means all of. So inspiration has settled the question in the favor of a limited resurrection.

RESURRECTIONAL PROBATION ABSURD

"They have done evil:" are they not "evil doers"? If so, will not the evil doers be "cut off" (Psa. 37:9). Since these are the risen wicked, will they return to sheol as David said they would? Since the day of wrath is a day of destruction to the wicked (Job 21:30) will they not be destroyed? Since they awake to shame and everlasting contempt to see it always (Douay Version), will this always ever end? Since the life and the concontempt are both everlasting will this everlesting ever end? Is it thinkable that from those experiencing everlasting contempt will be evolved a race of immortals? Since they will experience it always, will they as immortals be viewed with contempt by those who awake to everlasting life? "They who have done evil:" what will they receive? Let Paul answer.

POST-RESURRECTIONAL DESTINY

"Wrath, woe, anguish, tribulation upon every soul of man that doeth evil." Will the heathen, since the Russellites say they will be in the "resurrection of condemnation," receive wrath! woe! anguish!!! Will they be brought forth to the day of destruction? Will they experience shame and contempt and see it always? Will they as a part of the risen wicked return to sheol? Are not they who sow to the spirit doers of good? Will not they reap life everlasting? Are not they who sow to the flesh, doers of evil? Will they not reap corruption in the second death? If so, will the heathen reap this punishment too?

WILL JUDAS BE "LOST" OR SAVED?

Judas is lost. Will he be in the resurrection of condemnation? If there is salvation in the resurrection of condemnation he will certainly get it, as all who have done evil under the law of faith get the same fate—a resurrection of damnation.

"DAY OF WRATH"—NOT SALVATION

Since those that have done evil are unjust, they are to be punished (2 Pet. 2:9) with everlasting destruction (2 Thess. 1:9). Once more allow us to refer the reader to Rom. 2:6, 7. Here it says that in the day of judgment, if the heathen emerge as a part of the wicked, that every soul of man that doeth evil will get wrath, woe, and anguish. Why should the heathen experience such? Notice, "every soul of man that doeth evil" certainly means they that have done evil of John 5:28, 29. Well what will they receive? Wrath. The reader may think if he wishes that wrath, woe, and anguish may turn the day of wrath into a day of salvation for the risen wicked who experience such, but for ourselves we believe it will be a day of destruction for them.

MEANING OF THE WORD "CONDEMNATION"

The reader may think condemnation a wrong rendering of "krisis," in John 5:29. We frankly admit "krisis" sometimes means judgment; but at other times it is used in the sense of condemnation, and here is a case for these reasons:

1. They that have done evil have either failed to believe on Christ or else disobeyed him hence they are condemned already. Therefore theirs is a life of condemnation, theirs is a death of condemnation, and theirs must be a resurrection of condemnation.

2. To maintain the antithesis, resurrection of condemnation and resurrection of life are striking opposites. This contrast is largely destroyed by rendering "krisis" judgment.

3. Resurrection of judgment would imply that those who have done good as well as bad are to be judged. But since the good as well as the bad are to be judged, it follows that judgment is the wrong rendering.

4. Judgment does not always stand for "krisis" exactly. Here is an example: "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn (krisis) but that the world through him might be saved." Render "krisis" judge and the impressive contrast is lost. But render it condemn and the balance is complete. So it must be with John 5:28, 29.

Judgment and Resurrection

Number One

A WORTHY young brother has requested several times that your humble scribe write a series of articles giving some reasons why we reject the theory of "mortal emergence" for the righteous dead. The word "emergence" is defined, "The process or result of emerging; a rising or coming forth; a coming into view; as the emergence of the moon from an eclipse; the emergence of a race from barbarism" (Standard Dictionary). The definition of the word spoils the idea of mortal emergence; for it includes the thought of "a rising or coming forth," and makes the emergence equivalent to the words "come forth" and "rise," so often used in the Bible. Then why not use the biblical words? Because that would make the dead rise immortal. "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." The words being synonymous makes the Bible teach the truth; the dead shall emerge incorruptible. The theory of mortal rising, coming forth, or emergence is based on the false premise that trial or decisive judgment takes place after the resurrection. The following facts show the fallacy of this premise.

DECISIVE JUDGMENT OF RIGHTEOUS NOW

(1) "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved" (Matt. 24:13). How did Jesus know that the person who endures unto the end shall be saved, if his destiny is not decided till after resurrection? He could not; hence the theory that makes decisive judgment follow resurrection is false.

(2) To the church in Smyrna Jesus said, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." If this church filled the requirements, is not their destiny a settled fact? And if their being faithful is essential to the obtaining of the crown of life, the fact that others were not faithful would make it evident that they could not obtain that crown.

(3) The righteous judgment of God "will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life" (Rom. 2:6, 7). To render is to "bestow, furnish, provide, or give" (Stand. Dic.). Then if one continues faithful throughout the present life, the fact is settled that he will in future be given eternal life. His destiny is sealed; decisive judgment has been rendered; only executive judgment is necessary in the future.

(4) "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is (no doubt here) laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge, will give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:7, 8). Here Paul not only knows his own destiny, but that of all who love Christ's appearing. Does he know more than God and his glorified Son? No. This passage alone is positive evidence that we are passing now through decisive judgment.

(5) "The Lord knoweth those that are his" (2 Tim. 2:1). This is the truth, and hence makes future decisive judgment in the case of the righteous unnecessary.

DECISIVE JUDGMENT OF THE WICKED ALSO NOW

(1) "For this ye know (that is, the Ephesian church knows) that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor coveteous man, who is an idolater hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and God" (Eph. 5:5). Were the saints of Ephesus wiser than the judge of all the earth? If not, then the destiny of the persons here spoken of by Paul is settled. If settled a decisive judgment in their case is not necessary.

(2) "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:2). The original word here for "born" implies begettal as well as birth. As one is begotten before birth we conclude it would be correct to understand begettal is included in this assertion. Now begettal takes place in this life. Does not God know those who are begotten from those who are not begotten? If those not begotten are not to even see the kingdom of God why should he wish in the future any other judgment to decide their destiny? The fact of their not being begotten leaves no room in his kingdom for them, and therefore leaves them without a future home.

(3) "He that believeth not is condemned already" (John 3:18). The word "krisis" here means to judge as well as to condemn. In this place it shows that the unbeliever is already under judgment unto condemnation. His case is settled so long as he remains in unbelief. If he wastes his probationary life in unbelief he remains under sentence to condemnation. The wrath of God abideth on him; he shall not see life (John3:36).

(4) Of apostate Christians we read, "For it is impossible, ... to renew them unto repentance" (Heb. 6:4-6). Is not their destiny sealed, then? God reveals that much to us; what more is needed but his execution? A decision concerning apostates has already been revealed without a doubt.

(5) "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledg of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries" (Heb. 10:26, 27). Is not the destiny of such people sealed? God knows as much about them as Paul, and no doubt revealed their destiny to him. So far as this people is concerned, no room is left for future decisive judgment. The "krisis" here is executive, and in connection with the "fiery indignation which devours," instead of tries, the people spoken of.

(6) If one convert an erring Christian from his error, God says, "Let him know that he . . . shall save a soul from death" (Jas. 5:20). If God does not know as much he could not reveal to us the matter; and hence the life and death question is decided here and now.

We might continue to quote texts to the same effect, but we believe the reader, if a biblical scholar, will mentally see many equivalent passages after reading these given. There is a mighty heap of evidence against a future decisive judgment. "He that hath the Son" hath the "future" life by promise; others cannot see that life, because they are now under God's wrath.

J. J. HECKMAN.

Inspiration of Scripture

INASMUCH AS some have denied that the entire Bible was given by divine inspiration, I thought it might not be altogether unprofitable to write briefly concerning the matter. It appears the great difficulty is found in the word Scripture. "Scripture" is a word derived from the Latin (Scriptura). and in its original sense is of the same import with writing, signifying "anything written" (Buck's Theological Dictionary). Therefore, some have supposed that the word in 2 Tim. 3:16 must of necessity include everything written since the discovery of the art of writing; taking the verse as it would read with the two verbs in italics; consequently they leave out the first verb, and read "all Scripture given." But this cannot be done and make sense, without leaving out the conjunction "and," which is in the original, from the fact that conjunctions are to connect sentences; and if the first verb is kept out, the sentence must of necessity extend to the word "profitable," and the verse would read, "All Scripture given by inspiration of God (is) profitable." etc. But this I claim, that if they have any right to exclude the first verb, they have no right to retain the latter. But as it is impossible to make any sense whatever without the verb, as there is nothing said or affirmed without a verb, neither indeed can be; wherefore, after having kept out the two verbs and the conjunction, which is in the original, they take the remaining part of the verse, add one verb, and declare it right!

Now, how it is men come into possession of the power to do these things I cannot tell; or whether they have any such right. Who, I ask, admitting the plenary inspiration of the Bible, can with propriety question the perfection of the verse as it now reads and was left by the translators. Reading it, together with verse 15, there is a perfect harmony, and easy to be understood, inasmuch as Paul declares what manner of Scripture it is. He says it is that Scripture which is able to make one wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. That it was the book now called the Old Testament to which he referred Timothy, no one will deny. Consequently it is evident the adjective "all" includes no more nor less than the thirty-nine different books, written by different authors, at different times and in different languages—the very Scriptures of which Paul spoke to Timothy, as being all given by inspiration.

So doubtless, Timothy understood it. Suppose I say to an individual, "take this fifty dollar note and get it cashed;" and on his return I say, "did you get all the money?": would it not be proper? Indeed it would, and perfectly understood by the man. But who would suppose I meant all the money in the world? Nobody having common sense; they would know that I meant all the money due me. So doubtless it was understood by Timothy that Paul meant only all the holy Scriptures included in the Old Testament.

Again, if the prophets and apostles were permitted to "mix their own production with the dictates of the Spirit, and to have passed the unhallowed compound on the world as genuine," how can we know what part to believe? "In fact by denying that they were constantly under infallible guidance, it leaves us utterly at a loss to know when we should or should not believe them. How can I be certain that they have not, on some occasions, published, in the name of God, sentiments of their own, to which they were desirous to gain credit or authority? Who will assure me of their perfect fidelity in drawing a line of distinction between the divine and the human parts of their writings? The denial of the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures tends to unsettle the foundations of our faith, involves us in doubt and perplexity, and leaves us no other method of ascertaining how much we should believe but by an appeal to reason. But when reason is invested with the authority of judge, not only is revelation dishonored and its author insulted, but the end for which it was given is completely defeated.—J. Steadman.

Help the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

To be overcome of pride, jealousy, vain ambition or any other carnal self-seeking, in any stage or form, is to be the meanest and lowest kind of a slave.

Be not afraid of showing sentiment; only the weak, the selfish, and the cruel are uninspired by the emotions classified under the word "sentimental.".

A steady and patient beholding of the risen, living, glorified Christ will forever remove all fears and comfort and satisfy the aching heart.

Pride can be made a virtue as well as a vice, as humbleness can be made a vice as well as a virtue. Some of us are actually proud of our humbleness.

Editorial

Tears are sometimes the telescope by which men see into the kingdom of God.

—o—

Men are not put into this world to be perpetually fiddled on by the fingers of joy.

—o—

Suffering rightly borne weakens that part of us that should be weak, and strengthens what should be strong.

—o—

The divine statement that "the common people" heard Christ gladly, seems to imply that the higher classes cared but little for him.

—o—

What a man has thought and felt bears intimate relation to what he now thinks and feels. There is no such thing as divesting one's self entirely of the influences of former living.

—o—

Farmers have learned a lesson which many moralists have not learned; namely, that when seed is sown grain must be looked for at the latter end of the harvest, and not all at the beginning.

"Judgment and Resurrection," the caption of an article this week by Brother Heckman, may be objectional to some of our readers who believe in "mortal emergence." They have habituated themselves to say "resurrection and judgment," because the only judgment they seem to know about is after the resurrection. Resurrection and judgment is a correct form of words when "eternal judgment" is under consideration, for that is executed at the resurrection (Heb. 6:2); but Brother Heckman is writing about judgment that takes place pre-resurrectionally. The title of his article is both appropriate and scriptural.

Christmas Gifts for God

WE WISH to remind our readers that many subscriptions are now due, and that they are coming in very slowly. Our Helping Fund also has received but little notice lately.

Our paper bills this year have been so great that if we had not had a source of income apart from the subscription list we could not have continued to publish The Restitution. We hope at this season of the year, when the spirit of Christ leads you to bestow generosity and benefactions upon friends, you will not forget to make gifts to our heavenly Father, that his word may be kept continually before the world. By contributing to our Helping Fund you will be giving to God, that he may be glorified before men. You will also contribute to the edification of poor brethren and the enlightenment of friends who are now ignorant of the gospel. We trust our plea will receive a hearty response.

A Conference of Workers

PURSUANT TO church notices sent to over 75 members of the church of God twenty-six persons answered the call and were present in consultation at Oregon, Ill., from November 9th to 12th.

The purpose of the gathering was for considering the state of the church, its needs and the conditions that confront us. Two days were spent in study of the scriptural injunctions and examples of church organizations and government, with the idea of conforming in every detail to scriptural pattern in every plan for organization we might effect, approve, or recommend.

In all the matters for discussion there was entire unanimity of decision. A spirit of love and deference was manifested by all in attendance. A great many papers on various subjects were read. No note of these will be made here since a complete report of the meeting will be sent to every member of the church of God whose name can be secured. Those who read this will confer a favor on the committee if they will forward their names and addresses to the secretary, F. L. Austin, Fonthill, Ontario.

The Restoration of Israel

Zionism a Fulfilment of Prophecy

I PRESUME it will be admitted by all that the Israelites were once God's chosen people, his peculiar people, "because unto them were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. 3:2). The land of Canaan was promised them for an everlasting possession. The Lord made a covenant with Abraham in which he said, "Unto thy seed I have given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the River Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). All who read the Bible know the beautiful story of the children of Israel's sojourn in Egypt, and their return to the land of Canaan over four hundred years after God made the covenant with Abraham. After they returned to the land of Canaan, God established his kingdom upon the earth. David was the King, the land of Canaan was the territory, and the children of Israel were the subjects.

While David was reigning upon the throne of the Lord, God made a covenant with him that his (David's) son should reign upon his throne forever (Psa. 89:132). After David's death, Solomon his son, ascended the throne of the Lord and built a magnificent temple for the Lord. When it was completed he fell upon his knees and prayer to God. God heard his prayer and made unto him the following covenant: "And the Lord said unto him, I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication that thou hast made before me: I have hallowed this house which thou hast built, to put my name there forever; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually, and if thou wilt walk before me as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in righteousness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my statutes and my judgments: then will I establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel forever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel. But if ye shall at all turn from following me, ye or your children, and will not keep my commandments and my statutes which I have set before you, but go and serve other gods, and worship them; then will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them; and this house which I have hallowed for my name, I will cast out of my sight; and Israel shall be a proverb and a by-word among all people: and at this house which is high, everyone that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss: and they shall say, Why hath the Lord done thus unto this land and to this house? And they shall answer, Because they forsook the Lord their God, who brought their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worshipped them and served them; therefore hath the Lord brought upon them all this evil" (1 Kings 9:3-6).

After Moses had given the law to the children of Israel he told them if they did not keep it, that they should "become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word among all nations whither the Lord shall lead them" (Deut. 28.37). "And the Lord shall scatter thee among the people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shalt the soul of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and a sorrow of mind: and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life" (Deut. 28:64-66).

All of these threats have come literally true. Now if the threats have come literally true, if we can find a positive promise that the twelve tribes of the children of Israel shall be restored to their own land and gathered from all the countries whereto they have been sent, are we not forced to believe that such a promies will be literally fulfilled? Most assuredly we are. As we all know, Solomon soon became disobedient to the Lord, and married strange wives, and served other gods. So the Lord said to him: "Forasmuch as this is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant, and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy servant" (1 Kings 11:11). Soon after this the ten tribes of the children of Israel were carried away captive by the king of Assyria and scattered among all the nations. The remaining tribes were also carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar into Babylon. Many years after this captivity, some of them were permitted to return, but not all.

The chief glory of Israel ended with the reign of Solomon. The kingdom was thenceforth dismembered. Ten tribes of which Ephraim was chief, separated and formed the kingdom of Israel. Judah and Benjamin alone remained faithful to the house of David. Most of the Levites, and many out of the other tribes who feared God (2 Chron. 11:13-36) adherred to Judah. Jeroboam, the first king of Israel, knew why Solomon had been rejected, and yet he established a system of idolatry at Dan and Bethel. The people shared his feelings, and ever afterwards idolatry became a part of the national religion. All the kings of Israel were depraved and the nation copied the conduct of their kings, refusing all reproof. At the captivity, the land was settled by people from the region of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers. A cloud of mystery has ever since hung over the fate of the ten tribes. Very different was the destiny of Judah. Of twenty kings, all descendants of David, who for 388 years held the throne, six are mentioned with great praise, while others are commended. Four were fearfully wicked, introducing idolatrous worship into the temple itself, and filling Jerusalem with blood. After the captivity of Judah, the country was not colonized, thus leaving the land free for the people to return.

We must not forget that the ten tribes of Israel were carried away captive by three or four successive kings of Assyria 740 B. C. (1 Chron. 5:26; 2 Kings 15:29), and 721 B. C. (2 Kings 17:6), and 713 B. C. (2 Kings 18:13), from which they have never returned, and are often referred to as the lost tribes of Israel, but Anglo-Israelism, as this theory is called, is contrary to the Scriptures, and antogonistic to Ezekiel's plain prophecies concerning Israel. The ten tribes are alluded to by the prophets, as Ephraim, Israel, the house of Israel. "Judah" or the Jews, were carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar into but one country, Babylon, in repeated invasions of Judea B. C. 606-562 (2 Kings 2:14; 25:11; 2 Chron. 36:20; Jer. 52:28-30; Dan. 1:2). Their captivity lasted seventy years, when all that desired were permitted to return. A large part did return. But Israel, or the ten tribes, were never in Babylon, and did not, as we have any account of, return with the Jews from the Babylonian captivity. The fact is, many of the Jews even did not return. Only the tribes of Judah and Benjamin with the Levites scattered among them, inhabited Palestine in the days of the first advent. We must not forget that the prophets foretold their restoration from Babylon, as well as their restoration from all countries. We must be careful not to confound the two predictions.

Remarks

AFTER RETURNING from Idaho, my next point was Hector, Minn. Here a little history is necessary to make this visit understood. A good while ago a man by the name of Griffith chanced to go to Hector, Minn. This man was a firm believer in the truth, and like all others, he could not keep still, and in his conversation a family by name of Johnson became interested, and five or six of the family were baptized. After a few years they wanted a meeting and not knowing who to call upon, they wrote the Editor of The Restitution, and he referred them to the writer. In due time I received a letter from Brother A. R. Johnson, requesting me to come and hold a meeting; but it seemed that the time and opportunity never came. In the meantime Brother Johnson made a couple of trips to Omaha on business, and called on us, and in this way we became acquainted. Brother Johnson's daughter was to be married on the sixth. They asked me to officiate, which I did. I arrived on the noon train, and after dinner the young lady who was to be married, said, "I want to go to the lake and be baptized." So we got in her father's car and were driven twelve miles to the beautiful Lake Ellie, where we performed the ceremony that made Sister Johnson a member of the Bride of Christ. The next day she became an earthly bride. I was requested to preach to the guests, who seemed to be quite interested.

The next day I was called to instruct a young lady whom Brother Johnson had succeeded in interesting in the truth. After a couple of lessons she phoned and said she was ready to be baptized. Again we went to the Lake, where we planted Sister Esther Peterson in the likeness of Christ's death. In the evening after preaching service we organized a Berean Society, and we predict a lively class. One week's stay with Brother Johnson was pleasant. The weather being fine during the day he drove us over the country, and showed us the fine farms of Minnesota. We found these people well posted, and fully decided to themselves from the world. Old Sister Johnson is above the average in ability, and has a wonderful knowledge of the truth. I was much impressed by the knowledge of the two young ladies baptized, and am persuaded that they will be a valuable acquisition to the church, and how much we need such characters' When in their presence we feel the very air laden with the perfume of spirituality, and in these days of indifference the life of the church depends upon this.

Just now I am at Laird, Colorado, where in August I baptized a few; and I am truly gratified as I find them refusing to take part in the things of the world. What do you think of the courage of these young people when asked by their teacher to join certain worldly societies? They refused, and when asked the reason said, it is against our belief. This aroused the curiosity of the teacher who asked, "What church do you belong to?" I suppose they thought when the churches were filled with worldly people, that for anyone to stand out was a new thing. When I found my children walking in the truth, and refusing to take part in worldly things, my heart was so filled with gratitude it was hard to suppress the tears. But this is what the church needs and must have if she is ready to meet the Bridegroom.

The time came to bid these people good by, which we did, after promising to return at a convenient season.

We went to Minneapolis to visit our nieces who just a year ago I visited and baptized. A Miss Olson, who was the bride's maid at the wedding, lives there; and my niece called her up and invited her to take lunch with us. We hope they will become companions, and that Miss Olson will sometime be in the faith. For the present my work being finished, I took the train and was soon speeding south.

Our next point was Gifford, Iowa, where lives Brother Anderson who was baptized some three years ago; he is a young man of sterling worth who has employed his time in the study of God's word and is a valuable aid to the class at that place. All knotty questions are referred to him for solution, and he generally solves them in a very efficient manner. A year ago I held a meeting at Beeman, twenty miles east, where his parents live, and on Thanksgivng Day baptized his mother, brother and sister. Gifford is my old home. The town site was at one time my grandfather's farm. When Brother Anderson wrote me to come, another brother and sister had deceided to come into the fold. We came at once. Mrs. Adams' mother also lives there: she deceided to visit her at the same time I was there. Here we visited old friends, travelled the same roads crossed the same streams where we had lived in our youth. While in a sense this was all pleasant, yet accompanied with sadness for many familiar faces were gone. Just across the road from the cemetery, where so many of Mrs. Adams' people are sleeping, stands what is known as the Old Shepherd Church. Here we preached each evening to a good audience.

Just here I must digress a little. As mentioned before one of those baptized a year ago was Brother Anderson's sister, who was a Red Cross nurse in France; and after her return was employed in the Deaconess hospital of Marshaltown. She had interested another nurse, Miss Hattie Hunt. When the day was set for baptism, she phoned that she would be there in time, and would be among the number buried in baptism. While this was good news, the greatest surprise was yet to come. Sister Campbell came to me and said, Do you know that your mother-in-law has gone to get her clothes, and expects to be baptized with the rest? When I told my wife her mother's intention, she broke down and wept for joy. I have had the satisfaction of baptizing a good many people, but this was the most impressive scene of my life work. She is the oldest one I ever led into the water, lacking just a little of 82 years. As I led her into the water, taking each step with caution, as her eyes are dim with age, it was truly impressive. There were not many dry eyes among those who stood on the banks of the river. As we stood in the water Brother Anderson took a picture which, if time lasts, will be prized as an heirloom.

Yet another surprise awaited us. Brother Anderson longed and prayed that his father and one remaining brother, the only two of the family out of the fold, might also come in; so on the last day of my stay there, Brother Anderson called me and said his father had told him he would be there in the afternoon. We had to again go to the Iowa River, and baptized Brother Anderson in the clear water. That evening we all drove to New Providence, an old quaker town, where they had granted us the use of their commodius church to talk on the league of nations from a Bible standpoint. We had a fair sized audience, and splendid attention. At the close of this service the pastor told us that be believed every word of it.

The following morning after having said good by to the household of faith and friends, Wife and I turned our backs upon the scenes of our childhood and were soon homeward bound, arriving a few minutes before five in the evening. Here we remained two days at home when in response to a telegram I hastened away to Laird, Colo., to engage in a twelve day's discussion, and here we are now defending truth against error. The verdict of the outside world already is that my opponent is badly worsted. Again we say to the brethren who are waiting, to be patient. Some one must wait, but your turn will come in the due course of events.

ALMUS ADAMS.

GOLDEN TEXT: Isiah 9:6, 7.

YOU BE A SANTA CLAUS

WHEN CHRISTMASTIDE with its joy returns
  And the great yule log on the hearthstone burns,
Think of the little folk Santa forgot,
  Who toys and goodies and playthings have not.
Think of the tears and eyes held wide,
  With disappointment they fail to hide;
The lips that tremble and murmur, too,
  "What use are dreams if they don't come true?"

Why can't we answer some childish prayer,
  By playing we're Santa and giving a share
Of our own good cheer and Christmas toys
  To gladden the hearts of girls and boys.
Let's dry the tears and make them smile,
  If only just for a little while;
It's the kindliest thing that we can do,
  To make their poor little dreams come true.

What if some day you, too, were poor,
  And the wolf came howling at your door,
At Christmas time, and your little ones cried
  For things you knew must be denied.
Wouldn't you feel the world should know
  And comfort the babies whom you loved so;
Wouldn't you thank someone who knew
  And who cared to help make dreams come true?

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS

DEAR YOUNG READERS OF THE RESTITUTION:

FIRST, I must wish all readers—young, aged, or middle aged—a Merry, Merry Christmas. May it be the happiest you ever have known! I feel quite sure you all are going to be happy—extremely happy— for long ago you learned the great lesson that happiness comes only to those who strive to bring happiness to others.

Here we are almost on the eve of Christmas Day, that day which spells gladness to many children and sadness to many others.

Our boys and girls no doubt find it hard to realize that such a day as Christmas could possibly be a sad day for any one, but still it is true that to many Christmas brings neither gifts nor joys. I know, however, what warm hearts your all possess and how sincere you are in your desire to spread the real Christmas spirit.

Of course we all know who "Santa Claus" is. Our education has been of the class to drive out all superstition, "Santa Claus" with the rest; so when in our poem at the head of the page ("You Be Santa Claus"), we ask you to be the Christmas saint. We simply suggest that you enter the home of some poor family and make the children—parents, too, if possible—happy by presenting them in the name of Jesus whose birth we this day celebrate, with some gift; some Christmassy thing they could not buy for themselves.

If you but knew what was in my heart and mind at this moment, were it possible to call you together and have a real heart to heart talk with you and get you to act on the sentiment I would suggest, your fathers and your mothers would be wearing a broad, happy smile on account of your good deeds and Christian acts. They have given you according to their means, of the things you wanted and worked for, and why? To make you happy. You may not realize it now, but it is true that of all worldly gladness which later years may hold for you, there will be few more real than this.

Do you want to know the secret of your now great happiness? It is, as we before said, because you have learned the lesson taught us by him whose birth we celebrate in the keeping of Christmas Day. The only way to be happy is to make others happy; and we want you to so act that the happiest boys and girls in all of this great country of ours will be the boys and girls who read The Restitution.

Once more I wish you all a Merry, Joyful Christmas, and Sister Donaldson joins me in this.

ALEXANDER D. DONALDSON.

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS DAY

Listen, dear friends, and I will tell you about the very first Christmas Day.

It was in a country across the sea, far away from here, that some shepherds were watching their flocks one night. The sheep were resting on the grass, the little lambs were fast asleep beside their mothers, but the good shepherds were not asleep: they were watching that no harm should happen to the sheep.

Perhaps they were looking up at the stars and the beautiful moon, when suddely there appeared a wonderful light in the sky, much brighter than either the moon or the stars, as if the sky had opened and they saw the glory beyond.

While the shepherds wondered what was the cause of that strange light an angel said unto them. "Fear not: behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be all people." "This day is born a Savior, and ye shall find the babe lying in a manger." And suddenly the angel was joined by a multitude of the heavenly host singing praises to God, and this is what they sang: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men."

When the angels had returned to heaven the shepherds went to Bethlehem to see this Savior of whom the angels sang, and found him, a little baby, in a stable, with no cradle to lie in; only a manger for his bed. That little baby was Jesus, and although his birth was so humble some day he shall be King of kings and Lord of lords. It was he, who when grown up said, "Let the little children come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." His birthday was the first Christmas Day and each year since we celebrate one day each year in honor of his glorious birth.

AGNES LINDSAY.

DEAR YOUNG PEOPLE:

DID YOU ever stop to count up God's Christmas gifts to you? Begin now, and as you live through every day you will find new gifts added to your store of blessings. But the Father's gifts are not always to be seen with mortal eyes nor heard with mortal ears; neither can they be tasted or felt or smelled, for they are spiritual gifts of truth, faith, love, life, joy, and every good that we ever thought of. And these heavenly gifts in turn, give us the power to receive and understand and know all the good things that really come into our lives every day. Without our spiritual gifts we never would be able to enjoy all the good we experience. So we can thank the Father best by using his gifts to us as he wishes us to.

Lovingly your friend,

ETTA (Mrs. A. D.) DONALDSON.

TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE:

O wondrous Babe of Galilee!
Pure milk of love divine brought he
To feed the striving world of old,
And cleanse all men from greed of gold.
Today we need this message: pure
As little children we must be
To catch the cord of love divine
And feed again humanity.

KITTY CHEATHAM.

BROTHER AND SISTER A. D. DONALDSON

Wish thee that which thou canst not take thyself;
Long life, the grace of God, and perfect health,
If thou hast these thou canst wish for nought beside.
Give God the thanks, for 'twas he who did provide.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, DECEMBER 21st, 1920. NUMBER 17

Flowers to the Living

Let us strew flowers in the pathway
  Of the living, not after they're gone,
When their eyes are closed to their beauty
  And they are resting in the silent tomb.

Let them be wet with the dew of love,
  As pure as the dew at morn;
Let them be sprinkled with kindness,
  The kind without a thorn.

And to come from within their petals,
  A picture fragrant with hope,
That will give us a clearer vision
  When we look through life's telescope.

So many are heaped upon caskets,
  Could we see the joy and the smile
If given in life with a blessing,
  It would then be so well worth while. Selected by Sister Groves.

Two persons will not long be friends if they cannot forgive each other's little failings.

The Man of Sin Identified

The Crimnal Definitely Identified by Prophetic Marks: By Brother John Parker

TO THE EDITOR OF THE RESTITUTION:

SOME ONE has written me: "Do you believe that the pope of Rome or catholicism is the man of sin of 2 Thessalonians 2:3?" Thinking that the subject may be of general interest I propose to give my views on the question.

When we turn detective and wish to identify a criminal we must follow the proper methods. First we must have his picture, a photo, if possible; if not, then as good a word picture as we can get. We must learn what he looks like and how he acts. His name is very important. Here there is a difficulty, as a criminal generally has many names

In this letter I can only deal with a few. In 2 Thess. 2:3 Paul calls him "the man of sin." In verse 7 Paul calls him the mystery of iniquity and tells us that he was already at work in his day. Turning to John first epistle we find that he is called the antichrist; and that Christians had already heard that he shall come.

But John goes still farther when he tells us that already there are many antichrists. This is very important, for from what John tells us we learn that what we wish to identify may be one individual or it may be many. Paul and John agree on one point, that is, that he was at work in their day.

The theory that holds the antichrist is one single individual that is to appear in the end of this age, must be set aside, for if he was at work in Paul's day, he would now be about two thousand years old.

A good detective not only gets all the information possible, but he generally has a "theory." Few theories are sometimes wrong, still they serve useful purpose as they help to give system and method to our inquiry. Now in my effort to locate the man of sin, I have a theory, and I intend to follow it until I learn of a better one.

MY THEORY

My theory is very simple and may be stated thus: There are only two men in this world: the Man of Righteousness, and the Man of Sin.

All the brethren are familiar with the individual Christ, and also with the Christ body with its many members. Now I apply the same thought to the man of sin: there is an individual man of sin; there is also a sin-body with many members.

Oregon Bi
Oreg

The members of the Christ body begin with Abel and continue on down through the ages until the manifestation of the sons of God at the end of this age. The members of the sin-body begin with Adam and continue on down through the ages till destruction is reaped prior to the reign of Christ.

Now following this thought we find that many members of Christ appeared before the Head was revealed in the individual Christ Jesus. Our theory requires the same to be true of the man of sin. Sin was in the world long before it was reduced to an organized system under a recognized head. Especially is this true of sin under its name antichrist (opposed to Christ). Christ himself must first appear before the opposing forces can be organized against him.

APPLICATION OF THE THEORY

The man of righteousness (the individual Christ) was betrayed by one whom he had intrusted with the truth. Judas was a chosen apostle; he worked miracles, healed the sick, raised the dead, and cast out devils (Matt. 10:8). Yet the love of gold so disgraced the man that he sold his Master for thirty pieces of silver.

Christ intrusted the truth to the Christ-body (the collective man of righteousness) for a time. These did well, but in the course of time evil men crept in; men who supposed that gain was godliness. They betrayed the true Christ-body for gold. I charge the church of Rome with being the greatest money collecting organization in the world. They not only bleed their victims while living, but follow them after death, and rob them in the grave.

Again, the individual Christ was murdered in the house of his friends.

The church of Rome claims to be the house of God, the pillar and ground of truth. And yet the collective Christ-body has been murdered in the house of Rome. I charge the church of Rome with being drunk with the blood of the saints. Those who have read of the methods followed by Rome in her dealings with heretics, will see the similarity to the manner in which the Jews treated Jesus. Rome's method always was to subject the saints to a mockery of a trial and then hand them over to the evil authorities for execution. Just as the Jews handed Christ over to the Romans.

Again, the individual Christ-body was buried in the tomb, but rose again the third day very early in the morning. The collective Christ-body has lain for two (thousand year days) in the tomb. We are looking for a resurrection on the third day very early in the morning.

Again, the Jewish church was intrusted with the Scriptures that are able to make wise unto salvation. They made them void through their traditions. The church of Rome was intrusted with the Old and New Testaments, yet they make them void through their traditions. I charge thee church of Rome with having sinned against the light; they have always had the Bible. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

MOTHERHOOD

Speaking of a neighbor, my wife said to me, "I gave the baby the doll I had bought for her. Well, she was crying when I went in, but when she saw the doll she stopped crying, dropped her rattle, and just grabbed that doll, hugging and kissing it!"

I replied: "You do not mean to say that a little girl one year and a half old knows anything about the meaning of a doll?"

But my wife maintained that it did, though I doubted it.

The following evening I went in to get our usual supply of milk. The lady of the house asked me if I would like to see the baby. She led me to the little crib and there lay the baby fast asleep, the little arms clasped tight around the doll, and the waxed head pressed close to the little rosy lips. As I looked I marvelled. Truly God has made motherhood instinctive in every woman's heart.

Why then does Rome shut up thousands of our young womenhood in prison houses called "convents," forbidding them to marry and commanding them to abstain from meats which God has created to be received with thanksgiving by them that believe and know the truth? When our Lord was born of a woman God sanctified motherhood. Why then does Rome teach that it is the greatest virtue to renounce motherhood for ever?

BLASPHEMY

I am on friendly terms with our local blacksmith who is a Frenchman and a devout Catholic. My curiosity was roused by a peculiar looking pan lying among a lot of old iron on the floor. It was a flat casting with a number of small depressions all over its surface. I enquired what it was used for. The man replied that it belonged to the sisters. Then seeing that I still looked puzzled he added, "the nuns you know."

"Oh," I said, not much enlightened, "but what use do they make of it?" He replied that it was used to make cakes for the priest. Still I was dense and he explained further, "for the priest to make the Mass, you know."

It then dawned on my mind that this was for making the wafers used in celebrateing the mass. This rusty old pan lying on a heap of rubbish in a dirty shop where it was sent for repairs was used to cook the little bits of dough which the priest turns into God by muttering a few words in Latin over them.

HOW ROME DECEIVES

I can understand and sympathize with a man when he reads Christ's words and is told they must be understood in the literal sense: "Except ye eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man, ye have no life in you."

Why then does Rome refuse to give the people the blood? They give the flesh, but the priest drinks the blood himself, thus according to their own reasoning, shutting out the people from life, for the blood is as necessary as the flesh.

ADDRESSING THE JURY

Dear Brethren. I do not claim that only those who belong to the church of Rome are members of the collective sin-body, but I do claim that in the Roman church sin is organized and systemized as in no other body on earth. No other body has sinned against the light as Rome has. She started with the truth and sold it for gold.She has never been without the Bible, and yet she has reduced blasphemy to a science. As a church she was feminine, but when she grasped political power the gender changed: she then became the sin-body with the head the individual man of sin. In so doing she cut herself off from Christ, for a man can never become a bride. The true Christ will never unite with any other political party. Rome is blind; she cannot see afar off to the glory to be revealed to the sons of God. She grasped political power, and thus insured her own destruction.

AN EXHORTATION

Brethren, when you were buried with Christ it was that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth ye should not serve sin. Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death or of obedience unto righteousness?

RELATIONSHIP ACCORDING TO WORKS

The Jews claimed to be the seed of Abraham, but Christ rejects their claim in these words: "If ye were Abraham's seed ye would do the works of Abraham. Now ye seek to kill me, a man that has told you the truth. Such things did not Abraham." If we are to maintain our relationship to Christ we must do the works of Christ. If we serve the lusts of the flesh we belong to the man of sin no matter what we call ourselves. Therefore I beseech you to receive the word of exhortation which is given in love.

The State of the Dead

An Open Letter to Thos. Edison

MR. THOMAS EDISON—DEAR SIR:

I HAVE read with great interest (mingled with regret) of your efforts to produce an instrument by which you may communicate with the dead. I have for many years, regarded you, sir, as one of the greatest and wisest of living men; one who seldom, if ever, fails to accomplish that which he undertakes; and the mingling or regret is due to the fact that at last you are doomed to failure. You will never succeed in communicating with the dead!

How do I know this? Because the word of God tells us in terms so plain that there is no possibility of misunderstanding that when a man dies, he is dead! absolutely and entirely dead! It is contrary to Scripture, reason and experience that a person may be dead and alive at the same time; hence your efforts are, and will surely continue to be, fruitless. Perhaps in your active and superlatively eventful life, the achievements of which all Americas are justly proud, you may have failed to notice what God has said concerning the state of the dead. Please pardon the liberty I take, in calling your attention to the Scriptures, a careful consideration of which may save you much further labor, and final bitter disappointment.

"Man dieth and returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4).

"His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; they are brought low, but he percieveth it not of them" (Job 14:21).

"In death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" (Psa. 6:5).

"For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything; also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished" (Eccl. 9:5, 6).

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest" (Eccl. 9:10).

"They shall be as though they had not been" (Obad. 16).

If, therefore, man's thoughts perish in the day of his death; if his sons come to honor and he knoweth it not; if in death there is no remembrance of God, or giving of thanks; if the dead praise not the Lord, but go down into silence; if the dead know not anything; if their love and hatred, and envy, be now perished; if in the death state there is no device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom; and it be a fact that in the day of death our thoughts perish, and we become as though we had not been; I fail to see Mr. Edison, how you can expect or hope to receive a message from the dead; for even you, sir, must bow to the impossible, and a message from the dead is as impossible as two mountains without a valley between..

Shall we therefore conclude that death ends all? that there is no hope for the dead of Adam's race? that, like the beast, they return not again to their former estate? God forbid! Listen to that triumphant shout of our great leader, the Lord Jesus Christ, as he holds aloft the keys of hades: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (hades) and of death" (Rev. 1:18). "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live" (IJohn 11:25). May God in heaven accept the grateful thanks of a sin-cursed and death-sticken race for this promise. It almost robs death of his terrors as we contemplate the unspeakable joys of that meeting of loved ones on the resurrection morn. Thank God for the glorious promise of a resurrection, and seek not a message from the dead.

We shall sleep, but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn!
We shall meet to part, no never,
On the resurrection morn!
From the deepest caves of ocean,
From the desert and the plain,
From the valley and the mountain,
Countless throngs shall rise again.

S. H. THOMAS.

The Parables of Christ

Number Nine

IT SEEMS necessary that we again call the attention of the reader to the fact before stated, that these parables were spoken to the Jews and not to the Gentiles. We must, in order to rightly interpret them, apply them to the same people. We do not do this when we apply this parable to Christ's coming to raise the dead and quicken the living, but the time when he will appear to his own brethren. This parable has a place immediately following his answer to the question, "When shall these things be?" The answer to this question may be found in Matt. 24th chapter. In the close of this chapter we find Jesus admonishing his apostles to watch, for the Son of Man cometh in an hour in which ye are not looking. He who is faithfully looking will be accepted as a faithful servant. The parable rightfully and logically emphasizes these conditions.

The parabe brings to our minds the same kind of a judgment as we find in the parable of the talents and the pounds, as we have heretofore stated implies the judgment of mortal men. See the one talent servant (Matt. 25:30). This interpretation suits the doctrine of mortal emergence. It ignores Israel's judgment and place in the kingdom of God. It is our purpose to so interpret this parable that it will exactly fill the place designed by the divine teacher.

We observe that this parable is introduced by the same statemnet as many others: "The kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins who took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom." This clause is introduced by the adverb "then," which points to a future appearance of some distinguished person in the character of a bridegroom. This is proof to our mind that it must have a place among the exciting scenes of the coming age. The clause prompts us to give it a place in the kingdom of heaven while it is being set up. This forbids our right to apply it to the close of the gospel age. In brief, we wish to state that this parable has a special application to Isreal's judgment. The number of virgins, we think, has no application except that they were assumed to have a part in marriage feasts that were fashionable in that day. All the virgins were represented to be asleep until awakened by the cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh!" Five of these virgins took time to trim and fill their lamps with oil. Five had their lamps but no oil, which had been exhausted while asleep. The five who carried oil with them that supplied the oil burned up while asleep, represent the servant whom the Lord called a faithful servant. The others are regarded as unfaithful, and were refused a place among the marriage guests. They became subject to the judemnet of the wicked and slothful servant, which was, "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

If we attempt to apply this parable to the resurrection we find much out of joint. Those who make this application teach that the resurrection is merely an emergence from the grave, clothed in our mortality; also that at the judgment seat we are immortalized and rewarded for our faithfulness while in the flesh To such the resurrection is a feature of the judgment of Christ, at which time we are immortalized. The form of the parable as a marriage feast forces us to reject such an application of the parable. The coming of Christ to raise the dead and quicken the living is wholly wanting in the form or make-up of the parable. However, it is logically suited or fitted to Jehovah's purpose concerning his people Israel. Their judgment will be rendered while in the flesh. Ezekiel states, in the 20th chapter, that they will pass under the rod and into the bond of the covenant (margin, "into a delivering of the covenant"). In reading this whole chapter we find that this event takes place after they have been gathered from among the people or nations. In passing under the rod and into the bond of the covenant the rebels will be purged out. After these events the remnant will be fit subjects in the kingdom of heaven. The five wise virgins and the cleansed ones to our mind are identical. The two classes of virgins, wise and foolish, may be identified in the two schools now in existence, the orthodox and reformed Jews. The orthodox Jew is a firmer believer in the personality of the Messiah, but still rejects him as the son of Mary. The reformed Jew rejects a personal Messiah and believes that national Israel will do the work of Jesus and the saints. All will be rebels until they will say, "Blessed is he who cometh in the name of the Lord." The cry now being sounded, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh," has awakened all Israel, and some are now filling their lamps with oil preparatory to their acceptance as wedding guests. It is observable that many are indifferent and satisfied with present environments. Jesus has provided a time and place to meet his national brethren (Jer. 30:7-9; Zech. 12:7-11).

YULETIDE

Heap the holly! Wreathe the pine!
Train the dainty Christmas vine;
Let the breath of fir and bay
Mingle on this festive day;
Let the cedar fill the air,
With its spicy sweetness rare,
Wake the carol, sound the chime,
Welcome, Merry Christmas time!

Remarks

I AM giving herewith a report of the work done during the month of November. The 6th and 7th I had the pleasure of again meeting with the brethren and sisters of Kennard in a study of those things that pertain to life beyond the vail of sin and death.

In the afternoon of the 7th, it being on Sunday, I left Kennard for Oregon, Ill., to attend the meeting previously called. This meeting was profitable in a number of ways. Our work during this month has not been confined to Nebraska and Illinois, but to Iowa as well. At this meetng I am still in Iowa. It is a pleasure to have the privilege of working for the Master.

Let us renew our efforts toward better and more efficient service for our Lord who is now making intercession for us. Let us study our needs and problems and see if they cannot be remedied somewhat. They can be supplied, and remedied if we will only allow our absent Lord to have charge by and through his word of truth. It seems to me that we as a peope should rejoice and be exceedingly glad that we have attained to the favor of God. Let us lay aside the weight that so easily besets us. And let me say this, brethren, the greatest of all weights among brethren is carnality. It proudly stalks among us. Cannot all of us unify our efforts and capture and restrain carnality. The Master comes! I pray that we may study and see that it is to our interest to do so.

T. A. DRINKARD.

Learn these two things: Never be discouraged because good things get on so slowly here; and never fail daily to do that good which lies next to your hand.

Sunday morning, Dec. 5th, Mr. Francis Sykora was baptized into the Father's name. Brother Sykora was formerly a Methodist, but has been a diligent student of the gospel for several months.

The Young Peoples' Society met at the home of Brother Lester Bliss on the evening of Dec. 3rd. There were ten visitors present while twenty-five members responded to the roll call. During the business meeting the Corresponding Secretary read a letter from Sister Wince. The meeting was then turned over to the leader, Brother Harry Titman, whose subject was, "Why the Truth is Unpopular." He brought out many of the reasons why few people are willing to obey God. Song and prayer closed the meeting.

TO THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH SCATTERED ABROAD:

THE CONFERENCE of the Church of God of South Texas met at Kingsville, Texas, Nov. 7th and agreed to put an evangelist in the field beginning Jan. 1, 1921; all agreeing to give $50 per family to get the work started. Now we want to ask all we can to help us in the good work. We are few in number, and poor in this world's goods. We need your help and will appreciate any assistance no matter how small. Send all donations to John Whitley, Kingsville, Texas, and it will be applied on the Evangelist Fund.

We had good meetings, Brother Bradley doing the preaching. Attendance very good, also interest good. Brother Bradley is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. He will soon be seventy years old, but he can present the truth with as much vigor as a young man. His best sermon on the duty of the church to the individual member and of the individual member to the church was very impresssive, and should cause every one to do their full duty.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. W. L. ROBBINS.

"LOVE NOT the world, neither the things in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John 2:15).

With Sister Thomas I want to say, by no means can one be a live, useful Christian and dance. When we understand the truths of the gospel and in baptism put on Christ as our Savior, we also take him as our example or pattern. Can you imagine Christ attending dances, picture shows, and other places of worldly amusements? I am afraid if he had not been truer to his trust than that, you and I would still be without hope and without a Savior.

In thinking back over the life of Christ I can picture him in boyhood, youth, and manhood having a nature like our own, tempted in all things like as we are, yet without sin, always with one thought and one purpose to do the will of the Father. And his sinless life and his cruel death and glorious resurrection has made it possible for you and me to have life eternal.

O let us be true to him! He is our example. Do we want to bring disgrace upon the name we have taken by clinging to the things of the world, or do we want the love of God to abide in us that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father which is in heaven?

Let us pray like David, "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquities, and cleanse me from my sins. Then may I teach transgressors the way, and sinners shall be converted unto thee."

TO MY MANY FRIENDS AND BROTHERS IN THE ONE FAITH:

I WISH to tell you all that I am firm in the faith, not carried away by any wind of doctrine. I am trusting in the King of righteousness and believe that he will soon come back from that far country where he has gone to receive for himself a kingdom and return. I am trying in my weak manner to live so I will hear the "well done."

And when through rivers of sorrow I have been called to go I have trusted him, and his grace has been sufficient for me. Those that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. While from here and there we behold bright spots on the canvas of the ages, we ever dread impending darkness which enshrouds the sun as it sets behind the cloud in the night of forgotten glories. But beyond this there is a new morning, a day of fulness and peace. The rising star gives assurance of coming glory and the age of immortality and blessedness of companionship. We are told that it was needful that the Messiah should suffer so that he might enter into his glory. He foresaw the scene of Gethsemane, but beyond that he saw the paradise and the tree of life in the Crystal City. He heard the moan of the old creation, and sent forth the glad tidings of a new heaven and a new earth beyond. The rivers of death shall cease to flow, while the river of life shall come from underneath the throne with waters of immortality. The voice of sorrow will give way to the songs of gladness. Indeed the world itself shall rejoice amid the prophetic visions of the seers of Israel when fulfilled "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" (Num. 14:21).

As ever your sister in Christ,

CASSIE L. HICKLIN.

EDITOR OF RESTITUTION:

IN LAST issue of The Restitution I find an article which I think opens up a new way for discussing an old question. The writer says the question propounded to him was, "Will the subjects in the kingdom of God be inferior to the bride of Christ?" The answer is yes. The bride in the kingdom age has reached the perfect state; the subjects are the nations still subject to death. Christ and his bride are to rule over the nations and bring them into subjection to the kingdom of God and all who will comply with the conditions will become the children of the kingdom and will be made perfect just as those who comply now will be made perfect in the next age. Adam, "who was a figure of him that was to come," and Eve, who was a figure of the bride of Christ, filled the earth with a race of their kind, mortal; so Christ and his bride must and will fill the earth with a people of their kind immortals. This is the answer in plain words. Type and antitype must agree as well as plain Scriptures. Whether these nations who from their inferior state are finally brought to a higher condition than the nations of past ages as well as this age, is a question of itself. They are inferior at least until they are brought through a probationary state. About this we are all agreed, and this is the fundamental issue. Submitted in brotherly love.

Southern Texas Conference

DEAR RESTITUTION:

THE FIRST annual meeting of the Southern Texas Conference of the church of God in Kingsville, Texas, Oct. 30th, 1920. Preaching at 11 A. M. by Brother A. S. Bradley.

A business meeting was held at 3 P. M. Prayer by Brother E. W. Moses (President) of Houston, Texas. On account of our secretary, Sister Bertie Davis not being present, J. T. Whitley was appointed to act as secretary.

Moved and seconded that the conference ask Brother L. A. Warren, of Jonesborro, Texas, route

2. to become Texas editor for the brethren of Texas to the Gospel Trumpet. Carried.

On account of the attendance being small, and the Riveria brethren not being represented, the meeting adjourned subject to call of preseident.

Preaching Sunday night by Brother Bradley. Our tent arrived on Monday and was erected in time for services Monday night, and preaching continued throughout the week each night at 7:30, and Sunday at 11 A. M. Brother Bradley did all the preaching.

A letter received by Brother Moses from our secretary-treasurer, Sister Bertie Davis, stating that her business was so arranged that she could not attend the conference, and assuring him that if the conference thought best to elect another secretary-treasurer, that it would be agreeable to her.

Moved and seconded that inasmuch as Sister Davis could not be present, and the necessity of the secretary being present, and with all regards for her, the conference elect a secretary-treasurer. Carried. J. T. Whitley was elected secretary-treasurer, for balance of the year. Moved and seconded that brethren of Kingsville and Riveria pledge $50 each to be paid into the treasury as follows: $25 to be paid January 1st; $25 to be paid not later than July 1st, 1921, for the purpose of financing an evangelist in the South Texts field. Carried.

Moved and seconded that the conference instruct Brother Rural Robbins, of Riveria, corresponding secretary, to write the brethren of Gonzales, Texas, in regard to the move we have taken toward financing an evangelist, asking them to contribute whatever amount they see fit; also Brother C. E. Weaver, of Havana, Ark.

No other business, conference adjourned subject to call of brethren.

It was the decision that the preaching should continue over to the next Sunday, however the weather turned cold on Thursday evening followed by rain the balance of the week, there was no preaching after Wednesday night. There were two added to the faith.

J. T. WHITLEY.

The Second Death

IN THE Restitution of Nov. 24th, under the above heading, Brother R. H. Judd presents some ideas to which I must offer some objection. What is meant by the second death? Does it mean that an individual dies twice? If so, what did Paul mean when he said it is appointed unto men once to die (Heb. 9:27)? Paul says he did not shun to declare all the counsel of God (Acts 20:27). Surely Paul would have mentioned the fact if some are to die twice, and especially so since it would be the majority, as we are taught there will be more lost than saved. His not mentioning it must mean there was no such fact to mention.

We will examine a few of the texts referred to by Brother Judd, that to some may seem to prove his theory. He quotes Psa. 9:17, "The wicked shall return to sheol," and goes on to remark that sheol in Scripture signifies grave in its general sense, and that the use of the word "return" implies that they were formerly there. Now I agree with that in a way. Man is of the dust. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19). When man dies he returns to his former state. It does not necessarily mean that he had the form of a man the first time he was in the ground.

Job 21:30-32. Verse 30 and the verses preceding simply teach the wicked are not punished during their lifetime, but are allowed to prosper and enjoy life until their death. Then at the day of judgment they are punished by being left to "remain in the tomb" (verse 32).

Dan. 12:2. In considering this text it is necessary to begin with the first verse. There it will be readily seen, that the Jews are the people meant, since Daniel's people were Jews. The first verse says every one that shall be found written in the book shall be delivered. These are the righteous dead. Continuing the second verse says, "and (also, beside this) many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth (the living Jews who are the children of the people of Daniel, but who are asleep in their knowledge of Christ) shall awake; some to everlasting life (those who accept Christ), and some (who will continue to do evil) to shame and everlasting contempt." Read Rom. 11:26 in connection with this. The same thought is expressed in John 5:28, 29. First read verses 24 and 25. Verse 24 says, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life" (present tense). The opposite would be true of those who do not believe. Therefore those who heard and did not believe were dead. Now read verse 25: "Verily, verily I say unto you. The hour is coming, and now is (present tense), when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." The dead referred to here are the Jews listening to him at that time. The ones in their graves who will hear his voice in the hour that is coming (verse 28) are living Jews (buried among the other nations) who will be regathered at Christ's coming.

I could see nothing in any of the other references given by Brother Judd that I could in any way construe to mean a second dying for any one. All that is necessary is to take each passage in connection with all that pertains to it and it can be easily understood.

Now to answer the question, what is meant by the second death? Read Rev. 20:14, "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." In other words, this is the second time the earth is cleansed from sin. The first time it was cleansed by water. Every sinner who has died unrepentant since the flood has died the second death, but has not died twice, and never will. His death is a part of the second death because the earth is cleansed of that much sin the second time. Luke 20:35, 36 says they which are accounted worthy to obtain resurrection from the dead, cannot die any more, but are children of God, because they are the children of the resurrection. Also Rev. 20:6 says, "Blessed and holy is he that has part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power." There are many places that plainly teach the wicked will never see life a second time.

I wish to add that these thoughts which I have attempted to express are not all original with me, but were gained by reading an article written by R. V. Lyon many years age. As he was considered by many to be a deep thinker and a good reasoner, I think they are worthy of consideration.

MRS. A. ORR

Probably we shall have a reply to this criticism from Brother Judd. Further discussion of the subject would be both interesting and profitable.—Editor.

Heresy

RELIGIOUS OPINION OPPOSED TO SCRIPTURE

ANY RELIGIOUS doctrine invented by man that cannot be supported by the word of God, as given by inspiration (2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Pet. 1-20). Among the various heretical doctrines invented by man are the following: That the Bible is not wholly written by inspiration of God; that God has allowed errors to be written in his book: that God is three persons; that Joseph was the father of Christ; that the "Son of God" personally existed before he was born of the Virgin Mary; that the Holy Spirit is a person distinct from God; that man has an immortal soul; that man is conscious in death; that the righteous go to heaven when they die, and live with God forever; that the wicked go to hell when they die, and live in endless torment of fire forever; that the devil is an immortal being; that the kingdom of God is the church; that the gospel is merely the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ; that Christ will not come until the end of the thousand years; that all mankind that ever died will be raised again; that the seventh day sabbath is the gospel; that sprinkling is scriptural baptism; that those that have never heard nor believed the gospel will have another chance in the future; that it makes no difference what we believe if we are sincere in it; that all mankind will be saved; that all out of Christ, the earth, and everything that God created on the earth, will be burned up when Christ comes.

All these doctrines are not scriptural; therefore they are heresies.

Marriage

"Marriage is Honorable in All"

MR. HOMER A. SNYDER and Miss Tressie McChesney were united in wedlock at one o'clock November 24th, 1920, at our home in Argos.

Mr. Snyder is a prosperous young farmer of the Hillisburg neighborhood, and the bride is the daughter of Brother and Sister Nace McChesney of the North Salem church, where she is also a member. These worthy young people start out in wedded life with the best wishes of their many friends. They will live on a farm near Hillisburg. May God bless them in their every laudable undertaking.

Our Glorious Savior

HE WHO redeemed us or bought us with the sacrifice of his own life gives us as our prophet or teacher, wisdom by his gospel, and himself as our helper and priest. He first justifies us and then sanctifies or consecrates us as his under priesthood; and finally as King he will further deliver the faithful from the dominion of sin and death to the glory, honor, and immortality of the divine nature; for God will raise us from the dead also by Jesus. Praise God for such a Savior! Truly he is able and willing to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him.

2 COR. 6:17

Those who conscientiously live separate from the world in spiritual matters and recognize as brethren only those who confess to circumcision of the heart and adoption by baptism in Christ and in God's family, will find themselves opposed by moralists, liberalists, and higher critics as well as by the masses who hate the light because it condemns their darkness, doctrinal and otherwise; nevertheless this is the only safe course to pursue. Better far is it that only true Israelites should be recognized as brethren, and thus the true wheat separated from the tares.

Obituary

Death in Adam; Life in Christ

EMELINE C. WAGONER, daughter of William and Mary Wagoner, was born November 17th, 1830. She was married in 1858 to Thomas Moore, and to them were born three children, Ira Oliver, Ida, and Bruce. These have all been dead for several years.

She was baptized some fifty years ago by Brother Shaffer. She was a sister of the late Brother J. F. Wgaoner, well known to the church of God in Indiana and throughout the country.

After years of suffering she passed away at the home of her sister, Lucinda Cook, near Rochester, Ind., December 7th, 1920. She leaves three sisters, Mary A. Russell, Elizabeth Richter, and Lucinda Cook, and one brother, Samuel Wagoner, and other relatives to mourn her loss.

Funeral services were held in Athens at 10:30 December 9th, 1920, and Sister Moore was laid away in the near cemetery to await the coming of Jesus and his resurrection to incorruptibility.

GOLDEN TEXT: Proverbs 21:13

TOMORROW

God would not have us think about tomorrow
  As of some cloud that lies
  Before our anxious eyes
And fills our hearts with dread of coming sorrow.

How can we tell? The sun may shine more brightly
  Than it has shone before—
  I know life holds in store
More good than ill for those who view it rightly.

And he, whose hand is always wisely guiding,
  Can only give his best
  To those who wait and rest—
Through all life's need in his great love confiding.

"I AM MEEK AND LOWLY IN HEART"

AN EMINENT politician recently travelling through the country was telling his audience his sympathy for and interest in the poor working man when one of his hearers asked, "Is there a single man whom you meet as an equal or as a friend, who wears overalls, and has callouses on his hands?" The query was puncturing but entirely fair.

Too many of our so-called church leaders of today are of the same sort as the above named politician. They have theories, but that is all they do have. They talk a lot, but they seldom act. Right here is where Jesus parts company with all such leaders. He was not a Buddha, sitting apart from and repudiating life's actualities; on the contrary, he had all the experiences common to the lot of the ordinary individual. He shared them all. "He was tempted in all points like as we are," but different from us: "he had no sin." Every one of man's infirmities touched his understanding heart: lonliness, weariness, hunger, thirst, misunderstanding. It was a heavy yoke his shoulders bore. In his work on earth we find Jesus subject to all the rebuffs and burdens, as well as the pleasures and joys of the life of a true minister to flesh and blood folk.

The fellowship of the Master with the common, every-day run of humanity places him in a class peculiar to himself. He was a mechanic. We find him debating with the leaders in the temple; he was accused of associating with publicans and sinners, and "as a lamb he was led to the slaughter, yet he opened not his mouth."

To be great is to be misunderstood. Every age has demonstrated this. Even the prophet who previously had shown such strong faith in Jesus now began to doubt and wonder as to whether he might not have been mistaken. So John—the cousin of Jesus—sent representatives to ask whether the man from Galilee was the "one who was to come," or whether they should look for another.

When his authority was questioned—and here is a suggesion of value to the rest of us—Jesus did not enter into a long, heated defence of himself. He simply pointed to his life and his work. If his character and conduct did not vindicate him, nothing else would. "Go and tell John what you see and hear," replied the Master: "blind eyes receive sight; criples walk; lepers are cleansed; deaf ears hear: the dead are rasied to life; and the poor have the gospel preached to them."

A certain degree of disregard of public opinion is necessary for either peace of mind or power in service. Jesus learned that no one can satisfy the ever changing mind of the crowd. "Crucify him!" followed close on the echoed shouts of "Hosannah!" The only safe rule to follow is to do as Jesus did. He lived only for the eye of "the Father who seeth in secret." There is no compass for life's voyage like the determination to follow the will of God, whichever way the wind of popularity may blow.

When on earth Jesus appeared to the humble, the poor, the oppressed. His invitation was, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and you will find rest for your souls."

Misunderstood by the mighty, scorned by the selfish and the sophisticated, disdained by the intellectually proud, Jesus yet finds himself in sympathetic fellowship with the poor and needy, the sympathy seekers, the burden bearers, and all who aspire after heavenly mindedness. These are the "babes" to whom the precious truths of Christ are revealed.

JAMES WRITES A LETTER

Dear Brother Donaldson:

I TAKE great delight in reading the Young Peop Page of The Restitution. It is as its heading states "a department for the edification and entertainment of youth." I have committed to memory the memory verses (Micah 6:8; Titus 2:13), and find them very helpful. I also look up and read the "golden text" each week. I am enclosing an acrostic "The Restitution," which I would like to have printed should you think it worth while, and if you want me to I will send others from time to time.

Your loving friend,

JAMES WRIGHT.

Well, James, we are pleased to receive such an encouraging letter, and thank you for it. We consider the acrostic well worth printing, and you will find it in today's page. We hope to receive many more; we also trust that our young friends when reading it will look up the passages and read them in full. We wonder how many others of our readers have committed to memory verses and read the golden text each week.

AN ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

DEAR BROTHER DONALDSON:

I was very much surprised when I came home from school and picked up The Restitution and turned to the Young People's Page to find you had awarded the prize for the best composition on a Bible theme to me. Thank you. When I read the other good stories I did not think of winning.

I live in the country five miles from the nearest town. There is no one of our faith here. I go to the Iowa conference some years, but can not stay all through. I like the Bible lessons and preaching very much there.

Sincerely yours,

HAZEL B. TITUS.

DEAR LITTLE FOLK:

A WOMAN who felt too poor to give anything at Christmas to those she loved told a friend about it. This friend, who was quite wise and thoughtful, answered: 'You have much to give, no matter how poor you seem to be: you can always give love and truth. No one is poor who is rich in loving thoughts and kindly acts.'

So dear children, you can have every day a Christmas Day if you keep your thoughts stored full of love.

Lovingly your friend,

M. A. HILLYER.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 72 CLEVELAND, OHIO, DECEMBER 28th, 1920. NUMBER 48

Christmas

Christmas Day, so they say,
Is the Son of God's birthday;
By the oxen meek and mild,
In the manger lay the child.

And the angels God did send
To tell it to the shepherd men,
And the angelic host did sing,
"Peace on earth, good will to men."

And the wise men from afar,
Lo and behold, the glorious star,
And followed it o'er hill and dell,
And lo it stopped o'er Bethlehem.

There they saw the infant King,
And their presents they did bring;
Gold and frankensence and myrrh
To the babe on his bed of straw.

Soon again that star will rise,
And behold them from the skies;
We shall see the glorious King,
Who will then salvation bring.

He shall reign on David's throne,
For God said it should be his own,
He shall reign on Zion's hill,
And all the earth with glory fill.

His word shall paradise restore,
And sin and death afflict no more,
Glorious day! soon may it come,
Then God's will on earth be done.

CASSIE L. HICKLIN.

The Punishment of the Nations

A Sermon by the Editor of "The Restitution," and Reported for Publication

THE ESTABLISHMENT of a republic or a kingdom always means war. There are two principal reasons why this is so. First, those who establish a kingdom on the territory of a country to which they belong are called seceders and rebels, and for this offence war is waged upon them. Second, if they establish a kingdom on the territory of another they are called invaders, and for this trespass war is declared. The history of Germany, England, and the United States shows that the founding of a government usually means war. Obviously, then, if God ever establishes a kingdom on the earth, it will cause war. The territory of the earth is already occupied by some government which claims the right of possession. All parts of the earth are already "owned" by some existing government. There is no room for the kingdom of God on earth without infringing upon the rights of "the powers that be." As these powers educate the people to fight for their "territory," setting up the kingdom of God must cause war inevitably.

THE SUBJECT ILLUSTRATED TYPICALLY

The establishment of the kingdom of God under Joshua illustrates the point. From the day that Joshua received the commission to establish it in the land of Israel, it was war, war, and nothing but war. What adds to the interest of this historical fact is that the word "Joshua" is Hebrew for Savior, and that Jesus is the Greek of the same word. "If Jesus (Joshua is meant) had given them rest, then he would not afterward have spoken of another day" (Heb. 4:8). In this text Jesus means Joshua. He was a type of Christ. The antitypical Joshua, Jesus, is to be a warrior. Now if Jesus is to be a warrior, the saints who are to be "like him" (1 John 3:2), will likewise be warriors. Jesus, in jointure with his saints and Israel, is to destroy the nations. As the idea that Jesus will be a military chief is to some probably a new idea I will read from Luke 1:69: "And hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy propheta since the world began: that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us . . . . that he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve him without fear."

In this Scripture it is said twice that Jesus is the horn of David to save the Israelites "out of the hand of their enemies." Now you are aware of the fact that Jesus at his first coming did not fulfil the requirements of this prophecy. Instead of him saving Israel from their enemies, and from the hand of all that hated them, their enemies cast a trench about the Holy City (Luke 19;43, 44), and there was great distress in the land, and wrath upon the people (Luke 21:23). All the sins of the past were harvested in that generation (Luke 11: 51). The military work of Christ will be accomplished by him at his second coming.

JESUS AS A WARRIOR

"The Lord is a man of war: the Lord is his name" (Exod. 15:3). To fulfill this prediction Christ must do a military work; and if he does a military work he will interfere with the nations. Yes, Jesus is the "Lion of the tribe of Judah" (Rev. 5:5). Here we have militarism in a symbol. "Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, and with it he should smite the nations." In righteousness "he doth judge and make war" (Rev. 19:11, 15).

But the military career of Christ is indicated sometimes in plain predictions of the word of God. For instance: "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt. . . . . And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcast of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth" (Isa. 11:10-12). The restoration of Israel under Moses was from Egypt only, but the one under Christ is to be "from the four corners of the earth." Such a restoration has never happened, but it will be accomplished at the second coming of Christ (Acts 3:20-24). Then he will "set up an ensign for the nations." The word "ensign" means a flag. "Shall set up a flag for the nations"! When he does this he will deliver Israel from all his enemies, and the Gentiles shall seek his rest. When God sets his hand "the second time," and restores Israel from the "four corners of the earth," establishes once more the kingdom of Israel, and has lifted up an ensign to the nations, then he will fulfill the prediction of Luke 1:69.

THE SAINTS AS WARRIORS

The saints at the second coming of Christ, following "the Lamb whithersoever he goeth,' will also become active in militarism. Forbidden now to take the sword, then saints will be "given power over the nations" (Rev. 2:26). This means that they then will be commissioned to fight. So Christ himself says in John 18:36. "My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world then would my servants fight." Let us pause and realize this fact fully. "The whole armor of God," for the present, is "the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God" (Eph. 6:3). Many people think this is the only sword the saints will ever wield. We are non-combatant now, rounding out a perfect character. But Paul says in 2 Cor. 10:4, 5 that after we have fulfilled our obedience, we shall be "ready to revenge all disobedience." Paul looked away from the sins of the present to the avengement of all wrongs in the future. Judgment will then be administered in righteousness. Psa. 149:5 does not read like the gentle wooings of the gospel; it means political interference. "We shall bind their kings with chains, and nobles with fetters of iron, and execute upon them the judgment written: this honor have all the saints." "To him that overcometh will I give power over the nations," is the promise of Christ in Rev. 2:26, if we overcome. Submissive as a lamb, Christ was crucified on Calvary; he is coming back as "the Lion of the tribe of Judah." The saints, innocent as lambs, have been martyred by thousands. These beheaded souls John saw raised from the dead; he also saw "thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them" (Rev. 20:4).

ISRAEL ALSO WARRIORS

As to the instrument by which Christ and the saints will carry on their military operations, we read in Micah 4:11-14: "Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass: and thou shalt break in pieces many people." This statement is made concerning the Jews. Evidently we are not through with despised Israel yet. Israel after the flesh is to be the military power of the last days. Jesus Christ will be the commander-in-chief; the saints subordinate officers; Israel after the flesh compose the army. "The remnant of Judah shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a lion among the beast of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver" (Mic. 5:8, 9). The Jews are to play an important part in militarism at the end of this age. Listen to Isa. 60:12: "For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." Israel is coming up; Gentiles are going down. "Judah shall fight at Jerusalem, and all the wealth of the nations round about shall be gathered to Jerusalem" (Zech. 14:14). The Gentiles will be robbed of their wealth by the Jews when God sets his hand "the second time" to restore them, just as the Egyptians were robbed by them in the first exodus. With all the world's wealth in their hands "Judah shall also fight at Jerusalem." Then will Jer. 51:20 find fulfilment: "Thou art my battle ax and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms."

WHY GOD DESTROYS THE NATIONS

From the testimony of the word now before us we see that it is the purpose of God to destroy the nations through Israel. Christ is to assume a military attitude towards the powers that be; the saints are to become combatants; Israel will become soldiers. But why does God destroy the nations? Well, demerit goes before destruction. God predicts a military alliance among the nations in the latter days, and warns his people to keep clear of international leagues (Isa. 8:9-11). He says the spirit of frogs, that is, of France, will gather all the kings of the earth for war (Rev. 16: 13, 14). The large standing armies of the nations show how their hearts are failing them, and with what anxious anticipation they look into the future. As these anxieties multiply, alliances and leagues and confederations will become more and more the fashion, nursing the hope of protection from these "scraps of paper." Confederation concedes fear of a threatening opponent and at the same time deludes with the idea of strength. The result is, confederate opposition of present governments to the establishment of the kingdom of God. Ezek. 38 shows that the king of the north comes down against the king of the south and against Israel peacefully occupying Canaan; and in the later part of the chapter the prophet shows how God destroys all these earthly governments, and sets up his own kingdom on his own land. For arrogance and presumption he "smites the nations." Their interests are diametrically opposed to the interests of Christ and his kingdom. "The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord and against his anointed" (Psa. 2:2). Confederate opposition to the King which God sets on the Holy Hill of Zion results in this decree: "Ask of me and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." The nations have corrupted God's word, enslaved Israel, and martyred his people. God will soon break his long silence in the heavens, and come forth to "punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth." He will abolish the nations from the earth like unclean beasts, be glorified in his people, confound the moon, put the sun to shame, and be glorified before his ancients on mount Zion (Isa. 24:21-23).

Good Company: a Serial Article

A Collection of Friendly Talks on Bible Subjects: By Brother S. H. Thomas

WORLDLY LOVE—MARTHA

SISTER MARTHA says: "I certainly love Mrs. Jones; she is so good to me; she praises me and says such nice things about me, and gives me such nice presents, and in fact seems to think more of me than any other of her numerous friends. Then, too, she is so jolly and full of fun. There is always something doing when she is around. I know she does not believe the Bible is really the word of God. She thinks it just a good old fashioned book, out of date, consisting largely of old time fables and fish stories, and not to be taken seriously by modern enlightened people. She admits that she does not know much about God, or his purpose, and thinks that the chief aim of this life is just to have a jolly good time, and not worry about the hereafter. She says that the great majority of mankind are after a good time and are content to let God run things as he pleases, just so he does not bother us; and she says she will take a chance with the crowd, and then whatever happens she will have lots of company, and she thinks she can stand it if the crowd can.

"Of course I cannot agree with her on these points, but I never knew anything very bad in her, and she is so good to me that I just cannot help but love her more than other friends I have. Of course I am careful not to broach these unpleasant questions, and I always avoid argument, as I do not want to offend her. Some day, perhaps, I may have a Bible talk with her, but really there seems to be no suitable time for such dry subjects as God and his truth. There are always so many pleasant and more interesting things to talk about. I tell you it never gets dull when Mrs. Jones is about, and she always finds time to give some little attention to me, and seems to prefer me to any other of her friends. She is the very dearest friend I have and so jolly and full of fun —just keeps everybody laughing all the time."

This, dear ones, is worldly love. Its roots are planted deep in the flesh. Its foundation is selfishness and vanity. This kind of love is carnal, and belongs to sinful flesh. It comes not because the subject is noble or worthy, but because "she is so good to me," and because she is full of fun, and able to make people giggle and laugh.

SCRIPTURAL LOVE—MARY

Mary says: "I love Mrs. Berea. We have never been very intimate, but whenever in her presence, I cannot but admire her pure language and noble sentiment. She seems always to be on the side of right, and always proud to acknowledge in any company that she believes and reverences the Bible as the word of God. If this confession brings, as it usually does, ridicule from the giddy and foolish, she replies gently and kindly. I have been present on several such occasions, when she spoke of her belief in the soon coming of Christ, to raise the righteous dead incorruptible, and give to those who live a crown of endless life, to break in pieces and subdue all earthly rule and authority, and upon the ruins of man-made kingdoms of fleshly greed, bloodshed, and injustice to set up a glorious and righteous government, which will fill the whole earth, and last throughout the countless years of eternity; and as she stood meekly and alone, yet so fearlessly before the scoffers, and so gently and bravely proclaimed these grand old Bible truths, so dear to God and our Lord Jesus Christ, I could not but admire and love her, not because 'she was good to me,' but because she loved, honored, and publicly acknowledged the same God that I love and honor and the Bible as his word. Not because she is a good entertainer, and able to make the giddy and foolish worldling giggle and laugh, but because she ever stands ready with wise counsel and wholesome advice, to aid and strengthen the weak and wavering and with words of sympathy, faith, and hope comfort the sad and sorrowful." This is Christian love. Such an affection is pure, true, unselfish, and lasting, for the foundation rests with God.

In conclusion, dear ones, I would ask, How do you love? As Martha, or as Mary? Are your dearest friends chosen as such because they are good to you, or because they are true to God, and the Bible as his word? Your dearest friends are those whose company you most keenly enjoy, those whom you most delight to welcome to your home. Are they of the Martha or Mary class? Do not think this is a matter of little moment. The company we keep, and the friends we choose, matters much to God, and seriously affect our chances of life in the ages to come.

S. H. THOMAS.

Love for Those Out of Christ

A DEARLY beloved sister, notwithstanding the fact that she is constantly laboring to bring others into the truth, is sending out papers and tracts and is ever ready to give of her means, that the cause of truth may be upheld, says in a recent letter: "I have prayed and prayed that my heart might be filled with that love; filled so that it would overflow, both in words and deeds to those that are about me, but it does not come. Something is lacking. I am not the stuff a Daniel is made of."

I want to help her solve the problem as to how she is to attain to this love, without which all else is but "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." Can she get it by praying for it? That has not been my experience, though I am sure it has been one of the factors whereby my heart has been and is being filled with pity and love for the lost. But the prime factor in the case is love of God. We cannot love others as he wants us to love them unless we first love him. To love him is the first and greatest of all commands. On this command all other commands are made to hang. It is the beginning, the foundation, the centre of all spiritual life.

And this love must not be a mere sentiment, expressed only in words. We must love God in deed, as well as in word; must love him with all our heart, might, mind, and strength; and to love him in this way means that we must make his interests in the world supreme; must devote all the faculties of our being to his service; feet must go and hands and brain must work for him. Whether we eat or drink all must be done for the glory of God. Our health must be carefully conserved that we may the better serve him. The gluttonous person, made drowsy and stupid by autoin-toxic poison, cannot fill the high and responsible positions to which "the mighty the great and terrible God" has called him, nor can he who eats improper food, or drinks beverages that derange all the vital organs of the body and put the mind out of commission. Such a person cannot love God supremely, because appetite is more to him than God. Hence the impossibility of the glutton or the drunkard attaining an entrance to the kingdom, unless there is sincere and thorough repentance. There is more truth in the saying that we dig our graves with our teeth, than people are aware, for does not he who does this commit suicide? Is he not a self-murderer, though he may not kill himself intentionally?

God asks for offerings in which there is no blemish. If we truly love him we will give him such. We will not dwarf our physical or mental powers by any wilful, sinful act.

But how are we to have our hearts filled with love for God is as much a problem as to how we are to have them overflow with love for our fellowmen. We cannot until we first get acquainted with him and understand how great is his goodness and love as manifested to usward in the giving of his Son to die on our behalf, that Son loving us while yet sinners and dying for us while we were yet ungodly. It is thinking of this wondrous love and of our own utter helplessness and need, that begets love in our hearts. Were we drowning and some one would risk his life to save us, we would never cease to love him. Jesus has done more: when we could not get rid of our sin, could not escape from the penalty, he took the sin away, washed us in his own blood and presented us to his Father, justified and clothed and saved. Those about us are just as needy as we were, just as ignorant, just as blind. They will die in their sins, if we do not take thought for their need, do not bring them to a saving knowledge, do not open their blind eyes; and this very fact and the thankful remembrance of our own rescue ought to set our hearts aflame; ought to kindle in us a perfect passion for saving souls.

But that dear sister certainly does love her fellow men, or she would not be found working in every possible way to alleviate their suffering and better their condition both temporarily and spiritually. She would not be giving "proof of the sincerity of her love for God," in her bountiful ministrations to the needs of the saints, be earnestly contending for the faith, that others too may rejoice in it and may share with her in the coming glory. Though the lion's den or the fiery furnace confronted her she would not give up her faith. She "knows God's program" and there are no things in this life of great enough value to tempt her to recant. She may doubt her own strength, and may question her love, but her strength is not her own: she stands in the power of God, she loves the stranger as he loves him, in giving food and raiment; she would have all men to be saved if they would but come to God. Her heart aches when she sees them going astray just as mine aches, and before she is scarcely aware she is praying for them, studying how to reach them, pitying them. This love is the love that God requires of us toward the strangers.

BLESS-BLESSING

Bless at its deepest root, means to consecrate by the sprinkling of blood. The "blessed" are the consecrated; the blood sprinkled; the ones whom God has accepted as in an act of worship. The lintels of this doorway into the kingdom of God are blood sprinkled. The "blessed" therefore are the recipients of heavenly favor, the partakers of divine love. Jesus calls them happy and favored by God. They come under the sacrificial blood. They do not need any other reward. To be approved by God is supreme compensation. Whosoever orders his life by the law of God is blessed: he has won earth's supreme boon.

Many a self-made man worships his Creator.

As the old year dies and the new one is born, we wish our readers the greetings of the season, and above all else we wish them stability, progress, and happiness in the service of God during the new year. Cowper has written some beautiful lines which we commend heartily as an appropriate maxim in this season:

> Hear the just law the judgment of the skies;
> He who hates truth shall be the dupe of lies;
> And he that will be cheated, to the last
> Delusions strong as hell shall bind him fast.

Judgment and Resurrection

Number Two

JUDE TELLS us, quoting from Enoch, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince (or convict) all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him" (verses 14, 1g).

This is explicit and positive as to the kind of judgment that takes place when the Lord comes. There is no way to misunderstand the language if we believe it as penned down by Jude. He comes "to execute judgment." "To execute;" to carry through so as to effect; pursue to the end; accomplish; put in force; make operative; as to carry out one's plans" (Standard Dictionary). Paul makes all clear in this language: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent(more properly precede) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:13-17). "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinking of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51, 42). The first quotation declares "the dead in Christ shall rise"; the second, the same "dead shall be raised incorruptible." The first makes their meeting of the Lord take place after their being raised, and hence they meet the Lord incorruptible, and not in mortal bodies as mortal emergenists say. Both quotations make the rising take place at the sounding of a trumpet, or "the trumpet." and hence both apply to one and the same time. Both declare it is "the dead" who are raised, hence, no room is left in the last quotation for a change of living men, who were in the past dead, to be changed to incorruptibility. It is "the dead" who arise first, that is, before the living are caught up to meet the Lord, and it is "the dead who are raised incorruptible." Not any more living men in one instance than the other. Jesus explains that it is for the dead to be raised; to John he sent word, "The dead are raised up." To whom was Jesus here alluding? Those dead whom he raised, or made alive while on earth. All agree here that to raise the dead is to bring them back to life, so Paul is made to say, "The dead shall be brought back to life incorruptible"—if Jesus is correct.

"Thy brother shall rise again." When he arose, what was it? Was it not bringing him again to life? Most assuredly; then again is Paul very lucidly explained. Paul puts it, "that he rose again the third day." Rose from what, Paul? "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and . . . was buried." Then follows the above quoted words, making his rising from death and the grave, and not from mortality to immortality, as our friends try to make Paul state in this same chapter, and in the verse under consideration. There is not a text in holy writ that makes rising, raised, rose, or rise, when used in connection with the word "dead" to mean changing from a mortal, living condition to immortality. Even this one under consideration makes the change o f the living distinct from the raising of the dead. "The dead shall be raised incorruptible, and" (something else takes place: what is it?) "We shall be changed:" who are the "we?" We that are alive at his coming, Paul puts it. One class changed in resurrection; the other while alive, minus death.

But some play much on other passages of this chapter (1 Cor. 15), and we must follow them in their arguments. "So also is the resurrection of the dead: it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body" (verses 42-44). What is sown? Not resurrection, for it is not cast away, or out, to use the language of mortal emergenists. Then what? "The dead," as that is all the pronoun "it" has to fall back on. Then it is the dead that are sown, and the same "it" (dead) that is raised. When are the dead sown cast out? Not before their death, or they would not be "the dead." Then if the dead are to be raised it must be from death, or it could not be said "it" is raised. The "it" makes the one to be raised as dead as the one sown; hence the mortal emergence theory falls to the ground. "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." The "it" then is the dead body. To sow a body is not to make it alive. Such a thought is as foreign to the Bible as the doctrine of the trinity or the immortality of the soul. If the reader thinks otherwise let him find a single instance of such usage in the Old Book. Then why do advocates of mortal emergence use the word here? Because they must have decisive judgment after resurrection! The future judgment being executive does away with all such twisting of the word. As we have shown that one who is living after having been dead is said to be "raised," we know that when Paul says of the dead body "it is raised a spiritual body," it is made alive just that kind of body and no other kind. Thus both the words "sown" and "raised" are opposed to mortal resurrection.

But we are told Paul makes mortal resurrection necessary in this Scripture: "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus crom the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you" (Rom. 8:11). They contend that there is no mortal body from the time the body is decayed till another is made, and that would not be mortal or deathful if it had no life; hence with them our mortal bodies that we now have will never be made alive quickened. But is not this contradictory to what they contend concerning emergence? They say, "The dead emerge in mortal bodies." Who are the "dead?" Are they not those bodies that once lived? If not, then they are no body; then no body will emerge! No body has died if there are no bodies dead. Mortal emergenists agree that man is made of dust, and is only so far as the material of his make up is concerned flesh, blood, bones. If these be all of him then when they are no more, his mortal body is no more. He being the mortal body can no more be than it, and if it can no more be quickened, neither can be; and if a new body is created, a new man also is created Conclusion: our deathful bodies are never quickened; made alive, nor can we ever live again! Then what is it that is said to be "asleep in Jesus," if God considers us out of existence? Do we who go into death go so far out of existence that we cannot be resurrected immortal? If so, then are we not so far gone that we cannot emerge mortal? That is about where mortal emergence would land us. Our mortal bodies cannot be quickened, with them; a new one must be made, and given life to be mortal. Then it is a new body that emerges, and not our mortal body at all that is quickened. What was our mortal bodies when Paul penned those words to the Roman church? Was it not the bodies of the members of that church? Did he not promise them that even though they must die their mortal bodies would be made alive, or live again? It so seems to me. He was answering the old question, "If a man die shall he live again?" To quicken is to make alive, hence those bodies now mortal will be made alive. They may crumble into dust, but God can make them alive, and we can live again. These deathful bodies can be quickened, and the person who dies is he that will be quickened, not another. I could never let the mortal emergent theory drive that blessed hope from me. "Even God who quickeneth the dead," quickeneth whom? some living person? No, no, but the dead. Who of the Roman church are dead? The members who were bodily beings. Th■ they are a part of those whom God quickens—makes alive. And such hope is too good to exchange for a theory that hath not one Bible statement in its favor.

The Parables of Christ

Number Ten

WHEN THE Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory (Matt. 25:31).

THERE SEEMS to be a difference of opinion in the interpretation of this Scripture. One class applies it to this age; another to the closing scenes of the coming age. All agree that a judgment of two classes is brought to view It is claimed that the word "nations" must not be taken to mean political organizations but individual persons out of all nations. It is not claimed that nations will be converted at any time, but individuals representing natio... The application of this Scripture must be in harmony with the prophetic utterances and the teaching of Jesus and the apostles.

We desire to notice carefully the statement. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." The adverb 'then" marks a time alluded to in the mind of the one speaking. It is evident from the Scriptures that this scene did not take place immediately after his coming to raise the dead saints and change the living ones. This judgment is after he has set up his kingdom. It is evident that he can not sit upon his throne when the saints are judged. It is a tribunal judgment. The judgment alluded to in 2 Cor. 5:10 is presided over by Jesus alone: the judgment alluded to in Matt. 25th chapter is when Jesus will sit on the throne of his glory aided by the saints who will accompany him. 1 Cor. 6:2, 3: "Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world?" The following proofs are submitted in support of the above statements: "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory" (Psa. 102:16). The time alluded to in this Psalm is when he builds up Zion. It is evident that the kingdom has been set up and Jesus and the saints are dealing with the nations. Israel has been released from "Jacob's trouble" and judged and purified and become subjects of the kingdom.

As further proof we submit Matt. 19:28. In answer to Peter's question Jesus said, "Ye, who have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." This places the time alluded to in Matt. 25:31 after the judgment of the saints. This is after the kingdom proper has been given to the people of the saints of the Most High. This scene is gaining dominion when the kingdoms of this world are becoming the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ: and he shall reign forever and ever. The kingdom has now reached its greatness under the whole heavens (Dan. 7:27).

Thus far we have tried to be brief in our statements and proofs that the reader may not be burdened with statements and proofs which have a tendency to darken his understanding. Matt. 25th chapter is a judgment of sheep and goats of the classes living when Jesus shall come in his glory sitting on the throne of his glory accompanied by the holy angels, the resurrected saints. No goat can have a standing in the resurrection of the dead saints. Jesus and the apostles apply the resurrection to the saints only. Those who emerge in their mortal state are subject to the second death. The judgment alluded to in 2 Cor. 5:10 distributes rewards to the saints. The resurrection immortalizes them. These two classes are identical with the children of the kingdom and the children of the wicked one, spoken of in the parable of the wheat and the tares (Mat. 13) "His brethren" must belong to the sheep class, as he pronounces a blessing upon them and invites them to a place in his kingdom. This invitation would have no meaning if applied to this age. Mortality still exists when Jesus comes in his glory and gathers before him all nations for judgment. It is not necessary to believe that the nations will be gathered into one general assembly, but that the law has gone out from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. The purpose of this law is to judge among the nations, and rebuke many people. The effect will be that they shall beat their swords into powshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Under these laws they will not lift up sword against each other. It is not supposable that all will become obedient, but that that age will close with the judgment spoken of in Matt. 25th chapter. It is argued by a class that the language here used in giving to the sheep the kingdom is contrary to Dan. 7:27, as the kingdom had been given to the people of the saints of the Most High. We do not so regard it, as the invitation simply implies an inheritance in the kingdom as subjects, and not as rulers. The doctrine of probation in the coming age is based upon the principle of selecting a class who will become subjects of the dominion while Israel has previously become subjects of the kingdom (Dan 7:27). In this judgment the goats have been destroyed by everlasting fire prepared for this class.

Items of Interest

"I SO often notice," writes Sister Rhorda Hanson, "that the isolated members of our church are more ready to fight for the faith which is so dear to them, than those who have church advantages. Why? Please explain it for me if you can."

Sister Ruth Spencer gives the following explanation of Sister Hanson's question: "The Bible, or Waybill is truly a wonderful book; one cannot study too much. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. The more we study the word, the stronger our faith grows, and Rhoda asks why the isolated ones are more ready to fight for the faith than those with church privileges. I think it due to one fact: we isolated ones study the Bible for ourselves, while those with regular services learn to let the preacher express their faith, which fact tends to release them from study. Then when the enemy attacks them they cannot make much of a fight for lack of having on the helmet, especially the sword, the word of God (Eph. 6:17).

Brother Melville Lyon writes: "Anyone who reads the papers cannot help but notice the growing discontent everywhere. People seem to get more greedy and regardless of the interest of others all the time. I try to feel a sense of satisfaction in all this, knowing that all these things must come to pass. Since the war crime seems to be tolerated and even expected and applauded. Spiritist literature seems to be on the increase and gaining as converts some of the most educated men of our time. But since the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, we need not be alarmed at the array of great carnal minds on the devil's side. Yesterday the question was asked, who are the ones called "blessed" in Rev. 19:9. This is a difficult question and perhaps not suited to our discussion, but is interesting to think about."

The answer to Brother Melville's question is taken from Aunt Bess' letter: "'Who are the 'blessed' in Rev. 19:9? Let us take our Bible and read the context for our answer. Rev. 19:7: 'Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb (Jesus) is come and his wife (we who are the saints and are found ready and waiting) hath made herself ready' (for the marriage supper). 8th verse: 'And to her (this wife) was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.' 9th verse: 'And he saith unto me, Write: blessed are they (the wife who is arrayed in white linen, or the saints) which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb.' To some of our letter writers the above was not enough to convince them that those who were called 'blessed' are the saints or bride. To prove this beyond a doubt let us turn to the account of the marriage supper in Matt. 22. In verse 9 we read, 'Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find bid to the marriage.' It is generally understood that those who were bid or called to the marriage, are the saints. So in Rev. 19:9 we are told, 'blessed are they which are called.'"

"Will someone explain John 6:50," writes Sister Ruth Spencer. "What is the bread that we may eat and not die?" This is answered very ably by Sister Ieel Steadman: "The 47th verse says, 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.' The 48th says, 'I am that bread of life,' the 54th: 'Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day.' This last verse means as I understand it, the communion (Matt. 26:28). But first we must be baptized into Christ, then we put on Christ (Gal. 3:27) before we can partake of this communion. Also we must be in the right spirit to take communion."

These questions and answers should be as interesting to the elder as they are to the younger members, for it must be a source of great pleasure to them to know that the youth of our church are giving such serious thought and study to those things concerning the kingdom.

GOLDEN TEXT: James 4:13-15.

NEW YEAR GREETINGS

Be strong: for in this world of toil are loads to bear
And hourly tasks which take the strength of brain and arm,
With days of cloud and foes to fight, for all who dare;
While sheltering love alone can shield the weak from harm.

Be true: for through God's world a law of truth holds sway,
And e'en the flaming stars will light the life that lies,
While to the soul that's true, a joyous peaceful way
Leads forward into night, and life which never dies.

Be kind: for on life's road are brothers wounded sore,
Stripped by the robber hands of sharp adversity,
Who need the smile of friends, the words of cheer and more
The helping hand which lifts the load in sympathy.

Be brave: for to the child of fear come spectres dread,
Crowding the paths which climb the heights of joy and love,
But vanish, when is heard the conquering fearless tread
Of one who knows the fear alone, of God above.

Be calm: for anxious thought and fev'rish haste will blight
With withering breath, the buds of joy and power;
While peace and poise and calm repose will gird with might
And lead to highest gain, with joy for every hour.

Be pure: for Christian faith is mortal at the core,
And only he whose thought is pure, and every deed
Can clearly see, with knowledge growing more and more,
The God who dwells with man, fulfilling every need

PROMISE YOURSELF A HAPPY NEW YEAR

MOST YOUNG people come to think that the future is full of surprises for them. It is supposed to be a sort of Wonder Box, out of which may hop all sorts of pleasant or unpleasant events.

Just how these unattached and irresponsible happenings could have been stored up by some mysterious hand nobody seems to know. The fact is, of course, that the future is empty, waiting to be filled with the products of our time, our energy, our work,

Tomorrows merely are drawn our todays, and are necessary only because today needs more time to complete the work in hand than it can supply. So tomorrow, with its empty, obliging hours, gives the worker another chance to finish the work already begun. But this much must be perfectly plain: the added hours do not, nor can they change in the least the established character of your work. There is no transforming or regenerating power in another day nor another year. Only the builder transforms.

The only possible surprise tomorrow can have in store is this: that the result of our faith and hope, the coming of our Lord and Savior, may be faith and hope no longer; it may be turned into an accomplished fact; or that overwork, or our planning, or even our very characters, may come to their fruit-bearing time during the added hours of another day.

But this fruit must always be of its kind. There is no plucking of figs from thistles, nor grapes from thorns: neither will we be in the kingdom tomorrow if we fail to spend our time and energy in the service of the Master today. There can be no profit from wasted hours.

Whatever tomorrow holds is being determined today, for every tomorrow is cast in today's mold Every desire, every word, every display of temper good or bad every kindly act, every high impulse these are the positive unerring tools that shape the wonderful mold of today; and from this mold every tomorrow must get its form, its color, and its character.

Next year, with its certain, inevitable fruit bearing, is no more of a speculation than is the rule of addition or the law of gravitation; for "whatsover a man soweth, that shall he reap." You have the power to determine what the tomorrow me call "New Year" shall bring to you, and through you to those who look to you as examples and who fashion their daily molds after your actions.

The closing year with its triumphs and its defeats, its joys and its tears, has been, just as the new one will be, almost wholly of our own making. Promise yourself a Happy New Year.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

DEAR FRIENDS:

IN SAYING a Happy New Year we are wishing you something that is entirely in the future. At this writing the old year has still three weeks of life: but many things can happen in that space of time! We trust that whatever happens to you will be for your benefit to the glory of the Father. Happiness is relative. What makes me extremely happy might not have any effect on you, and the same the other way round. But in a few words I am going to tell you what would cause me the greatest joy I can imagine, and I feel that it would also cause joy to you, and that is, the coming of our Lord and Savior. My prayer, my wish, my hope is that before the close of 1921 we all shall be privileged to see the Master in power and glory, and that we shall be with him for evenmore. That my hope may be realized is my thought when I say, I wish you all a Happy New Year.

ETTA (Mrs. A. D.) DONALDSON.

THE YEAR

January brings the pure white snow,
February brings the rain;
In March the rough winds howl and blow,
April brings showers again.

May brings blossoms and leafy trees
June brings roses fair;
July brings days without a breeze,
And August heat and care.

September brings us back to school,
October makes the tree leaves shine;
In November we have the Thanksgiving rule,
And December ends my rhyme.

Aged 10. MARY SYLVESTER.

DEAR COMPANIONS:

SOON WE will say goodby to 1920. Soon the new year will be before us. There will be new things all the time, and my earnest wish is that we all will progress with the times. How often have we succeeded in finishing some task that in the beginning seemed almost too difficult to commence, and yet when we did commence it was pleasant work. Just follow the same rule during 1921.

Let us resolve to have fewer worries and less troubles. The old year was good, and worthy the regret we bestow upon it; but it has served its purpose and cannot longer remain.

But the new year! its secrets are as yet unknown, but of course, you all have made resolutions you intend keeping. Be sure that all mistakes leave with the old year; gone never to return. Each day thank God that he thus far has kept you and pray that he will guide you protect and comfort you and in the end that we all may meet with his Christ in the kingdom.

THOMAS THROCKMORTON.

We thank all those who remembered us with holiday cards of greeting.

DEAR BROTHER DONALDSON:

MY LETTER will be short. How is this for a new year resolution? "I promise to be kind, to be unselfish and considerate; I will try to perform some good act each day." May God help us all to so live.

Aged 12. JOHN T. ENNIS.

Brother and Sister
ALEXANDER D. DONALDSON

wish every reader of this department, of whatever age, or condition, an increase of joy each day throughout the coming year.

A NEW YEAR RHYME

Today a new year is begun,
And new resolves makes everyone.
Our mother says she'll be more coreful
To make the children good and prayerful!
Our dear old dad says he'll work harder
To fill the wordrobe and the larder!
Grandma says she will knit away
And pray for us each night and day!
Our biggest brother says he'll be
More considerate of little me!
Big sister Kate wont be so vain
But romp with us wee folk again!
And all of us small children say
We'll grow much better day by day,
And never fret, nor sulk, nor tease,
But act as nicely as you please.

AMY SMITH.

A BLESSING

ON NOVEMBER 4th, 1920, there was born to Sister Irene Houghton (nee Forman) a little baby girl now bearing the name of Elenor Forman Houghton. Should the little miss in womanhood be as sweet as her mother she shall be sweet indeed.

There are blessings from God all around us,
We must thank him for gifts large and small,
But the gift of a dear little baby,
Needs the very best "thank you" of all.
Mark 10:13-16.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

The year is closed, the record made,
The last deed done, the last word said;
The memory alone remains,
Of all its joys, its griefs, its gains:
And now with purpose full and clear,
I turn to meet another year.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

The Restitution

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 73 CLEVELAND, OHIO, JANUARY 4th, 1921. NUMBER 1

Christmas

Christmas time comes once a year,
With snow and frost and much good cheer;
With kindly wishes for each friend,
May sorrows past all have an end.

The children romp, and laugh, and play,
On each gay, happy Christmas day;
Their stockings hung behind the door,
By Santa filled, each running o'er.

Thus may they spend their youthful life,
Free from care and sin and strife;
And learn from Jesus, "meek and mild,"
The friend and lover of each child.

Yet joys far greater are in store,
When each shall reach that happy shore;
When Christ shall reign in peace and love,
All pure and sweet like heaven above.

J. E. HOGARTH.

The Book of Job Analized

A Biographical, Doctrinal, Astronomic, and Prophetic Exegesis: By Christabel

IN ANALYSING the book of Job, the first requisite is to read it connectedly; at one sitting if possible, when its full beauty and significance will be apparent. In thus doing, we discover at once that it is written as a poem, the imagery and expression being altogether poetical even in the traslation. The two introductory chapters and the concluding portion of the last, alone are prose. It is an unusual poem, one of grandeur and sublimity equalled only by one other, similar in the exalted character of the subject matter, the inimitable Song of Moses; and we are impressed again, as so often before, with the fact that the Spirit frequently employs poetical form to more impressively express the unapproachable majesty, the lofty thought and unsearchable wisdom which are his. For it is the Eternal Spirit himself, "the Inspirer of the ancient seers" who is the real author of this wonderful book, even though the identity of the vehicle through whom he worked has been the subject of much dispute. Adam Clarke inclines to the opinion that this vehicle was Solomon, while another commentator argues for Moses. Still others think the book may have been written by Isaiah, Elihu, or Job himself. Personally, I like to think of it as the composition of the great Law-Giver of Israel, the dignity and beauty of style in so many passages being so like to the majestic verses in the Song of Moses which so exalt Jehovah and abase man. Then too, so general an air of antiquity pervades the whole that it would seem to belong to a time near the beginnings of things rather than to the later period of the kings and prophets. And it may well be that this book was produced during that period of exile in Midian while Moses was preparing himself by study and meditation for his life work as the deliverer of Israel.

The contemplation of such a character as the hero of this poem, and the familiarization of himself with the character and attributes of the great Jehovah as revealed in this work could not fail to leave its impress on the mind of any author, and if this author be of the type of Moses, what an influence it would exert on his whole after life, in his realization of the greatness of God's underived and creative energy, his purity and absolute holiness, his omnipotence and infinite majesty. This book exhibits the relation of Deity to man as that of the potter to the clay, rather than in the more intimate relationship of a Father to his beloved sons, such as the later manifestation of himself at the burning bush prophesied, when as Yahweh Elohim he revealed himself to Moses as the One who would one day be gloriously apocalypsed in a multitude of sons of God, "Morning Stars" which will sing for joy at the consummation of the new creation, even as those others did when the foundations of the material earth were laid.

The identity of one of Job's friends, Eliphaz the Temanite, helps to establish the age in which Job lived, as well as the location of his dwelling place in the land of Uz; for this Eliphaz the Temanite was either the son of Esau or a grandson. Job too, has been thought to be a descendant of Esau and a generation or two before Moses, with whom he may, because of his great age have even been contemporary, since he survived one hundred and forty years after his misfortunes, and must therefore have easily lived through two centuries, an "old inhabitant" in the land of Uz which must have been near to Edom and the Jordan, probably east of the Sea of Galilee in modern Hauran. Of the reality of the hero there can be no doubt since Noah, Daniel, and Job are mentioned together by the inspired Ezekiel as three literal men (Ezek. 14:14), and James refers us to Job as an example of patience worthy of our emulation.

Job is introduced to us in the narrative as a perfect and an upright man, one who feared God and eschewed evil, and in addition to this enviable reputation blessed beyond most in this world's goods, so that he was greatest of all the men of the east, a sort of tribal chief or emir. But notwithstanding this apparently ideal condition Job was not altogether without anxiety, this anxiety being caused by the evidently heedless characters of his sons and daughters who, nevertheless seem to have been an unusually affectionate and united family. This is shown by their birthday gatherings; for each in his turn held such a feast on his day, eating and drinking with the levity usually attendant on such occasions. To what extent this light-hearted gaitey permeated these young people is not revealed, but we may gather from Job's solicitude that they gave more time to pleasure than to the service of God; and this deficiency Job did his best to supply or overcome, for he sent and sanctified them, offering burnt offerings for every one in the morning after each day of their festive gatherings, "For," said he, "it may be that my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts." But alas for a father's prayers, too often unavailing, the children continue in their heedless way until that awful day when their father's heart was broken by the catastrophe which deprived him of them all in an hour.

With this introduction to a good man, we are next given a picture of the council of heaven very evidently allegorical, since we are told in no uncertain words that Jehovah takes counsel with none. So here the character of Job is presented as coming before the angelic host for inspection, with general approval from all but one whose opinion is adverse to the others (hence satan) in that he feels that Job's service to God is a matter of policy purely as would be quickly shown if adversity should overtake him. This conflicting estimate of Job's character was doubtless a true reflection of popular opinion, and is brought before the reader in the poetical form which has been the cause of so much confusion of interpretation. Job's proving is determined upon for his vindication in the eyes of his neighbors: adoring friend or envious or critical adversary. Thus have trials come upon God's children always, for they must be proved for their final perfecting.

And so trials fall upon the earnest servant of God like lightning out of a clear sky, on the occasion of one of the birthday feasts of Job's children. Taking advantage of the confusion caused by a storm of unusual severity, bands of nomadic robbers carried away his oxen and cattle, slaying such of his servants as resisted, a very few only escaped to carry the dreadful tidings to Job, who has barely been informed of this calamity when another lone servant arrives breathless to tell of the fall in the same storm of the house in which his sons and daughters were feasting, and of their death in the ruins. Disaster indeed, but nobly borne by this wonderful man who proves his integrity by uttering those immortal words which have been quoted by bereaved children of God in all ages since: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." In all this Job sinned not nor charged God foolishly, so that this first trial resulted in a complete refutation of his critics who were not, however, entirely satisfied. Yet one might think that with such a triumph over calamity as Job had manifested he would have been sufficiently vindicated to have required no further proof of what a true child of God may be able to bear in faith. But Job's was to be an example of patience, the radiance of which was to shine down through the ages for the strengthening of those who should come after; and so we read that "again there was a day" when the council of heaven sat. How long after the events just recorded, there is no suggestion; maybe a year or more. In the allegory Job's holding fast to his integrity comes up for approval, but the critical angel still maintains his adverse judgment, arguing that Job was afraid to do otherwise than manifest a beautiful resignation to his misfortunes else something worse come upon him. He seems unable to attribute disinterested motives to Job, insisting that policy underlies all his humility. And so a further trial of this already sorely tried man is decreed, this time taking the form of physical suffering; for patience under physical torture is usually acknowledged to be the final and supreme test of integrity.

An aggravating dermititis was undoubtedly the form which Job's malady took, a torturing skin disease which gave him no rest day nor night. In his extremity he sits down among the ashes, suffering agonies of mental as well as physical pain. His wife instead of helping with comforting words and tender ministrations, exhorts him to "curse God and die." Job's answer is a rebuke to everyone inclined to complain at the hardness of his lot: "What ? shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil ?" In all this Job sinned not with his lips. If he rebelled in his heart no one ever knew; if his spirit was bitter within him he showed it not, but bravely bore the anguish for many a long day. Weeks and months went by, and friends and neighbors began to comment on his persistent misfortunes. Job was a great man in the east, and far and wide the news travelled, coming at length to the ears of his three friends. Eliphaz,the Temanite, Bildad, the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, neighboring chieftains, who made an appointment to mourn with him and to comfort him; but when they saw him so altered by disease as to be almost unrecognizable, though they manifested great distress yet they held back and addressed not a word to him for seven days and seven nights, during which time they probably conferred among themselves, speculating upon the probable cause of his reverses, finally concluding that they were the just reward of some secret unrepentant sin, and resolving to admonish their friend for his good. We may picture Job meantime cast from the heights of joyous anticipation of comfort by this visit of his friends, to the lowest depths of distress and anguish by their aloofness and their suspicious glances. At last he can bear no more and breaks his silence with a wail of grief, bemoaning his birth and longing for the quiet of the grave, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." "Wherefore," cries he, "is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul ?" His good friends are horrified at this outburst, and Eliphaz coldly reminds him that in past days he has instructed and comforted many, but now that trouble has come to himself he is ready to faint, his courage has forsaken him. And in words of accusation asks, "Remember I pray thee, who ever perished being innocent ? or where were the righteous cut off ? even as I have seen, they that plough iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same" (ch. 4:7). He argues at length on the power and majesty of the Almighty and the insignificance of man, and exhorts Job to despise not the chastening of the Almighty; "for he maketh sore and bindeth up; he woundeth and his hands make whole" (ch. 5:18); beautiful and helpful words rightly applied, but to Job, conscious of his integrity, they are as wounds and he feels more keenly than ever that he has been forsaken of God and longs more earnestly that he might be cut off, for life holds no more hope for him. He pathetically laments the hardness of his friends, from whom he had hoped for comfort. "To him that is afflicted," he says, "pity should be showed from his friends; but my friends have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and as a stream of brooks they pass away; which, what time they wax warm they vanish, when it is hot they are consumed out of their place." The anticipated refreshing from the noontide heat is turned to bitter disappointment when the brook is found to have vanishd. Even so had Job's friends disappointed him and this adds to his bitterness and causes yet further outbursts of distress and complaint, quite justifiable from a human standpoint; but let it be observed that it is no more said that "Job sinned not with his lips." In fact, though he justifies himself from the charges of hypocrisy brought by his friends, he acknowledges himself a sinner in God's sight and prays for pardon, in the closing words of the seventh chapter.

The Restoration of Israel

Zionism a Fulfilment of Prophecy

I HAVE taken the time and space to show that God promised Abraham's seed the land of Canaan, and to show his threat of scattering them among all nations. They disobeyed, and we are agreed, and the truth stares us in the face, that they have been and are now, scattered among all nations. Not simply

Babylon, but all nations. Will they be restored? Let the Bible answer. I will now lay down a rule. Since it is admitted by all that the prophecies, which foretold their scattering and dispersion among all nations, have been literally fulfilled, therefore, all the prophecies which predict their restoration must likewise be fulfilled. Now listen to the Lord: "Therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God: although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come.Therefore say,Thus saith the Lord God: I will even gather you from the people, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel. And they shall come thither, and they shall take away all the detestable things thereof, and all the abominations thereof from thence. And I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you: and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them a heart of flesh; that they may walk in my statutes, and mine ordainances, and do them; and they shall be my people and I will be their God" (Ezek. 11:16-20). Surely no one will contend that this has been fulfilled, if so, when? When did he gather them from the countries? When did he give them one heart? When did he take away their stony heart, and give them a heart of flesh? Never; and if he never does, then his word has failed—something which we know cannot happen. Heaven and earth may pass away, but the Lord's word never.

Again: "Behold, I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in my anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath: and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: and they shall be my people, and I shall be their God. And I will give them one heart and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them and their children after them: and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them; but will put my fear in their hearts that they shall not depart from me. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul. For thus saith the Lord, Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them" (Jer. 32:37-42).

All Israel, except a remnant, is now blinded, while they are scattered and dispersed, and will remain so "until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in" (Rom. 11:25). Hence they cannot now either reject or accept the Lord. But this blindness is going to be removed; and when the Lord comes, they will say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." The Lord's great prophecy is in harmany with this: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:21). How literally this has been fulfilled, so far as falling by the sword, and being led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem being trodden down of the Gentiles are concerned. In another place he says: "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate: and verily I say unto you Ye shall not see me until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Luke 13:35). When that time comes, their eyes will be opened, and if they abide not in unbelief, they will be grafted in again. We know that God has always shown great solicitude as to the fate of his people Israel, and has "loved them with an everlasting love" that follows them wherever they go. The apostle Paul says: "God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew. What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded (according as it was written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber. eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear) unto this day. And David saith, Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling block, and a recompense unto them: let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back always. I say then. Have they stumbled that they shoud fall?"

What does Paul answer? "God forbid: but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles (no wonder Christ said, "salvation is of the Jews") for to provoke them to jealousy. Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them be the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness? For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what will the receiving of them be, but life from the dead? For if the first fruits be holy, the lump is also holy; and if the root be holy, so are the branches." Paul closes the chapter by saying: "For I would not brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery. lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles is come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: (that is, saved from the nations whereunto they have been scattered, and restored into their own land, and then if they "abide not still in unbelief they shall be grafted in: for God is able to graft them in again"). And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant with them, when I shall take away their sins. As corcerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' saks. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. For as ye in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief: even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief. that he might have mercy upon all" (Rom. 11:2, 7-12, 15, 16. 25-32).

You notice Paul says. "Blindness in part is happened to Israel." We know that there was a remnant that was not blinded, who could become part of the family of saints, if they would. They could accept or reject, and will be dealt with accordingly. But the "rest are blinded" and, as said before, can neither reject nor accept Christ, and will remain blinded, until the "times of the Gentiles be come in."

God tells us plainly why he is going to restore them. It is not for their sakes, but for his holy name's sake. Listen to what he says, "Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God: I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went. For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all nations and will bring you into your own land. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols,will I cleanse you." It seems to me that there is nothing taught clearer in all the Bible than the future restoration of Israel. Listen further: "Thus saith the Lord God: In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all oyur iniquities. I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded, and the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they shall say,This land that was desolate has become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced and are inhabited." When did they ever say. "This land is become like the garden of Eden?" Never But God says they will say it, when they are restored (Ezek. 36:4-39).

Moreover, the land is to be divided according to the twelve tribes of Israel by lot for an inheritance unto them. and the strangers also among them (Ezek. 47:21, 22). This was never done. God even told them how to divide it, and named the portion of each tribe (Ezek. 48). Moreover, they were to have a temple and a city, the like of which has never been known. The name of the city is to be "The Lord is there" (Ezek. 48:35). Such a city and such a temple has never been, therefore the prophesy has never been fulfilled.

PSALM 126:2

Some birds and beasts can sing and talk,
Many can run and leap and walk,
Insects, reptiles fishes too,
Live in some ways as we all do.
Each one in his own small niche:
But man above them all is rich
For nature gave him as his own
The power to smile—'tis his alone.
Let us all use this gift divine
And with our smiles bring sweet sunshine
To brighter nineteen-twenty one year
War-scarred with trouble, sorrow, fear.

Dear God, my Father, while it is night.
Keep me continually in thy sight,
Help me to live quite close to thee.
So that to others a guide I'll be.

Editorial

It ought to grow more and more easy to believers of the gospel to do right, until at last the acts that were sore self-denial become a pleasure.

———o———

The truth should not be used as calking, something to stuff into cracks and crevices of a man's life; but it should be regarded and used as the very warp and woof of life.

———o———

A man who makes calculation and provision for this life only (like the rich fool in Luke 12:16-21), is like a sea captain who, starting on a voyage to Europe, lays in provision sufficient to last him only until he gets safe past the lighthouse, and out into the open sea.

———o———

Fighting faults is the most discouraging thing in the world. When corn reaches a certain height, no more weeds can grow among it. The corn overshadows and shades them to death. Let the reader fill himself with good things. Let him grow—grow up like corn, that every evil and noxious thing within him may be overshadowed and die.

"Little Less than God"

DEAR BROTHER:

I WOULD be pleased if you would give an exegesis of Psalm 8:4-6. The Revised Version reads, "Thou hast made him (man) a little lower than God." This must be a mistake. Please write an article on this subject.

Editorial Comments

CONTROVERSY ABOUT this translation has been waged for many years. "Thou madest him only a little lower than Elohim," is the original; Elohim is by some translated God, by others, angels. Authority is about equally divided between the two translations. "Thou madest him little less than God" (Wordsworth). "Thou, hast made him to want little of God" (Perowne). "And hast made him little less than divine" (Delitzsch). "And madest him lack but little of God" (Kay). "Yet thou hast made him but a little less than angels" (Leeser).

The discrepancy in these translations cannot distress any one when the facts in the case are understood. Elohim is translated both angels and God, which fact accounts for above variant renderings. Angels are called God as name bearers (Ex. 23:20, 21). They are deathless like God (Luke 20:36). and therefore are identical with God in nature. To say that man is made a "little less than God" or a "little less than angels" is to say the same thing. David is showing that originally man was endowed with God-like or angelic dignity; he was made in God's image and likeness (Gen. 1:26); but marred by sin, "what is the mortal, that thou remembrest him? and the son of man, that thou thinkest of him?" (Psa. 8:5). Dignity and dishonor are impressively put in sharp contrast. A mountain is bigger than a man, but a man is greater. His rounded brow speaks more than the arched sky, his eyes shine out deeper things than stars, and in his lips there is music beyond that of wind and wave. Less bright than the sun, less bulky than the planet, less abiding than the stars, he is greater, even in his apostasy and degradation, than them all! Man is runied greatness. Christ shared in this ruin "for the suffering of death," but is now "crowned with glory and honor" (Heb. 2:9). We may recover our crown and glory through him.

Antichrist: Past, Present, and Future

FUTURE FROM the time of Daniel and John; but past, present, and future from our time. Paul speaking of him as "that man of sin, the son of perdition," says: "And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time" (2 Thess. 2:6).

By this testimony we learn that in the prophecy there is a specified time for the appearing or manifestation of antichrist, and we find it in Dan. 7:8: "I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and behold in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things."

Further along in this chapter this little horn makes war with the saints, and prevails against them, until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.

This horn that persecutes the saints is the antichrist, for Daniel here speaks of no other such persecutor.

In process of time the Roman empire is divided into ten kingdoms, in the fifth century; and next in order is the rise of antichrist, the horn that comes up after and among the ten. The rise of this horn on the fourth beast proves that he is a part of the Roman Empire and the last part or phase of the empire.

The papacy answers every requirement of the prophecy. Constantine by the removal of the seat of the empire from Rome to Constantinople was favorable to the rise of the bishop of Rome, and after that, when the imperial succession ceased in Rome in A. D. 467, the last hindrance to the rise of "the man of sin" was "taken out of the way" (2 Thess. 2:7). "The temporal power insensibly rose from the calamities of the times: and the Roman bishops, who had deluged Europe and Asia with blood, were compelled to reign as the ministers of charity and peace . . . . The misfortunes of Rome involved the apostolic pastor in the business of peace and war; and it might be doubtful to himself, whether piety or ambition prompted him to supply the place of his absent sovereign. Gregory awakened the emperor from a long slumber; exposed the guilt or incapacity of the exarch and his inferior ministers; complained that the veterans were withdrawn from Rome for the defence of Spoleto; encouraged the Italians to guard their cities and altars; and condescended in the crisis of danger, to name the tribunes, and to direct the operations of the troops" (Gibbon, chap. 45 p. 424).

Rome was suffering from the deadly wound by the sword of the northern invaders, and the self-exalting spirit of the papacy took advantage of these conditions, and acted the part of her doctor, and for its pay took the estate of its sick empire.

But what about the three horns that the papacy plucked up by the roots? These were the Heruli; the Ostagoths, and the Lombards; three Arian kings who were opposed to the doctrine of the trinity; therefore the papal opposition to them. We have learned by the rise of the "little" horn of Dan. 7:8 after and among the ten, that he rose in the 5th century; and do we find anything in the Revelation that marks his rise? Yes, we do.

The reader will remember that in Dan. 7:8 he has a "mouth speaking great things and blasphemies," and in Rev. 13:5 we read concerning the beast, "And there was given to him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies." And as evidence that he received "the mouth," "he," the beast, opens his mouth in blasphemy against God. This beast here and Daniel's fourth beast are the same beast; in both places he has "the" seven heads and ten horns." The rise of the horn in Daniel, and the giving of the mouth here to the beast, are the same event. The chronology of both events is the same.

In Daniel the horn prevails against the saints until the saints possess the kingdom; and having risen in the fifth century, he cannot be one individual, but a succession of individuals—a dynasty, a kingdom. The papacy being the last phase of the Roman Empire, we should study Rome in its different phases. In Dan. 7:7 we read that the fourth beast "was diverse from all the beasts that were before it." Its seven heads are seven different forms of government; and in John's day Rome was pagan; but in the time of Constantine she became Christian; and after the rise of the papal horn she became papal. What is there now left of the Roman Empire but the papacy? The papacy was a "little" horn as a civil power, but mighty as an ecclesiastical power. In Rev. 13:8 we read, "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

This power is entirely too large for a seven year's wonder worker in the end of this dispensation. The theory of a future antichrist is all moonshine. The idea that ancient Babylon is to be restored is on a par with a future antichrist. When the fourth beast is destroyed and his body given to the burning flame, we read: "As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time' (Dan. 7:12). They lived in the kingdom of their conquerors.

In Rev. 13:1, 2 we have a description of the Roman seven headed and ten horned beast, "And the beast was like unto a leopard." Why like a leopard? Because Rome had lately conquered Greece, and had incorporated the people and territory into the Roman Empire; so the beast was like unto a leopard: they (the Greeks) were represented in that Roman beast: the feet like a bear, and the mouth like a lion, included Medo-Persia, and Babylon to representation in the Roman beast on the same principle as it did Grecia. On the same principle the image will be broken to pieces. "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote them became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

Remarks

WE LEFT Iowa Saturday morning, Oct. 30th, and left home again Nov. 1st, for Laird, Col., in response to a telegram from Brother Dimmick, to begin a twelve day's discussion with a Latter Day Saint. My opponent requested me to furnish him with a history of the church of God, which I agreed to do, and as he affirmed he spoke first, and gave us a history of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. His history proved it began with one Joseph Smith mostly under a tree in New York, and how he did piece the Scriptures together to prove the name! I proved to him, and to the satisfaction of all present, except Saints, that their name was out of harmony with the Bible.

Then he gave a list of the offices, as Paul gives them, and had on his chart the 70 I asked him what Jesus said about adding to, and to read to us where Paul ever mentioned the 70. He said Jesus mentioned them I asked him if the church was organized then, and if so, his 70 were preaching to the wrong people, as Jesus forbid them to go to the Gentiles. This worried him. I then asked him to turn and read the instruction to the 70 and to the 12, and compare with their so-called 70 and 12 apostles and see if they were obeying orders. One of the apostles was present, and they had to have an inferior officer to debate, and defend their faith.

I told him they would have to show me before I would believe in their apostles, and cited him to 2 Cor. 12:12 to prove that apostleship rested on the signs and deeds mentioned there; and further, if every one could have done these things they would not have been a sign. As he could not give the proof, we decided his apostles were false apostles, and cited him to Rev. 2:2. He said his history showed his church was organized in April, 1830. I said the Catholics, Lutherans, Methodist, and Baptists, and in fact all the churches, gave dates and names of men that started them, and defied him to prove his claim any better than theirs. I told him it was all man-made and besides, false prophets were to come; and have they come? Where are they? We must look for them among those who make the claim.

When I came to affirm I gave the history of the church of God and handed him a Bible and told him he would find it all in there, names of officers, and all, and what they did. I showed him that Jesus set some in the church, first apostles, and they were chosen as witnesses, and Jesus said we were to believe on him, through their word, not so-called apostles of this day, who could make no claim of having been with Jesus. These apostles proved they were what they claimed to be, and the church of God was proud to have them as members. He said we were following dead apostles. I told him their word lived and still spoke; but when their apostles died their word died with them, and they had to appoint some more. I cited him to the prophets, who had spoke and their words were proved true; we also proved them to belong to the church of God. I showed him that in the selection of officers, we had the form all given in the Scripture and read it, and asked what more we needed. The apostles had been very careful to mention what kind of men they were to be. Then I asked if we follow those instructions, have we not done all required of us?

He was put to straits when we came to discuss that man was mortal, and had no conscious exsitence between death and the resurrection. I showed him how God made man. He did not make just a part of man: he made man, and to say more is to add to the Scriptures. Then he said he breathed more than the breath in man. I asked him to read where it says so. It says God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. Now read where it says he breathed anything more. He said he found something in the first chapter of Genesis I had not read. This, he said, was the likeness of God or the immortal spirit. I said you claim the spirit is a part of God, and can live separate from the body. Now please tell us how it is that this likeness you have found in Gen. 1, that you claim is the spirit, had to be given herbs for meat and live on the same diet the body did. Then he showed by his countnance that he was sorry he had found it, and never said it again. He said he would admit the body was mortal and had no conscious existence between death and the resurrection. I said this is all I claim, and we might as well close this part of the discussion. I said the body is the man, and the man is mortal; when he dies he knows nothing. So I have proved my position and he has admitted it.

Then he undertook to prove that man possessed something that did not die, and knew all things after death, and cited us to the rich man and Lazarus. I asked him to show us where it said these men's spirits were talking. The narrative says it was the rich man and the poor man talking - nothing is said about their spirits. You are doing some more adding. He was good in addition. I said, to prove it was the two men talking, the poor man still had his fingers, and the rich man had his tongue and eyes. He dropped that as it did not prove what he thought it would, and went to Eccl. 12:7, "The spirit shall return to God who gave it." I told him if it was a conscious entity, as he claimed, and to return meant to go back again, I would give him my half hour to tell us what he knew when he was there before. Then I asked him to explain how it was when people went on the operating table they knew nothing of what had transpired, if the spirit had been chloroformed. He said while the spirit was in the body it was hampered and afflicted by the conditions of the body. I asked him how he knew it, as nothing of the kind was mentioned in the Scriptures. This he could not tell, only assumed it. I told him I had the positive proof that the spirit could not think one thought without the brain, and asked him to prove it could think in another world without it. This he failed to do, and lost the discussion from every point of view.

Well, we do not know as it did anybody any good. except the brethren were strengthened in their belief. At the conclusion we gave a couple of talks to the brethren. and got them started to meet in Bible study. One thing that impressed me here, was that the young people take no part in worldly things, and they were thought very peculiar, but the nominal churches have become so worldly; we must declare against it, or be swept away just as they have been. Brethren, will we keep pure from these alluring things, or try to argue no harm in them? If little by little the nominal churches have been swept away by the world, till they retain hardly a semblance of their past, could not the same thing happen to us? They sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play. Let us stand against these worldly things, then we will have no regrets nor amends to make.

The time had come once more to say goodby and "God bless you," and we boarded the train for Bentley, Neb. Here the brethren had arranged to have meeting in Sister Jones' commodious dining room. We had good interest from the first. Some outsiders came and were so interested we are certain they will be with us before long. Our heart goes out to these who seem to understand and we believe feel their need of accepting. We know some time some such are going to put it off too long. Sister Gamble being quite feeble, Sister Jones took her home with her and kept her through the meeting. One day her daughter came and took us all out to the farm, and Sister Gamble went along. How she did enjoy it! And we all enjoyed Sister Calloway's good country dinner. She took Sister Gamble on her arm and took her out to see the pigs and chickens. How kind it looked to see her trying to make her old sister feel at home, and enjoy herself. Many heart aches could be healed by a little effort on our part. I don't suppose Sister Gamble had walked as far for months, may be years. Let us all learn from these little lessons, and do more in the way of kindness. Such opportunities come at least once to us all, and if neglected. are gone.

Monday morning Brother Steadman came for me and took me to his hospitable home, and in the evening we began meetings at the Pleasant Hill school house. I had held meetings here twice before. Kuite a number came the first night, and increased every night for several nights. The interest was fine, and when we closed the people seemed interested and asked us back, which we promised to do. It seemed like old times to hear Brother and Sister Steadman, the girls and Sister Sellick (Sister Steadman's mother) sing the old songs we used to sing when they were first members of the church; but there are some voices that used to join in those songs that are silent. We will hear them no more until we hear them join in the new song (Rev. 5:9, 10).

Monday morning Brother Steadman took us back to Bentley, where we gave the brethren a special talk on the Lord's prayer, after which we arranged for them to meet once a week for Bible study, then the hand shake, and we were off on the morrow to meet other calls.

So closes a busy month. When I report again, a new year will have been ushered in, and another year's record closed. I wonder how it will stand? ALMUS ADAMS.

GOLDEN TEXT: Psalm 37:4.

A MAN'S ALPHABET FOR THE NEW YEAR

I will be--
Ambitious to live up to the best in me.
Brave in adversity.
Consistent in theory and practice.
Determined and daring in doing right.
Eager to correct my faults.
Faithful to my convictions.
Good to everyone, friend or foe.
Happy to work with God, through faith in Christ.
Intense in my efforts at self development.
Just in my dealings with others.
Kind to all created things: and kind accordingly.
Loving and lovable to those near me.
Mighty in faith.
Notable for my optimism.
Open-hearted.
Patient while waiting for the return of my Lord.
Quiet in the midst of confusion and turmoil.
Righteous as I can be.
Strong in my principles.
Trusting in God like a child.
Unswerving in efforts at improvement.
Versatile in my methods of being entertaining.
Watchful of my own actions.
X-asperating never.
Yielding in small things.
Zealous in fulfilling the will of God.

Any man may commit a mistake, but none but a fool will continue in it.- Cicero.

THE NEW YEAR

WHAT A difference New Year's Day seems to make in everything! The old year is now no more. You can expect nothing further from it. Whether to you the old year has been kind or unkind. it is past, and no other year can be just like it. But what a difference you hope for in the year just opening!

From 1921 you expect happiness and plenty. You expect it will be a kind year. You make resolutions to make yourself morally better, nobler, finer in the days to come. You have promised yourself to exercise more faith in the promises of our Lord and Savior. You have agreed to make your hope of seeing God and his Christ stronger and firmer. You have asked your God to make your love to him more abundant, to make your love for his creatures more sincere and lasting. You, no doubt. brought in the new year in the good old fashioned Christian way with prayer. It is the gate through which you see the beautiful fields of what may be. and hear the music of happiness and joy.

May you not be disappointed in your hopes. May it be the happiest, the gladest you ever have lived through; and what is much more, may you make others happy too.

If in the providence of God our Lord should tarry, it is not likely that the new year will otherwise fulfill all your hopes. Should 1921 give you all you long for you would be poor indeed, for then all incentive to hope would be gone. You also would lose your spirit of thankfulness for joy and bliss. How sad that would be.

For Christmas we wished you such gifts as would make you glad. We particularly expressed a wish and a hope that always the spirit of Christmas would remain fresh and bright in your hearts.

For New Year we told you could make 1921 what you would, that it entirely depends on yourself the flowers you would pluck from the seeds that you planted.

But we are going to extend to you a New Year wish, and our wish is hope—the hope for what is better. For months you have desired a gift, and no doubt but that you received it at Christmas, and in its possession you think you are happy. Are you? Perhaps; but do you know you can be happier? You ask how? By making someone else happy. And you can always hope for greater joy. With hope you can overcome all obstacles; as the saying is, "you can pierce the sky." In sorrow and grief hope is a balm; in pleasure and happiness it is a joy. Hope is your guide to the kingdom of God.

Think of this just a little. It is our thought to you for the coming year, which we hope will be happier than those which have gone before.

A NEW YEAR'S PRAYER

OUR FATHER IN HEAVEN.

Grant unto us at this time a sufficiency of thy grace so we will be anxious to do thy will. May we be obedient to thy commands, growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord. May we during this new year have our faith increased, our hope renewed. and our love, both to thee and to thy creatures. made more abundant. May our walk and conversation be such that in our very lives we will show unto the world thy love, thy power and thy glory. While we constantly watch for the coming of the Lord may we do so in patience, knowing that all things are in thy hand. Father, we do not ask the fulfilment of these things through our own perfection and righteousness, but through the obedience. perfection and righteousness of Jesus our Lord. We ask that thou grant thy blessing upon all mankind, but especially upon those who love, honor, and serve thee. And Father, forget not the old. the sick, the infirm, but be unto them a friend, a helper, a comforter. Make us lovable and forgiving; make us conscientious co-workers with thee, so while we teach others we ourselves should not be castaways. In Jesus name. Amen.

A MAN IS POOR

If he is without friends.
If he has low-flying ideals.
If he has a guilty conscience.
If he has lost his self-respect.
If his morals are questionable.
If he has lost his grip upon himself.
If he lacks education and refinement.
If he is selfish, uncharitable, or cruel.
If he has forfeited his health for wealth.
If he has traded away his character for money.
If his mind or soul has been neglected.
If his wife and family do not love and respect him.
If he has a disagreeable disposition that makes enemies or repels people.
If making money has crowded out the cultivation of other faculties.
If he knows not God and has not accepted the Christ as his Savior and Redeemer.
If he lives for this life alone, not knowing nor caring for that life which is to come.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

Reflections on Christmas

The shepherds watching by their flocks,
  Upon the peaceful plain,
Saw the heavenly vision,
  And heard the glad refrain,
"Peace and good will to man."
  The heavenly host proclaim:
"A babe is born in Bethlehem,
  Jesus is his name."

He, the one that was promised
  To Abraham long ago,
The heir with him in righteousness,
  As the Scriptures show;
He, the King of Israel,
  On his father David's throne,
To rule the world forever,
  The sceptre is his own.

Have you told the story?
  Have you sung the song?
Have you proclaimed the message,
  Have you passed it along?

There will be room in the kingdom
  For all who will come,
And a reward for the workers
  Who have called them home.

Light breaking o'er the hill-top,
  Proclaims the coming day,
The chariot that bears him
  Is speeding on the way;
The angels are with him,
  They sing the new song;
We have caught the refrain,
  Are passing it along.

Jesus Lord, we are longing
  For the last grand jubilee,
The righteous all awakened,
  Shall sing due praise to thee;
Eden in perpetual bloom,
  Shall never know of blight;
And saints shall live forever
  In that age of light

A Collection of Friendly Talks on Bible Subjects: By Brother S. H. Thomas

The Bursting Buds

HOW OLD are you, reader? Sixty-five years? Not a very long time, is it; and yet I wonder if we fully realize how much that is wonderful and marvellous has happened in that short space! In our Lord's day men lighted their houses with a tallow dip, or candle. When you were born they did the same. No progression through all these centuries in the art of light, but in the space of one generation we have leaped from candle to kerosene, from kerosene to gas, from gas to acetyline, and from acetyline to electricity! We now turn night into day, and our lights illuminate an object at twenty-five miles, and may be seen for one hundred miles!

In our Savior's time the farmer reaped his grain with a sickle, gathering the grain in his hand and cutting it off a handful at a time, and placing it on the ground at his side in bundles to be bound. When you were born they did the same. No change or advance. Generation after generation used the same old sickle, until worn out, and it was then replaced by another exactly like it. Then came a wonderful instrument called a "cradle," with which one man could do the work of ten with sickels. Then, close upon the heels of the cradle came the old Johnson reaper, a machine drawn by horses, which cut the grain in a wide swath, laying it straight and true on a level surface called a "table," and a man riding behind raked it off in suitable bundles for binding. This was supposed to be the limit. Absolutely no room for improvement in harvesting. But, wonder of wonders, another machine quickly followed which raked off its own bundles, thus doing away with the rake off man and requiring but one man, the driver, to operate it. When the first 'self-raker" came to our neighborhood the farmers all turned out on a cetain day to see it in operation, and after gazing in wonder for a time one old farmer said: 'Well, by gum! Seems like they can do most anything these days. I wouldn't be a mite surprised to see a machine yet that will do the binding." And his neighbors laughed long and loud at such a foolish idea! Today not only that dream has been realized, but a modren harvester cuts, threshes and sacks the grain, leaving the sacks in piles on the field, ready to be hauled to market. All this in one short lifetime.

Oregon, [illegible]

When you and I were boys, if we wanted to send a letter or message from New York to San Francisco it would require several weeks to accomplish it. Now we step up to the wall and say, "Hello," and immediately the answer comes back "Hello!" Three thousand miles this little word has leaped—under sewers, over mountains, through the blistering heat of the alkali plains and the snow-capped peaks of the mighty Rockies; through tunnels and aceross beautiful and fertile valleys, this little word has travelled, and the answer returned, in less than one second! Was there ever a greater miracle?

When you and I were boys, if we wished to cross the continent we must needs travel by stagecoach and other animal conveyances at great hardship and risk of life; only the most robust, and strong could accomplish it. Today we step into a palace on wheels, don loose and comfortable clothing. lounge in easy and luxuriant chairs, and couches, and with all the comforts of the richest home, servants to supply our every want, and in less than four days we are on the Pacifiic coast!

But space forbids mention in detail of modern wonders, of ocean ships so vast, that one may carry in comfort the entire population of a large town and during the voyage provide them with all the comforts and even the luxuries of home, even to its printing office and daily papers taking the new of the world fresh from the air every morning as they speed across the ocean one thousand miles from land. If trouble or disaster overtakes them a call for help is sent out, and instantly sister ships for hundreds of miles in all directions are rushing to give aid. If the threatened disaster is averted the message is sent out and the sister ships return congratulation, and proceed on their way.

Nor may we more than mention the leaps and bounds of knowledge and discovery in the sciences and professions, of the increase of knowledge in the art of war, and the manufacture and use of engines of destruction. We sail and fight beneath the surface of the mighty deep; we walk upon its bottom and explore its secret places; we leap from its silent depths and launch sudden terror, death and destruction to out enemies; we mount on the wings of the wind and far above the clouds of heaven armies wage wars of selfish hate and extermination. We savagely tear and mangle our fellow-man, and our surgeons assemble the broken fragments of two, and of them make one living man; we rush here and there, swifter than the winds. Our "chariots" are mounted with flaming torches in this the day of preparation, and as they run the fir trees are terribly shaken. They rage and rush in the streets, "and jostle against one another," and in the fearful wrecks many men are killed and mangled.

We turn our great glasses skyward and search out the mysteries of the heavens. We make maps of them and all their mountains, valleys, and water courses by name, while we dream of communications with their possible inhabitants. And yet today, with all this vast knowledge, which has come to us in the short span of one generation, instead of bringing with it peace and happiness, we wrestle in bitter war, every man's fangs in the throat of a fellow-man, savagely tearing and rending each other as beasts of prey, plunging the world into depths of debt, famine, disease, sorrows and troubles beyond the mind of man to fathom or power of human arm to extricate. For six thousand years man has striven in vain to govern himself; and this war is the grand climax of all his efforts at self-governmet. Surely, the "buds are bursting,' the day is dawning! Courage, my brother, my sister! The Lord is surely at hand! None so old or feeble but may hope to welcome in this life our dear Lord, and receive from him the promised crown of life and so never see death any more!

New Year Thoughts

IN THE morning of each "first day" of the week, finds a happy, bright, and loving gathering convening in our Sunday School. The exercises begin by singing, followed by prayer and the reading together of a Psalm. Immediately following is the roll call. As each teacher or scholar's name is called he or she responds by quoting a Scripture text which has been memorized during the past week.

This exercise is enjoyed by all, especially the texts quoted by the infant class, to which we all give close attention. Recently there has been an addition to this class in the person of Catherine Huggins, aged 3½ years. Her name being called everybody became quiet, a hush seemed to prevail. For a moment she was slightly embarrassed. Her brother Russell tried to assist her, but somehow the text failed to be quoted. At last in desperation, Russell said, "say, 'God is love.'" I shall never forget the bright look wheh came over her face, for this text to her mind apparently was familiar. Instantly all embarrassment left her and in a clear, audible voice she said, "God is love."

What a wonderful text, we thought, and as we looked into the eyes of this sweet child, we thought in this child's simple faith and trust, love was personified. We quote the text in full: "He that loveth not, knoweth not God: for God is love. . . . . and we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him" (1 John 4: 8, 16).

Brother Huggins quoted in his sermon on "The Fulness of Christ," the 133rd Psalm, emphasizing the thought that only unity and harmony can be maintained in the church when the spirit of Christ prevails. I asked myself this question, How can this be? 1 John 4:12 answered my question: "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us." And then a companion thought presented itself: "If a man say, I love God and hateth his brother, he is a liar" (1 John 4:20). What a terrible indictment! Can it be possible that any brother or sister in the church of God is guilty of hating his brother? Paul reveals to us the secret (if there be any such) in Heb. 12:15: "Lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled." I wonder if this is what Paul had in mind when he wrote Eph. 4:31: "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice." Beloved, this spirit is characteristic of the nominal churches in whom there is neither light, life, nor knowledge from God's view point. Ought we then to find it in the church of God, who is so dear to him, of whom God says, "He found us in a desert land, in the waste howling wilderness; he leads us about, he instructs us, he keeps us as the apple of his eye" (Deut. 32:10).

Dear old Peter after all his experiences in the church and with the brethren says when he is an old man, "Be pitiful, be courteous, love as brethren." One of my Christmas presents (to me the most valuable) is a copy of "Farrer Fenton's Complete Bible in Modern English." I was anxious to know just how Gal. 5:20 was translated. I find it reads, "Idolatry, poisoning, hatred, strife, rage, lusts, contentions, discussions." Here it is then: these unwise contentions and discussions, which get us nowhere, and leave us stranded in the "gall of bitterness."

Beloved, what can lift us up out of this mire? Simple love. It is this principle which God exercises in the plan of redemption. By it God lifts us up out of sin and uncleaness into the spirit and atmosphere of the kingdom of God.

Paul says, "And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three, but the greatest if these is love." God is love. To be like God is and should be the only desire rooted in the heart. To have this desire rooted and grounded means that we daily become more loving, kind, and pure (1 John 3:1-4). If this is not our daily experience, then beloved, we have or are not keeping his commandments. If, then, we do not love the brethren, note the language—we are simply liars! Brethren, I would dread the task of telling a brother "you are a liar"; but God does, and he makes no mistakes.

Beloved, "God is love." There is no question about this. Everywhere we see its evidence. What man with all his wealth and power, with all his deeds of philanthropy it could be said of him, he loves his enemies; he blesses them that curse him; he does good to them that hate him, and prays for them that dispitefully use him, and persecute him. God makes the sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust (Matt. 5:44, 45). Brethren, we surely love them which love us, but sinners do this much. The hard thing is to love a brother or sister whose backbiting tongue may vilify or malign us. We sang hymn 132 this morning. These lines touched in me the spot:

Thy foes might hate, despise, revile,
Thy friends unfaithful prove;
Unwearied in forgiveness still,
Thy heart could only love.

O give us hearts to love like thee,
Like thee, O Lord, to grieve
Far more than other's sin than all
The wrongs that we receive.

During this year, I am going, God helping me, to live a life in harmony with the spirit of Psalm 15 as translated by Farrer Fenton: "Lord, who in your halls shall dwell? who live on your holy hill? He waking straight, and doing right, and who speaks truth from his heart, from whose tongue no slander comes, who does not his neighbor wrong, who carries no hate in his breast, whose eyes will despise what is base, and respect those who reverence the Lord; who swears to his loss, nor complains who lends not his money to cheat; who takes not a bribe against right: who does this, is unshaken forever."

After all, talking without doing these things amounts to but little. Peter gives us a good thought for the New Year, and with this I close:

"Therefore be prudent, and watchful in prayer, above all else having earnest affection among yourselves, because love hides a multitude of sins. Be friendly one to another, without grumbling. Let everyone, according to the gift which he has received, employ it for the good of others, as faithful stewards of the manifold gift of God. If any one can speak, let it be of the thought of God; if any one can minister, let it be with the power which God has bestowed; so that in all God may be honored through Jesus Christ, whose is the rectification and the dominion throughout the eternal ages. Amen" (1 Pet. 4:8-11, Fenton's translation).

The Parables of Christ

Number Eleven

TO UNDERSTAND a parable we should seek to find the reason why it was spoken. Care should be exercised to determine the incidents that called it forth. This parable was spoken to the pharisees in Jerusalem a few days previous to the crucifixion. They were inveterate enemies of Jesus, and on several occasions sought to lay hands on him. At this time the pharisees were greatly incensed against him. Nothing enraged them so much as his entrance into Jerusalem riding on an ass and a colt, the foal of an ass, the multitude crying, "Behold, thy king cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt, the foal of an ass." These words were prophetic and applied to the one who would redeem Israel. To the pharisees this was mockery, and the one accepting these honors was worthy of death. It is related that all Jeruslaem was moved, saying, "Who is this?" The multitude said, "This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee."

The prophecy used may be found in Zech 9:9. The pharisees professed to believe the prophet, but the stumbling block to them was to have it applied to the meek Galilean. It is observable that the hearts of the multitude were greatly influenced as every honor was bestowed upon Jesus that rightly belonged to a conquering king. This seems to be the last incident that greatly incensed them against him. With their minds full of hatred and envy Jesus spoke the parable of the "two sons." He no doubt put forth this parable to confuse them, when they answered his question, whether of them twain did the will of the father? They discovered that he alluded to them as he answered, "Verily, I say unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you. They believed John and ye repented not, afterward, that ye might believe him." To be compared to publicans and harlots was more than they could bear. To compass them about with Scripture testimony Jesus spake the parable of the vineyard.

This parable was not spoken with the view that the words of the Master had any hidden meaning, or with a thought that the pharisees could not understand its meaning. The words were borrowed from Isaiah 5th chapter in which is defined the meaning of a vineyard. The one alluded to by the prophet was the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant. This vineyard was planted with the view that it would bring forth grapes, but it brought forth wild grapes. It failed to fulfil God's purpose. Jesus in using this parable finished the history in charging them with putting to death his prophets, and to finish the work, they would put to death the Son of God, the rightful heir of the kingdom. Then Jesus asked them the question, "When the Lord of the vineyard comes, what will he do with these?" They answered him, "He will miserably destroy these wicked men, and will let out his vineyard to other husbandmen who will render him the fruits in due season."

The pharisees could see the justness in their answer, but were incensed when Jesus quoted from Isa. 28:16 and applied it to himself as being the stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner.

Then Jesus reveals his purpose in the use of this parable. "Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth fruits thereof. Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken; but upon whomsoever it shall fall it will grind him to powder." When the chief priests and pharisees had heard this parable they perceived that he spake of them. They then sought to lay hands on him, but they feared the multitude because they took him to be a prophet. Out of their mouths they were condemned. One of the lessons to be gleaned from such parables is the hypocrisy of those religious teachers. On another occasion Jesus said to these self-righteous pharisees, "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." The vineyard of the Lord is identical with the kingdom of God, not the church.

In every parable there is a frame work which contains a valuable lesson that the student is liable to overlook. In this parable we find the following characters introduced, viz: The householder, the servant, the son, and the husbandman and his servants. These characters may be placed in two groups, the first three and the two following. A householder is a person who is the owner of the property; the husbandman is the person to whom the vineyard is leased. The householder is Jehovah, his servants, the prophets. The son is Jesus the Christ. The husbandmen constitute the ruling class in the kingdom. The chief priests and pharisees were successors to those whose wickedness was responsible for the judgment that overturned the kingdom and destroyed and scattered the people. The important lesson taught is that the pharisaic element will as surely receive a just retribution. The ruling class was the responsible class. In the parable we have Jesus and the common people in opposition to the pharisees and the chief priests, and scribes. With all their pretensions they will not possess the kingdom with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

If You Want Folks to Like You

1. DON'T ARGUE.

No one was ever convinced of the error of his ways by means of an argument. This is particularly true of the "gentler" sex. Persuade, suggest advise, but avoid arguing.

2. CULTIVATE THE ART OF LISTENING.

It is one of the surest ways to win other people's regard, while strengthening your own mental powers. Blessed are the listeners, for they shall inherit wisdom.

Remember that ancient rhyme:

A wise old owl sat in an oak,
The more he saw the less he spoke,
The less he spoke the more he heard.
Why can't we all be like that bird?"

3. SHARPEN YOUR SENSE OF HUMOR.

Quayle says, "A sense of humor is the ability to see the point the same summer." Another writer defines it as the rarest gift of the gods, and somewhere it is declared to be the sixth sense. However that may be, we know it is the alchemy which makes comedies of the would-be tragedies of life. To see the humor in a baffling situation, an inane absurdity, a thoughtless slight, is to walk tranquilly through the labyrinth of life.

4. LOOK PLEASANT

A cheerful countenance is an indication of the truest culture. It betokens a high minded attitude toward the petty annoyances and injustices that one meets in every-day life.

5. TAKE A PERSONAL INTEREST IN FOLKS.

By this I mean a sincere interest in their activities, their joys and difficulties, and in fact, all that they hold most important in their lives. I do not mean an inquisitive interest of the petty kind that is offensive. Let your interest be affectionate, the affection that emanates from a loyal, loving heart, and includes the whole of humanity in its scope. Folks are sure to like you if your interest in them is sincere and abiding.

6. AVOID GOSSIP AND SLANDER.

People do not like one who peddles personal stories of others' mistakes. They may lend a ready ear to your tale, but they will mistrust you. Moreover, you can never be a loyal, loving friend if you sow the seeds of dissension and slander. Think of kind and pleasant things to tell about others, and if none of these things you can say, be silent. The Golden Rule.

Help the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

"Faith is far more than belief, that is merely intellectual. Faith is spiritual insight, the substance of things not seen. It is the outcome of intellect that sees, emotion that feels, and will that determines and acts. It is the whole man, acting intensely in unison for the highest ends. Faith is not enfeeblement, but intensification, of the whole man."

1920, with its high cost of living, has been a hard year financially for The Restitution. Sister Eidemiller's letter in this issue is most opportune. 1921 will probably be the only year before the Lord comes. With a new editor The Restitution will be unusually good. Read Sister Eidemiller's exhortation and act upon it immediately.

Alexander D. Donaldson writes.

"Recently we received a very fine letter full of encouragement and good wishes from Sister W. H. Eidemiller, of Troy, Ohio. Judging by the letters received we have a host of friends among the good brothers and sisters whom we have never seen. Some time when we take that long promised western trip we will meet so many whom we know though never have seen that no matter where we go we will feel very much at home. Well! friends, we have the same feeling toward you, and pray that the everlasting blessings of God be yours, both here and in the age to come. Amen."

Sodomites and Resurrection

There remains one Scripture proof for Larger Hope that you have not explained. The following points are found in Ezek. 16.53, 55, 62, 63, and I want you to explain them fully.

I. The Sodomites are to be restored to their "former estate"; and

II. Then, says God, "I will be pacified toward thee." Pacified means he will be reconciled. Both restoration and pacification happen at and after the resurrection.

Editorial Comments

WE HAVE followed the arguments of Larger Hope as they were submitted to us. If Ezekiel 16 has not been answered it is because it has not been quoted as evidence. It has now been used as proof, and it shall be answered now. The verses in Ezekiel 16 referred to as proof for Larger Hope are here quoted in full:

> When I shall bring again the captivity, the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them; when thy sisters Sodom and her daughters shall return to their former estate; and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate; then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate. And I will establish my covenant with thee, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: that thou mayst remember, and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more, because of thy shame, when I am pacified toward thee, for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord.

We have quoted the verses entire so the reader may have before him in full the evidence upon which our correspondent bases his questions. As Ezekiel has been quoted we shall follow thither, as we wish to ferret out the system of Larger Hope to its most obscure hiding places, and search it as with a lighted candle.

"THEIR FORMER ESTATE"

Our writer assumes that the portion of Ezekiel 16 quoted by him is a literal narrative; but there are as many reasons for its being figurative as for any other prediction in the Bible. Waiving this point, however, we proceed to take the literal sense of Ezekiel's prophecy, and remark that as "Sodom and her daughters shall return to their former estate," at the resurrection as he understands it, they will be as sinful and miserable after the resurrection as they were before! A dull mind can see that if the people who lived in Sodom had no chance when they lived, when they are raised from the dead and put back into "their former estate" they will be no better off than they were formerly"! This reasoning would be amusing were it not so serious.

SODOMITES "CONFOUNDED"

Again, the text reads, "That thou mayst remember, and be confounded." Are they "confounded" after they are raised from the dead? Then they are unbelievers still! Peter says, "He that believeth on him (Christ) shall not be confounded" (1 Pet. 2:6). They were unbelievers when they lived in Sodom; they will be unbelievers after they are raised from the dead consequently they are still condemned: for "he that believeth not is condemned already" (John 3:18). What good comes of giving them a chance now or then? Truly, they stick to "their former estate" with the grip of death!

"ASHAMED"

Now look again at the text, and mark the words, "Because of thy shame." Here is proof that the Sodomites, even if they are raised from the dead, are not God's people; for God says, "My people shall never be ashamed" (Joel 2:26). Verily these Sodomites are waxing worse and worse!

"NEVER OPEN THY MOUTH ANY MORE"

Back to the text again, please: "That thou mayst remember and be confounded, and never open thy mouth any more." Is this the way the Sodomites are going to sing love's sweet song? Are thy going to sing the song of redemption by never opening their mouth "any more"? How long is "any more"? "Neither shall they die any more" (Luke 20:36). That is, the saints shall not die to all eternity. During eternity, then, through which limitless circle the saints live, the Sodomites are not so much as to open their mouths! They are to be "ashamed" and suffer "everlasting contempt" (Dan. 12:2); they are to be confounded in utter disgrace; and they must keep their mouth shut eternally! The beauty, the glory, and the sublimity of Sodom's "fair chance" after the resurrection can you see it?

"WHEN I AM PACIFIED"

Lastly, "When I am pacified toward thee." Resurrection first happens, says our correspondent, then restoration follows, and pacification is reconciliation! But does the word "pacify" mean reconciliation? Let us see. The word only occurs in one other place in the Bible, "So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified" (Esther 7:10). Knowing, then, that the Sodomites are raised from the dead, instead of getting a fair chance at a Larger Hope than ours, we find they are first "confounded," then they are "ashamed," and then the "king's wrath is pacified" in a sentence that seals their lips in death and silence to all eternity! "Even so Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight" (Matt. 11:26).

"They Spake Often One to Another"

DEAR EDITOR RESTITUTION:

WE THANK the brothers and sisters who have sent us a helping hand. May God bless and comfort them, is our prayer. We are out here alone, none but our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is with us, and we do appreciate the help you have sent us. We are as ever in the blessed hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. DEAR RESTITUTION:

A FEW lines to the loved ones of the one faith and hope, wishing all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Our pencil has been idle for some time. We have been moving and there has been plenty of work. Husband has been laid off from work. Oct 31 husband baptized Mrs. Bertha Daily, of 512 Lime St., Topeka Kansas, and her daughter, Mrs. Goldia Johnson, of 1722 S. 22 St., Argentine, Kansas. Oct 19th husband addressed small audience on the resurrection at the funeral of Mr. Daily, Mrs. Daily's husband.

DEAR ONES OF THE CHURCH OF GOD:

We notice in The Restitution that the manager is calling the attention of those whose time is up, to renew their subscriptions. Now dear ones, I hope you can make some arrangements to renew at once. You can do it if you will just make up your mind that it must be done, and must not be put off, as it is a work that is of far more importance than the giving of gifts to please the eye for a short time. Yes, dear ones, it is to spread and carry the message of our soon coming Lord; and now as the signs indicate the time is near at hand, it seems there is no time to be wasted. Each and every one of us should do our part willingly, and at the time our opportunity comes. There is work for all of us, and we must do it ourselves, as no one can do it for us. As I heard a minister brother say once, "We do not need to do anything bad, to miss an entrance into God's kingdom just do nothing. No work, no reward."

Faith without works is dead, I just feel we are all going to do better than that. There are so many ways in which we can do work none need say there is nothing I can do.

God who knew all things, from the beginning to the end, has made it possible for the weak as well as the strong to enter his kingdom; but he has left us a place in the vineyard to work; and at present I suggest that we all take up the work to increase the subscription list of our valuable paper, The Restitution. Let each one of us get a new subscriber, or more, and if we cannot find anyone that is just willing to pay for it themselves, if they will accept it if we send it to them, let us send it to one or more. By so doing we can double the subscription list and thereby help support our paper. It needs help at present. Let us sow the good seed and God will give the increase. We will send The Restitution to two families. Love to all. You will find money order enclosed.

Obituary

Death in Adam; Life in Christ

MRS. JOSEPHENE WARNER, widow of the late Norman Warner, one of the pioneer citizens and business men of Rensselaer, died December 21, 1920, at 9:30 A. M., at the home of her son Hale, on Front Street, aged 84 years, 7 months, and 15 days. She had suffered a slight stroke of paralysis about a month ago and the end was not unexpected.

Mrs. Warner's maiden name was Grant, and was born in Wabash County, Indiana, May 6th 1836, and came with her parents to Jasper County when 14 years of age. She was married to Mr. Warner on February 24th, 1857, and after spending two years in Montgomery County, they returned to Rensselaer where they spent the remainder of their lives. Her husband was engaged in the hardware business and died September 16th, 1918, since that time she has lived with her son Hale. She was the youngest daughter in a family of ten children, only one of whom, her youngest brother, Shelby Grant, survives her. To her union with Mr. Warner three sons were born, namely: Grant, Hale and Charles, all of whom survive her and each one has one child, making three grandchildren and among them are two great-grandchildren.

Sister Warner was baptized by Elder Shockey many years ago in the early history of the church of God in Rensselaer. Her life has been full of service to her family, brethren, and friends, thus fulfilling the spirit of her Master.

Funeral services were held at the home at 2:30 P. M., Thursday, December 23. We asked if Sister Warner had any special Scripture that she emphasized, whereupon her daughter-in-law brought out her old Bible and we found the sermon on the mount distinctly marked as a Scripture she had dwelt and meditated upon. The principles of this incomparable sermon by the Master and his estimate of greatness as expressed in Matt. 20:25-28 was befittingly applied to the life of our Sister. The home was filled with her relatives, friends, and neighbors to pay the last tribute of love and respect. She fell asleep full of hope and expectation of the soon coming of the Lord. Burial was made in the Home Cemetery where she rests awaiting the resurrection.

A Chat with the Children

DEAR CHILDREN:

YOU WERE not expecting me today, were you? Well, Father Thomas has a way of droping in on his children once in a while, just to have a chat, and to see if they are still in the race for that crown of life, which Jesus is soon to bring to those who keep on running to the end, or until he comes. Yes, I know you get tired sometimes, but you must never mind that, but keep right on, and never, never think of giving up, when you come to a rough place in the road. It would be awful if Jesus should not know you when he comes, and perhaps give your beautiful crown to someone else.

Now children, seeing that we are all so "comfy" and cozy, suppose we have a little chat about insurance companies. I suppose, some day you will want to get insured; most everybody does. To carry a policy in some good and responsible company is considered by successful financiers to be good business policy; but the difficulty is to find a company that is absolutely safe and reliable, and who could not under any circumstances, like extremely great or unexpected losses, for example, fail to meet its obligations to its policy holders.

I know of but one such company. It claims to be the oldest and wealthiest life insurance company in existence; and I know for a fact that the company controls the wealth of the world. Its agents are found in every civilized country, and although not generally very well liked, or popular with the world, yet they are always known to be the most strictly honest, and industrious people to be found anywhere. In fact the company employs no others. The head office of this great firm is located in a foreign country, and was doing business long before America was discovered. It is strictly a life insurance, and has many features unlike any other life insurance company in existence.

For example, all other so-called life companies obligate, in the event of death, to pay a certain amount of money to some relative or friend, of the policy holder. But this company I have in mind, obligates and promises to restore the life that has been lost, to cause the individual to live again. There is but one company in existence able to do this. The main office is in the main courts of heaven, and the company's names is Jehovah and Son. The agents of this company are held in much esteem, by both the Father and the Son, and are privileged and invited to address the mighty Jehovah, as "Our Father," and the Son (who is our Lord Jesus Christ), as 'our elder Brother." Thus you see, the agents of this great company have very close and tender relationship to its promoters.

Like other companies, this firm requires regular payments to keep its policies alive, and if these payments are not kept up according to agreement, the policy becomes null and void. With all other life companies, the payments must be made in cash which, because of sickness, or misfortune of some kind, the policy holder is sometimes unable to get, and so his policy is lost. But with this heavenly company it is quite different. The payments required by them consist of faith, and belief in them and their principles, and obedience to certain simple requirements, plainly specified in the policy, on first payment, followed at regular intervals by worship and givng of thanks. There are none so poor, feeble, or unfortunate, but that they can meet the payments in this company if they really want to.

In view of these, and many other features of superior excellence in favor of this great life company, is it not a strange fact that it now is and always has been, the most unpopular company in existence? But very few people can be persuaded to take out policies. The terms, conditions, and benefits, and also its vast superiority over all other life companies, are set forth and made plain in a book called the Bible, edited and circulated by the company; it is a fact that while most civilized people have a copy of this great book in their house, but very few have ever read it, and the great bulk of mankind know little or nothing of its contents, and so eventually go away in death to a perpetual sleep. What a pity, when they might so easily have held a policy that would have given them eternal life in the endless ages to come! My dear children, if you have not already done so, hasten and get your life insured in the great company of "Jehovah and Son."

GOLDEN TEXT: John 6:44, 45.

FATHER TAKE MY HAND

The way is dark, my child; but leads to light;
I would not always have thee walk by sight.
My dealings now, thou canst not understand,
I meant it so, but I will take thy hand,
And through the gloom
Lead safely home
My child!

The day goes fast, my child! But is the night
Darker to me than day? In me is light!
Keep close to me, and every spectral band
Of fear shall vanish. I will take thy hand
And through the night
Lead up to light
My child!

The way is long, my child, But it shall be
Not one step longer than is best for thee;
And thou shalt know, at last, when hou shalt stand
Safe at the goal, how I did take thy hand,
And quick and straight
Lead to the kingdom's gate
My child!

The path is rough, my child! But, oh! how sweet
Will be the rest, for weary pilgrims' meet,
When thou shalt reach the borders of that land
To which I lead thee as I take thy hand;
And safe and blest,
With me shall rest
My child!

The throng is great, my child! But at thy side
Thy Father walks, then be not terrified;
For I am with thee; will thy face command
To let thee freely pass; will take thy hand,

And through the throng
Lead safe along
My child!

The cross is heavy, child! Yet there was one
Who bore a heavier for thee: my Son,
My well-beloved. For him bear thine; and stand
With him at last; and from thy Father's hand,
Thy cross lay down,
Receive a crown,
My child!

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

THE CHRISTIAN chuches are not yet ready to accept as their head and come into subjection to the one leader who ultimately will bring peace to the sin cursed earth. All kinds of schemes are being tried to effect peace, and peace is bound to come, not through the counsels of statesmen now in Europe, but through Jesus Christ according to the words he spoke in that land he so loved while he lived on earth.

Hold fast to the faith that Christ only can save this distraught world. He is the only hero who can deliver humanity. Therefore every incident pertaining to his life and work is of more than present day interest. While it is important to study international affairs it is far more important to study and know Jesus Christ. A time will come when the worldly wise must admit that world peace is beyond their power, then will those who know God and his Christ rejoice, for all shall see that real education, real wisdom is to familiarize ourselves with the mind of the Master

To us who study our Bibles the city of Capernaum is well known. But did you know that a party excavating over this long buried city had uncovered the old synagogue? By some it is thought that it was in this very building that Jesus once taught. It has been made a tourist sight, not on account of its beauty, but simply as a relic of the home town of Jesus. All that any one knows or cares regarding the cosmopolitan town of Capernaum, at the head of the lake of Galilee, is that Jesus once lived, and taught, and ministered there.

Some people look at the large city as a place where the knowledge of God and his plan of salvation cannot grow; that it only is in the country parts and the smaller towns where Christianity will gain a strong foothold. But remember that it was in a big city, the metropolis of the neighborhood, that Jesus began his ministry. It was in Capernaum that Jesus projected his personality, and his message, and his mission. There he lived and preached and began his work of bringing mankind to the Father through himself. Mankind is much the same wherever located; therefore let us who live and work in the cities, live and work for God, and if we do so in an unselfish spirit surely God will bless our efforts.

Suppose we adopted the simple practice modeled on the practice of Jesus, of letting our light shine brightly, in both words and deeds, telling every one we meet that discipleship to Jesus is the first of all duties. Not in any way asking for money, but through and by love in a simple insistent, many-sided affirmation of the external truth that Jesus alone can save, that he only is wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemeption.

Reared as a country boy, Jesus became a city man. Living as an integral part of the life of a pastoral and agricultural people, he was a skilled mechanic. The friend of fishermen. Jesus also was the associate of scholars and a teacher in the synagogue.

Today the whole world is looking for a deliverer; but they know not who or what. We who have accepted Jesus as the author and finisher of our faith know that he soon will come againl and we know the purpose of that coming, and we pray with all the strength of our heart, "Come Lord Jesus."

Whether we are of the country, or live in a town, or belong to the city, it matters little, for God is the same in all places as also is his Christ. Our duty is to do the will of God, to let our light shine amid such surroundings as encircle us; not fret and pine for greater opportunites, for the greatest opportunities are those at our very door. With this thought uppermost in your minds,

THE NAME of the baby born to Sister Irene Houghton, as announced in issue of Dec. 28, was incorrectly given as Elenor Houghton. The correct name is Eleanor Forman Houghton.

DEAR YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE RESTITUTION:

IT IS quite a long whilet since I wrote to you, but one does not have very much time to write in the summer. How did you all enjoy your vacations? I suppose you have been learning many kinds of new things. Those who have been spending their vacations in the country must have learned many things about nature. Since I live in the country I am finding out new things each season about nature.

I live in a branch of the Rocky Mountains, and often when I see the lovely effect of light and shadow, the soft tints of summer, or the beauty of the snow covered mountains in winter I wish I could paint it for all the world to see.

I am going to tell you of one beautiful appearance that I saw. I wrote the stroy of it three years ago.

One day during the summer of 1917, a beautiful sight appeared over one of the montains in a certain part of a range belonging to the Rockies known as the Gold Range. This sight was believed by some of the spectators to be a cloudburst.

The centre looked as if a great window had been opened in the sky. About this hung clouds like the mist we sometimes see on mountains and over lakes, especially in the early morning. Outside this mist were soft, white, fleecy clouds piled up and rolled all about the mist till it looked like enormous banks of snow and piles of white down. The rays from the setting sun changed the outer edges of the clouds to delicate shades of pink and deepening to vermillion at the outmost edge. This lasted for fifteen or twenty minutes.Then as the sun sank lower the pink gradually faded to flesh color, and then white. At length all the clouds vanished and there remained only the deep blue well of the sky, while the soft twilight slowly crept over the valley.

In such beautiful scenes as this we seem to see the wondrous hand of him who made heaven and earth and all living things. Such sights are created to draw us from the petty cares of life to realize that "God is above all, and through all, and in all." We must cultivate the eye that can see these beauties and the mind that can comprehend their meaning.

ETHEL MAY HOWARD.

REAL SUCCESS

NOT LONG since we had occasion to watch a little two year old boy climb up a chair, as children of that age are wont to do. The first two times he tried he fell back, and hit his head a resounding whack on the floor. But he never uttered a cry, just got up and went at it again. That boy is made of what is called "success stuff."

Success in life does not consist in never falling but in rising every time we fall. We all sometimes stumble on the way. If we never make a mistake we never shall share in a real success. If you are on the wrong track, turn back; retrace the steps and reface the day's problem resolutely.

When convinced you are wrong, never falter in admitting the fact. It makes no difference how you were brought up, what your environment was or is, what you have been taught, or what you did believe: when you are convinced that Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God, and that he was made unto you wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, come out on the Lord's side. Show to the world your change of heart by obeying the commandment of baptism, and henceforth live to do the will of God. This is real success, and there is nothing else that counts.

DEAR YOUNG PEOPLE:

I WISH to ask and answer two questions as follows:

Question by Job:

"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Answer by David:

"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."

Question by Ezekiel:

And he said unto me, son of man can these bones live?"

Answer by Jesus:

'But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not heard that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? I am not the God of the dead, but of the living."

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

Flies Jewish Flag on Ocean

NEW YORK. Dec. 31. Opening a line of shipping communication between Palestine and the United States, the steamship Kedimah, operated by the Palestine Commerce and Navigation Co., will leave this port on Jan. 25. The Kedimah will be the first ship ever to sail from New York for Palestine and will also be the first ship to fly the Jewish flag on the high seas.

The vessel will carry foodstuffs and supplies to aid in the reconstruction of Palestine and will be a connecting link between the Zionist movement in America and the Jewish homeland.—Selected by Sister J. E. Hogarth.

Immortality

Webster: "Exemption from death; unending existence."

IS MAN IMMORTAL?

According to Webster immortal means, "unperishable." The same authority defines death to be "extinction of life." Thus according to Webster to lose one's life is to die.

Jesus Christ said: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his life?"

Then according to Jesus Christ man is not immortal.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Evidently a man can perish, but blessed fact, he may, by fulfilling conditions, have eternal life in the age to come. R. H. JUDD.

A Letter to a Missionary

The Arguments of a Missionary in Defense of the Trinity Answered Biblically

Truth and Error in Sharp Contrast

DEAR FRIEND:

SEEING YOU have asked for explanation of certain passages, it seems to me, after due consideration, that it is perhaps all right that I should answer them to the best of my ability, in accordance with the injunction, "Be ye ready always to give answer to every man that asketh you a reason concerning the hope that is in you." I, however, wish it to be clearly understood that this action on my part only discharges me from the responsibility that lies upon me to live up to that standard of Peter's. You need not feel yourself in any way obligated to reply, for I certainly do not wish, any more than you, to cause unpleasantness on Bible subjects. Personally I am always glad to receive communications from others whose sincere desire is to get or to give help concerning God's word. It is my aim too, to make Scripture the test of all such correspondence.

As I have stated before, I again state, that all doctrine must be based on plain statements, statements which admit of no dispute in any way, either by translation or interpretation. Having got such a basis as an undisputed fact, other passages which are admittedly ambiguous or are open to various renderings, should be understood by the renderings most in harmony with the plain statement. It will often be found to be the case that in this latter class of passages alternate renderings given in the margin, or the translation of recognized Greek and Hebrew scholars, will bring the disputed text into line with the plain statement. The Revised Version affords many instances, and other assistance can be obtained from such acknowledged authorities as Weymouth, Rotherham, Emphatic Diglott, etc. etc.

Oregon Bible C[illegible]
Oregon, [illegible]

I think you will readily admit that the passages you bring forward to support the deity of Christ are mainly inferential passages—passages, the very translation of which is in dispute, as evidenced by the alternate renderings given, and the literature their ambiguity has called forth. For instance, Isa. 45:5, 6: "I am the Lord, there is none else; there is no God beside me." Such language is plain, and no one who understood the English language could possibly misunderstand the meaning of the words contained in the verse. To anyone with a pre-conceived idea 1 Tim. 3:16 appears to support the theory that Jesus Christ was God. The Revised Version alters this and makes it possible to bring it into line with Isa. 45:5; for God certainly was manifested in his Son. What more natural than to conclude that of various renderings possible that which brings a statement into line with positive assertion elsewhere, is the more correct translation. Now I will try to answer your questions.

You say, "If deity cannot be attributed to Christ, kindly explain the following: Heb. 1:8: 'But of the Son he saith, Thy throne O God is forever and ever.'"

Now, my friend, a little thought here would answer your own question. It is evident two distinct persons are included in this quotation, for it is the recorded utterance of a speaker to one spoken to. This no one will dispute, nor will they dispute that the speaker is God himself. If Jesus is God, then God is speaking to another God which would be a direct contradiction to Isa. 45:5, where God says, "there is no God beside me." As we believe no true Bible doctrine contradicts another, and as we cannot get away from the fact that "there is none other God but one," we must look for an explanation of Heb. 1:8 that will not be antagonistic to Isa. 45:5, and yet at the same time be truly in accord with rightly dividing the word of truth, and to those who seek earnestly the elucidation of such difficulties as these is soon forthcoming.

In the first place, we notice that the passage is quoted from Psa. 45. We see there a marginal reading given which puts the difficulty away entirely and which, when compared with other Scriptures, proves the marginal reading to be correct. The way the reading is inserted in the margin shows very clearly that the translators consider it equally correct with the text. The reading is, "Thy throne is the throne of God;" not his own throne, but another's even God's. Rev. 3:21: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame and sat down with my Father on his throne." This view is strengthened by noting carefully the verse following: "Thou hast loved righteousness and hated wickedness, therefore God, thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." Several pithy questions are suggested by this latter quotation but it will take too much time to note them all now.

Matt. 1:23: "They shall call his (Jesus) name Immanuel which is being interpreted, God with us."

This verse has often been a puzzle to me, because I failed to see the connection between calling him "Jesus" and "Immanuel," as implied by the opening words of verse 22, but I never gave the verse any real study until your question came. By comparing the accounts of Matthew and Luke and Isa. 7:14 much interesting information is obtained. Both accounts agree in calling his name Jesus. They seem to differ when Matthew says his name shall be called "Emmanuel," and Luke says he shall be called the "Son of God," or as the 32nd verse significantly says, "the Son of the Highest" (there can only be one highest). But do they really differ? Are not the two names, "Son of God" and "Emmanuel," practically synonymous? The name Emmanuel is not again repeated; Son of God is. Added to this, is the acknowledged fact that Matthew's gospel treats more than the others of the kingly aspect, and for good reasons; for God had left his people (see Ezek. 21:27), and had not manifested his presence with them through either prophet or king— now he purposed to manifest himself through his Son (Heb. 1:1).

Then again if you will turn to Isa. 7:14 you will find the following references given: Gen. 41:25; 16:11; 29:32; 30:6, 8; 1 Sam. 4:21. These are all instances of names given with reference to special circumstances of birth, and in each one God is in some way definitely recognized, as for instance, Naphthali, "wrestling with God." That Jesus could be appropriately called "Emmanuel" is well attested by the statement that "God did the works by him."

Matt. 22:45, you say "appears to be a claim of the Christ to be the 'Adonai' of the Old Testament."

I will get further information on this point, but meantime would note the following: This is a quotation from Psa. 110:1, and I notice that two words are evidently used for the word (in English) "Lord." The first Lord, the second the Revisers have dropped the capital L and put the word

"lord" in place. If that is correct, the quotation should of course read the same way. This seems to be fairly clear evidence that two distinct persons are spoken of, neither being of equal rank. That they cannot be equal is evidenced by the statement "I will put thine enemies underneath thy feet." Again Christ said "David in spirit called him lord" (not Lord). If Jesus was as you say elsewhere, actually "Jehovah God," there would be no need for such a qualification.

A further explanation may be had by turning to Exodus 23:21, where God says of the angel (see R. V.) "my name is in him." From this you will get a reference to Jer. 23:6, which shows, that it is true also in relation to Jesus Christ.

Mat. 12:29: "The Lord our God the Lord is one."

Your remark that if the text proves the unity of God, it also proves the unity of the Lord is to my mind extraordinary logic, or it amounts to making the Lord one person, and "our God" another person, whereas the word says "The Lord our God." Lord means ruler, God is the one true God, and is so called by Jesus Christ. He is also called "The Lord of heaven and earth" by Jesus. Your contention that because God is called Lord and Jesus Christ is also called Lord, they must be one and the same God, is to me much like saying because your son bears your name therefore you and he are the same individual. But it would seem to me more logical in such case to find out in what sense Jesus Christ is the Lord. Paul says, "there are gods many and lords many," but he still says, "to us there is but one God," because he elsewhere says we know that an idol is nothing. There may be other good reasons—undoubtedly are—but one, it would seem to me, is that under God (God already being mentioned in 1 Cor. 8:6) Jesus Christ is the one Lord or ruler to whom all power is given (see Acts 2:36).

John 10:33: You say "If Christ did not lay any claim to deity, why did the Jews accuse him and stone him for such a claim?"

You make two errors here. Christ did not claim to be God, but called God his Father. What he did claim to be was "the Son of God" (verse 36). I do not think the record says they stoned him.

Gen. 16:7-13.

Surely here is an instance of Exod. 23:21. The angel of the Lord can scarcely be the Lord himself, yet you ask, "are the angel of Jehovah and Jehovah one and the same?" Beside we are distinctly told, "No man hath seen God at any time. Then whom did Hagar see? Jehovah or the angel of Jehovah? You seem to lay emphasis on the definite article "the," as you underline it. Probably you wish to imply as some assert, that the "angel of the Lord" was Jesus Christ. If the angel here was Christ, and he also appeared to Abraham and Joshua was Paul correct in saying in Hebrews, that Christ was to come a second time? That is just a passing thought. But look more closely at the passage in Gen. 16, and I think you will readily see that "the angel of the Lord" was not speaking in his own name, because he was God's messenger, and had God's name in him; he could say, "I will," etc., as in verse 10. Notice however verse 11 where he qualifies the personal pronoun just used by saying, "The Lord hath heard," etc. Had he been Jehovah God himself, he would have combined the use of the first person throughout the passage, as God does in similar language in Isaiah. There is no confusion of thought, idea or fact, or anything unreasonable in such an exegesis as I have given, and it has the advantage of being based entirely on Scripture and agrees with common sense whereas I have never yet met a man who professes to see reason in the views you advocate. They think they are scriptural, and because they think God's book is reasonable (and it is) they think their reasoning must therefore be correct, even though they cannot explain the difficulties entailed.

You next say: "If deity cannot be attributed to Christ, is it right to attribute humanity to him? or was he who is Son of God a different being to either God or man?

We are twice told "God is not a man." If God is not a man, then how can man be God? That is my question. Please turn up the following passages and you will get the answer to the first part of your question and you will find some of them significantly expressive:

Deut. 18:15: "Like unto thee, of thy brethren."
Isa. 53:3: "Man of sorrows."
Zech. 5:2: "The man whose name is the Branch."
Zech. 13:7: "The man that is my fellow."
John 1:30: "A man preferred before me."
Acts 3:22: "A man approved of God."
Acts 7:37: Quotation from Deut. 18:15.
Acts 17:31: "By that man whom he ordained."
1 Cor. 15:21: "By man also the resurrection."
1 Cor. 15:47: "The second man, the Lord from heaven"
1 Tim. 2:5: "The man, or himself man."
John 8:40: "A man that hath told you the truth."
This will answer your question.

SERVANT JESUS:

Isa. 42:1; 49:5; 52:13; 53:11; Ezek. 34:23; 37:24; Zech. 3:8; Matt. 12:18-20; 20:27, 28; Luke 22:27. It will be worth your while to turn up these passages.

ANOINTED: Psa. 2:26; Isa. 61:10.

ELECT: Isa. 42:1; 42:6.

CHOSEN: Isa. 42:1; Psa. 89:3, 19; Luke 23:35; 1 Pet. 2:4.

A servant serves a superior; generally a person is anointed by a superior, and is chosen or selected by a superior. In any case whether superior or not, two persons are necessary to such transaction.

These texts refer to Christ both before and after resurrection. Honestly, are they by any rule of grammar at all compatible with the idea that Jesus Christ is (as you say) Jehovah God? You do not find such statments applied to God. Christ was the Son of God; his birth was a miracle. He had no human father but was born of a woman (Gal. 4:4). See also Isa. 11:10; Rev. 22:16; Psa. 132: 11; Gal. 3:16, 29 and many other passages

If Christ was neither human nor God, the only other alternative would be that he was an angel; but according to Christ's authority an angel "cannot die." If Christ was an angel he certainly was not Jehovah God, for God is nowhere represeneted as an angel

The subject of angels is somewhat intricate. An angel is a messenger, but all messengers are not angels. The subject is too large to quote now.

Now in your letter which is separate from the question enclosed, speaking of the Trinity, you say: "This subject is not a mystery to me at all—not in the least. It is as clear as anything I believe in the Bible, at least the possibility of a trine God is clear."

Now if you can make a statement like the above, I certainly must congratulate you, for you are the first man I have ever met in over 50 years of life who has ever said so or anything like it. When a man can write as definitely as that about any subject we naturally expect him to be able to give a convincing and lucid explanation of what is to others a serious difficulty. Here is your explanation. How much is anyone helped by it?

"If a man can be a trinity of body, soul, and spirit, why cannot God be a trinity of Jehovah, Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit? Jehovah being God in the soul aspect, Jesus Christ being God manifested in bodily form, and the Holy Spirit the Spirit of God."

Probably the best thing for me to do is to ask you to read your own explanation over a time or two then answer it yourself, bearing in mind that you believe the trinity consists of three personalities, whereas man is only one personality—one being, not three beings! You stated while here that you believed "Christ was God's body." May I then reverently ask, where was God when Christ hung on the cross? and whom did Jesus address when he said, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" I cannot help saying if you are no more clear on other Bible subjects that you are in this explanation your whole Bible must be a mystery, for such an explanation as this that you give is open to endless difficulty and absurdity. A little thought will show this. You will find that the view you take of the nature of man and of the truth regarding God will make all the difference to the proper understanding of the Book for it must be clear to you that the character of a message from one to another must be in relation to the nature of the parties concerned.

Hoping these remarks will cause a deep desire for serious thought and a deep and sincere study of the grand old Book in its natural and simple language, I remain,

Yours in service,

R. H. JUDD.

The Parables of Christ

Number Twelve

THIS PARABLE was spoken by Jesus to the pharisees soon after the parable of the vineyard and contains the same lesson. The pharisees are the ones for whom it was intended. They were responsible for the opposition against Jesus. They occupied the same position in opposing God's counsel that the official or ruling class did in the kingdom during the law or kingdom rule. The leaders were responsible for the wickedness of the people. The history of the Israelitish kingdom shows that a righteous king taught the people righteousness, and the commandments of Jehovah were kept. It is written that Jereboam caused the people to sin. As were the pastors or teachers so were the people. In the time here alluded to the pharisees were the pastors who caused the people to sin.

In this parable Jesus uses a different frame work and also a different class of characters. The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king which made a feast for his son, and sent forth his servants to call them who were bidden to the wedding; and they would not come. In this parable we have a king instead of a householder, also the king's son. We have a bidden guest instead of an husbandman to appropriate the fruit of the vineyard for earthly gain. A king possesses all power and to make light of his invitation had a tendency to anger him and cause him to punish his subjects when the bidden guests mistreated the king's subjects whom he had sent and slew them. The king being wrath sent forth his armies and destroyed these murderers and burned up their city

In the study of this parable we should note that the bidden guest constitutes a privileged class. Court etiquette placed them above the common people. Under these conditions it was a crime and worthy of death. It required but little thought to know that this class is identical with the pharisee class who so madly opposed Jesus and the gospel of the kingdom of God. The second class bidden were found on the highway. This was a mixed assembly, but they were considered worthy as they accepted the invitation sent by the king, and gladly partook of the dainties of the king's table. The king's servants gathered both bad and good. In the parable of the two sons Jesus said that the publicans and harlots go into the kingdom before you. The privileged guests were not worthy, and lost their standing in the king's household. To the mixed guests the king provided wedding garments for those who heeded his invitation. This constitutes them of a lower cast, and and places them among the common people who always heard him gladly.

While the wedding festivities were being enjoyed the king discovered a guest who had no wedding garment on. The identity of this man is not easily determined. However, we find but two classes of guests, a privileged and a specially invited guest. A king's household has servants who can go before the king, but must be dressed in garments of a royal character. Our soldiers are known by the style of their dress. A private soldier is under no obligation to recognize his superior unless he is clothed in garments provided by army regulations. Therefore the specially provided wedding garment must have been of different color and style to those worn by the king's household.

To identify this man who had no wedding garment on as a pharisee may meet with opposition by some. The religious garment worn by the pharisees was his self-righteousness, and had no place in the king's household or that of his specially invited guests so that he was an enemy to the king is evident by the punishment administered. When approached by the king he was speechless. He made no attempt to justify himself in being at the wedding without a specially prepared garment. The judgment pronounced against him was, "Bind him hand and foot and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." It is observable that when the pharisees met Jesus in argument they always met with a defeat and were silenced. When the pharisees took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk, they sent their disciples and asked him a question relative to the payment of tribute money. When he answered their question they marvelled and left him and went their way. In the examination of the parables where a mixed assembly is introduced, some writers identify this class as Gentiles. Our study of the parables leads us to reject this theory. After the resurrection of Jesus the apostles were directed to preach the gospel to every creature. Peter declared how God at the first visited the Gentiles to take out a people for his name. This class will be grafted into the tame olive tree to supply the Jewish broken off branches (Rom. 11:17). The Gentiles who accept this call will be a royal priesthood. The call to israel will come when they accept Jesus as their Messiah.

A Great Question

1. The question is often asked, What is man? Are we not men ourselves, and do we not come into daily contact with other men?

2. The men and women the Bible speaks of, and to whom the offer of salvation is made, are "mortal" men, "formed of the dust of the ground." They are men of like passions as ourselves and subject to the same laws of begettal, birth, life, and death as the rest of the animate creation (Eccl. 3:18, 19; 9:4-6).

3. It was for the purpose of saving such men as these—perishing men—from sin and its consequences, the second death, that Jesus Christ died.

4. Can you not see that if you are immortal, imperishable, the gospel does not appeal to you? for Christ came not to save the righteous but sinners to repentence. God only gives immortality to the righteous.

5. Are you prepared for such an issue and all that it means to yourself and to others?

Yours faithfully,

R. H. JUDD.

Inequalities Among Men

WHAT SOCIALISM is in politics Larger Hope is in religion. Both are distressed about the inequalities in the government of God. They seem to labor under the delusion that God must treat all men exactly alike. That some men should have greater plenty than others is no more a hardship than that some should have better health, or understanding, or longer lives. If there could be a claim of right to any of these things, all men would have an equal claim; but as they are entirely the free gifts of God, he may certainly give them in what proportion he pleases, or not give them at all. He has made some orders of beings much lower than the lowest of men; he has made others much higher than the highest of men (the angels): and doubtless he could have made them unspeakably higher than they are. If then any part of creation may complain of inferiority, every part may complain without end. If any part may complain merely because it suffers something, no part that we are acquainted with, is exempt from all suffering. Of complainers Jude 16 bears this testimony. "These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage."

According to Jude "complainers" are apostates, and their complaints are dressed up in "great swelling words" to decoy the simple. Yes; sometimes they even quote Scripture. This week we received a letter from a correspondent in which he accused God of partiality in calling Abraham "alone" (Isa. 51:2), leaving all his relations in idolatry (Josh. 24:2). God had no right to be thus partial! This "complainer" then closed his letter by "swelling words," even the words of David in Psa. 145:9: "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over his works." Let us here state some facts about this Scripture, set them down just as they are:

1. God "is" good to all in the present tense: mark that: "IS good"; not will be good in the resurrection, or at some other future time.

II. Some men are ignorant and sinful and lost now, notwithstanding God in the present tense "is" good to all.

III. God is immutable the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning (Jas. 1:17). Therefore God will never be so good, but that ignorance and sin and death may reign among mortals.

This conclusion can no more be evaded than you can dodge a flash of lightning were it to strike you; for God is just as good now as he ever will be to all eternity; and yet, notwithstanding his present infinite goodness, which cannot be increased an atom, hunderds and thousands and millions live and die in ignorance of the gospel, guilty, miserable, and condemned. Now if God's infinite goodness save them not now from ignorance, then his immutability forbids their salvation forever. "Great swelling words" blind the eyes of Universalists and Restorationists to the dilemma in which they inevitably involve themselves and their doctrine when they quote Psa. 145:9. It would be much better for their system if they could quote a text which declared that God was not now very good, but would get better at the resurrection! This is the point they want to prove; let them get busy and prove it, if they can. Then they might have some ground upon which to rest the hope that those dying in ignorance would be redeemed at the resurrection by the INCREASED goodness of God. Since Paul asserts that God makes the differences among men (1 Cor. 4:7), those who complain about those differences do nothing less than impugn the character of Jehovah.

The Book of Job Analized

A Biographical, Doctrinal, Astronomic, and Prophetic Exegesis: By Christabel

POOR JOB! Bildad the Shuhite takes up the cudgel; and oh how it hurt, though it may have been true enough, to hear him say, "Doth God pervert judgment? or doth the Almighty pervert justice? If thy children have sinned against him and he have cast them away for their transgression; if thou wert pure and upright: surely now he would awake for thee." Job sorrowing for the possibly merited death of his sons and daughters, yet conscious of his own rectitude in life, acknowledges the truth of Bildad's reasoning, and in words of simple dignity gives expression to his conception of the omnipotence of God; "How should man be just with God? . . . which shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble. Which commandeth the sun and it riseth not; and sealeth up the stars. Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea. Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south. Which doeth great things past finding out; yea, wonders without number. Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not, he passeth on also, and I perceive him not."

It would seem from these words that while Job is answering Bildad there is an evident display of God's power in a slight earth tremor and unusual darkness which Job, however, is loath to interpret as being manifested for his special benefit; for he says in verse 16 of the same ninth chapter, "If I had called, and he had answered me, yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice." This display of supernatural power nevertheless causes Job to reason quite correctly on the helplessness of man, whether innocent or guilty, if the scourge slay suddenly, and the resultant fact that affliction is therefore no positive proof of guilt. His reasoning, however, leads only to confusion, for his sorrows bear heavy upon him, and he longs for his days which are few at best, to cease, only praying for a brief respite before he goes "to the land of darkness, as darkness itself." In this reply to Bildad Job seems to desire the privilege of standing before God to plead his cause with him, an attitude of mind which persists until the end, not wisely, as we shall see.

Now it is Zophar's turn, and he is even more cruel and heartless in his insinuations and accusations than the other two. "Should thy lies make men hold their peace? . . . Oh that God would speak and open his lips against thee . . . If iniquity be in thine hand put it far away."

Job replies in most beautiful irony: "No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you. But I have understanding as well as you; I am not inferior to you . . . What ye know, the same do I know also." He refutes their argument that his suffering is proof of guilt by showing that the tabernacles of robbers prosper and they that reproach God are secure in this life. Finally he exclaims. "Ye are physicians of no value. Oh that ye would altogether hold your peace!" But Job's guilt is too evident to these wise men; their duty as they see it is to continue to exhort him to repentence; so again Eliphaz speaks, painting a dreadful picture of the course and end of a wicked man, to which Job answers again that he has heard all this before, and exclaims, "Miserable comforters are ye all . . . If your soul were in my soul's stead I could heap up words against you and shake my head at you. But I would strengthen you with my mouth and the moving of my lips would assuage your grief.' By which it is eviedent that the principles of the Golden Rule were salient points in Job's character. But hope is dim and despairing words follow.

Bildad resents Job's appraisal of his friends, saying, "Wherefore are we counted as beasts and reputed vile in your sight?" and follows with a further description of the calamities visited upon the wicked. Job grows more restive under their continued lashing and asks. "How long will ye vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words? These ten times have ye reproached me. . . And be it indeed that I have erred, mine error remaineth with myself." How salutary a truth to remember in our dealings with the erring who so frequently suffer in themselves for their error, justly enough surely; but let not our recriminations add more to the burden than the Lord requires.

But our hero is forced to suffer on all hands; his three friends have made themselves strange to him, his kinsfolk have deserted him, and his intimate friends repudiated him. Even his servant ignores him and his wife is indifferent to his sufferings; and those whom he loved are turned against him. And so in anguish he cries, "Have pity upon me; have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me!"

His one comfort now is in the assurance of a resurrection after his poor tortured body should long have been consumed, to which assurance he gives expression in the beautiful words of faith: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth. And after I shall awake though this body be destroyed, yet out of my flesh shall I see God." This conviction carries him triumphantly through the continued accusations and exhortations of his three friends enabling him to justify himself to the last against their charges of hypocrisy and secret sin; and they are finally silenced.

This final argumnet of Job's is a masterly thing, revealing an intimate acquaintance with nature and a conception of truth far in advance of his time, and explainable only on the ground of inspiration. Thus in Job 26:5 we might almost think that Job had an insight into the facts of the age-old but very recently developed science of geology when he says "Dead things are formed from under the waters." In these words we have the secret of fossilization, whether it be of microscopic forms or the gigantic reptiles of long past time—all owe their preservation to the agency of water. And again in verse 7: "He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing." For what long dark ages man conceived of the earth as a plain spread out and supported upon pillars (a poetical term as used in the Bible) which in turn were supported upon something else; or some equally absurd conception, when here in this ancient book was this sublime truth expressed in the simplest and most concise form, that the earth was supported upon nothing, and so, by inference, a sphere rotating and revolving in space, its axis pointing to an evidently "empty space;" empty however, only because the stars in that portion of the heavens are so immensely remote that they are invisible to anything but a photographic plate subjected to a very long exposure. And yet again. "By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked serpent." "Lo," saith the poet, "these are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him." Yet Job mentions many another part of God's ways in the further development of his argument, continuing through the 31st chapter when a new figure is introduced in the character of Elihu the Buzite.

This Elihu was a comparatively young man, full of zeal and of a particularly logical and discerning mind who had listened carefully to the arguments on both sides of this singular controversy. With his introduction we seem to gain an enlarged view of the scene before us, and note what was hitherto unrealized, that a considerable concourse of interested onlookers and listeners has assembled from far and near to observe the outcome of the dialogues between Job and his erstwhile friends. But Elihu is of a different calibre from these, and while he has listened, defferentially, because of his youth, he has nevertheless been, as he expressed it, "as a bottle filled with new wine," and ready to burst with suppressed emotion when their arguments have been so palpably weak that they have been altogether unable to prove their point. He condemned Job because he had justified himself rather than God, by which we understand that Job's attitude of mind is so frequently complaining that he had done nothing worthy of such suffering as he was enduring, was in effect charging God with injustice in his dealings with him. And the three friends are condemned because they had persisted in their charges against Job but had not been able to bring sufficient evidence forward to prove them, manifestly because they had reasoned from a false premise, whereas if they had discovered Job's really vulnerable spot, they could have made out as strong a case, against him as Elihu now proceeds to do in chapters 33 to 37, where he mercilessly calls to Job's mind his weakness in daring to feel even for the moment that the service of God was of no profit; and in language of loftiest strain he exalts God and recommends Job to humble himself and seek forgiveness.

Even as he speaks the lightnings play on the distant horizon (ch. 36:29, 30); thick clouds pile up and obscure the sun. The rumble of thunder is heard, at first faint and distant but rapidly advancing and growing louder and more loud; the lightnings flash across the whole heavens. Elihu continues his description of God's greatness notwithstanding his "heart trembleth" at this display of power, this approach of the Shecinah wherein "God thundereth marvellously with his voice." The storm breaks and passes, and as with Elijah "after the storm a still small voice," so now the voice of God answers Job from the cloud in the grandest and noblest and most sublime language ever recorded. And here it is that we seem to stand as it were on the threshold of great mysteries—the secrets of creation and of nature, which finite man can never comprehend, the questions put to Job being rich in their suggestions of omnipotence and unsearchable wisdom. Almost we see the curtains drawn aside that veils us from the infinite, and we nearly catch a glimpse of the hidden mysteries. All this has for its object the teaching of the lesson of humility made infinitely impressive to Job by the very presence of the Shecinah, God's form of visible manifestation to his people from the days of Adam when he placed this symbol at the east of the Garden until its final departure from the temple in the days of Ezekiel. "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eyes seeth thee."

And so Job confesses his confusion in that he had spoken of things too wonderful for him—things beyond his comprehension. "Wherefore," he says, "I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes;" in which confession we see the recognition of God as the supreme arbiter for whom life alone is to be regarded as a gracious gift with all its joys and vicissitudes.

The epilogue follows this conclusion of the poem itself. And here we are shown the proper value of the various arguments, the Lord himself contrasting those of Job and his three friends, altogether to Job's advantage, since the others had argued from the false premise that disaster proves previous guilt, whereas Job had rightly opposed this logic and contended that prosperity was no evidence of righteousness, and making a point of the certainty of a future state wherein all would be administered in accord with one's just deserving when in the latter day the Redeemer should stand upon the earth. Yet notwithstanding Job's faith in the ultimate triumph of his cause he had stumbled at times in his attempt at self-vindication when he erroneously thought of his affliction in the light of punishment rather than of trial with the object of perfecting a character which, as the event proved, was well able to withstand the fire.

Thus Job's trials are finished: he is vindicated, and his three friends are directed to go to him with burnt offerings, Job to act as their intercessor. We note that Elihu is exempted from this ceremony, eveidently because he alone had been able to discern the true status of the case, and had made no unfounded charges.

"And the Lord turned the captivity of Job when he prayed for his friends." Beautiful words, well worth considering. It was when Job prayed for his friensd that he became reconciled not only to them, but to his God as well. "Also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before. So the Lord blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning, and he died being old and full of days"—a child of God in whom the pure gold of faith had been brought to a great development through the fiery trials of adversity.

EVEN ME ALSO

I AM taking today a long, long journey. It is backward over my past life; and as I journey along I am startled and horrified at mistakes, blunders, and sins of omission and commission scattered along my backward track. The evils and wrongs that I have done; the noble and righteous acts I might, and should have done, but did not; and as I pass them one by one, in remorseful review the list seems endless and a terrible fear takes possession of me. Can it be possible that one so foul as I, may have a part in the glories of the ages to come? No words can express the horror of fear that overwhelms me, as I realize that when God's people are taken, I may be left. O God in heaven, is there no hope? Unworthy though I am, I belong to Christ; he has paid the purchase price. Was it paid in full? Is the cloak of his righteousness big enough to cover me, even me also? If not, then indeed must I perish! There is no other hope.

Eagerly I turn to the word, and there I read, "There is one God, and one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5). Now Webster says that a mediator is an intercessor, advocate, propitiator. In Rom. 8:34 we read, "It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen, who is ever at the right hand of God, and who maketh intercession for us." Thank God for that beam of hope! Surely, if he makes intercession, he is able to save even the most weak and unworthy of those whom he has purchased, and who belong to him.

I wonder if he is truly able to do this. Let God's word answer: "Wherefore, he is able also to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them" (Heb. 7:25). O God, I thank thee for this strong assurance. My burden of fear grows less as I find that the mantle of his righteousness does indeed cover me, even my sins completely. "God knoweth our frame." He knoweth that we are by nature weak and prone to err. He knew that even though washed and cleansed by the precious blood of Christ, yet would we stumble and sometimes fall; hence the necessity for an intercessor, a mediator, who is strong enough to stand between a just and perfect God, and his weak and erring people; and we are assured that our mediator is strong enough to accomplish that which he has undertaken.

But dear ones, let us not forget that there are conditions required, if we would have intercession from our noble Advocate now with the Father. We must earnestly repent of our sins and weaknesses, and bravely resolve to commit them no more. When our dear Lord was seized, and so shamefully abused by his enemies, and so sadly in need of the sympathy, comfort, and suport of his loved ones, they all deserted him. Even Peter publicly denied him three times in succession; and to make his denial appear more strong to those wicked and profane men and women, he cursed and swore. Surely Peter fell to the very lowest scale of human degradation, and as he realized the greatness of his fall, is it any wonder that he "went out and wept bitterly"? But his after life proved that his tears and repentance were sincere, and God forgave him, and afterwards used him to help give the gospel to the world.

David lusted after another man's wife, and caused her husband to be killed that he might have the woman. Even I am not guilty of a sin so great as this; but David repented in sackcloth and ashes and called on God for forgiveness; and he who can read the heart as an open book, saw that his repentance was sincere, and forgave him this monstrouous sin, and permitted him to become the ancestor (according to the flesh) of his only begotten Son, the Lord Jesus Christ.

Therefore dear ones, let us not despair even though like Paul (Rom. 7) we find that we are weak and carnal, and sold under sin, for what we would do, that we do not, but what we hate, that we do, for we know that in us (that is, in our flesh) dwelleth no good thing, for to will is present with us, but how to perform that which is good we find not. For the good that we would, we do not, but the evil which we would not, that do we. O wretched beings that we are! Who shall deliver us from the body of this death? Like the great apostle, let us thank God that only through Jesus Christ our Lord, may we have hope of final deliverance, in the glorious ages to come.

GOLDEN TEXT: Proverbs 3:6

IF

IF I knew that a word of mine,
  A word neither kind nor true,
Might leave its trace on a loved one's face;
  I'd never speak harshly, would you?
If I knew that the light of a smile,
  Might linger the whole day through,
And brighten some heart with a heavier part;
  I wouldn't withhold it, would you?—Selected by Sister B. Walker.

ENDURANCE

Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ (2 Tim. 2:3).

THOSE WHO have to do with the sorting of grain have established as the highest grade of wheat that is called Number One Hard.

This wheat can only be produced in cold climates, where it is exposed to the hardness of inclement weather. The hardness and endurance of the plant produces the highest grade of wheat.

In the heavenly garner God's grain will be graded in like manner, for it is written: "If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." The two sons of Zebedee who wanted the first place in the kingdom of heaven were asked if they were able to share the Lord's cup of suffering as the necessary pre-requisite to the place of honor.

1. WE MUST ENDURE HARD SAYINGS.

He who wants always to be indulged with soft speech, and goes away offended when the preacher says hard and searching things will never grade as Number One Hard. There was a group of men in Christ's day who were offended at his teaching, and left him and walked no more with him because of his teaching. They said: "This is a hard saying; who can bear it?" Apply to your own heart the words of God that cut and wound if you want to grade high in Christian life.

2. ENDURE HARD CIRCUMSTANCES.

Those who set sail when "the south winds blow softly," and seek to avoid the stress and storm of the bleak norther, will never sail into harbor with a worth while cargo. They who always pray for easy providences will never grow rich with heavenly experiences.

Never let the adverse providences sour the spirit, like a Jacob, who in unbelief murmurs "All these things are against me," when the divine hand was planning and working his highest good.

Rather seek grace that, like Paul and Silas, we may sing in the dungeon after the beating and buffeting of a hard world, and over all life's hardships write the inscription of faith: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are called according to his purpose" (Rom. 8:28).

Oh, set your sail to the heavenly gale,
And then, no matter what winds prevail,
No reef shall wreck you, no calm delay,
No mist shall hinder, no storm shall stay;
Though far you wander, and long you roam,
Through salt sea spray and o'er white sea foam,
No wind that can blow but shall speed you home.
—From "The Evangel."

DOING GOOD TO OTHERS

IN OUR Christmas number we told you that the only way to be happy was by making someone else happy, and asked you to be Santa Claus to some one worse off than yourself. The other day we saw the truth of this exemplified and was wishing that each of you could have shared our joy in witnessing such a happy scene. 120 children with their nurses, keepers, etc., forming a company of about 150, were brought from the children's hospital on Blackwell's Island—an institution supported by the city—and given an all day treat. First, a boat brought them from the Island to one of the down town piers where was waiting busses to take them to one of the larger department stores where for a time they viewed the toys; then they formed in line and were received by a big Santa Claus who shook each by the hand, gave each a word of cheer as well as a package containing a gift. Next they were taken to Drake's Restaurant, where they received a hearty meal of chicken broth, roast turkey, and all the fixings including celery and ended with mince pie and ice cream, topped off with either coffee, tea, or milk, or all three to those who wanted them; in other words, there was no stint, the children and others could have anything and everything on the menu and that in abundance. Before leaving the restaurant Mrs. Richters gave each child a half pound of good candy, which was handed them by another Santa Claus dressed in full regalia, whiskers and all. The children then were taken to Woolworth's, where they each spent one dollar, previously given them, in buying anything that took their fancy.

Their next stopping place was the Hippodrome where they were entertained in seats specially reserved for them. From there 120 of the happiest, most contented, though thoroughly tired children in New York returned to their quarters on Blackwall's Island. But if you think the children were happy you should have seen Mr. Worth, Mr. Rosen and Mr. Richters through whose generosity these children were taken from darkness and placed in God's bright sunshine for one whole day, a day they never will forget while life lasts. And what an incentive for others to do good. Jesus says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the the least of these, ye have done it to me." And the question I ask is, What do you say? What will you do?

THE TWELVE APOSTLES

DO YOU remember, if so asked, you could repeat the names of the twelve apostles? If not, perhaps this little rhyme will assist you to memorize them:

These are the twelve apostles' names:
Peter and Andrew, John and James,
Two pair of brothers who fished by the sea,
When Jesus said to them, "Follow me."
Then James the Less, and Jude were called too,
Philip and also Bartholomew,
Matthias and Thomas, who doubted the word,
Simon, and Judas who sold his Lord.

FUTURISM STATED AND ANSWERED

This booklet is now being printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Advanced orders may now be sent to The Restitution.

The Restitution

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 73 CLEVELAND, OHIO, JANUARY 25th, 1921. NUMBER 4

The New Year

Another year has vanished
With all its smiles and tears;
Another year we welcome
With mingled hopes and fears.
For memory upbraids us
With many a broken vow,
And tremblingly we falter
Upon the New Year now.
And yet whatever failings
Have bound us in the past,
This New Year may be brighter
And better than the last.
But follow close our Master
And we shall surely win
In all the coming conflicts
With our besetting sin.—Selected by Sister W. W. COY.

Important Notice

Many brethren who have subscribed, and some of whom have paid for "Good Company," do not seem to understand that the book must first be published in The Resitution, after which it will be printed in book form and forwarded to those who have ordered. This will require two or three months yet, and the exercise of patience on the part of the subscribers. The price of the book will be 30 cents per copy, postage paid.

Unconditional Promises Explained

A Sermon by Robt. G. Huggins, Delivered in Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 2, 1921

The Blessing of All Nations a Conditional Promise

TEXT: And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed (Gen. 22:18).

THE ASSUMPTION that promises unconditionally expressed are in fact unconditional, forms the very bone and sinew of Universalism, Larger Hope, and Restorationism. They say that unconditional promises are unconditional because no conditions are expressed. Let them once be made to surrender this ground and nine tenths of their fortifications must fall before the artillery of the truth. With your indulgence we propose to examine this subject thoroughly this evening, and we promise to show that all the arguments for Universalism based upon unconditional promises are like the edifice which the foolish man erected upon the sand: they must totter and fall to ruins.

A RULE OF BIBLE INTERPRETATION

Because the word "shall" occurs in the text many have assumed that the promise in the passage is unconditional. They say, "there is no condition here expressed." It is our purpose, however, to prove that many promises and threats in the Bible, which are unconditionally expressed, are conditional in fact, and depend upon the actions of men for their accomplishment. The conditions may not be expressed but they are always implied. To make this evident I submit the following rule of Bible interpretation:

> When a condition is expressed in any part of the Bible with respect to any promise or threat, that condition must be understood in all places where that promise or threat is recorded, even if not there expressed.

As this rule of interpretation, if demonstrated, demolishes Universalism completely, we must take time and elucidate it with proofs and illustrations which none can question.

Look now at Jonah 3:4: "And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and cried and said: Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." Please notice here that we have the word "shall," just as in Gen. 22:18, and that no conditions are expressed. It does not say, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown, if they do not repent." No: there are no conditions whatever expressed. If all "shall be blessed," so "shall" the Ninevites be overthrown. If "shall" in the blessing means blessing without conditions, then "shall" in the overthrow of Nineveh means overthrow without conditions. But did the Ninevites understand it so? Let us read on: "So the people of Nineveh believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them" (vs. 5). If the people of Nineveh "believed God," as this verse declares, why did they repent in sackcloth, unless they understood that there was a condition implied in the threat? If they had understood "shall" as meaning it must be, why did they not consider themselves doomed and their fate sealed? Why did they exert themselves in the manner they did? Every thoughtful mind must respond that it was because they understood that there was a condition implied in the threat in spite of the fact that the word "shall" was used in the proclamation. Did they understand the matter correctly? Let us read on and see: "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way, and God repented of the evil he said he would do unto them, and he did it not" (vs. 10). Upon this Scripture our friends of the opposition must take one of three grounds: either

1. That God told the Ninevites a falsehood; or
2. That the Ninevites were actually destroyed in forty days, and flatly contradict the Bible; or
3. That there was a condition implied in that threat. The former two they dare not assert: hence the latter they are compelled to admit. In any case the ax is laid to the root of Universalism.

The importance of our rule of interpretation justifies us in citing another case of the implication of conditions in a promise unconditionally expressed: "Wherefore the Lord God of Israel saith: I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father should walk before me forever (no conditions here); but now the Lord saith: Be it far from me (to perform this promise); for them that honor me I will honor; and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed" (1 Sam. 2:30). Here God admits that he had unconditionally promised the house of Eli permanent continuance, yet notwithstanding his promise, because that house refused to honor him, by the contempt with which they had treated his ordinances, and thus did not perform the condition implied in the promise—therefore the Lord reversed the promise: instead of continuing to confer upon them the distinctions of sacerdotal dignity, they were brought to shame and degradation.

Another striking proof of the conditionality of divine promises when the condition is only implied, occures in the history of Abraham. Let one promise to Abraham explain another. "And he said to Abraham: Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them, and they shall afflict them four hundred years; but in the fourth generation they shall come hither again" (Gen. 15:13-16). Here is another promise without conditions, and made absolute by the word "shall." The Jews who travelled through the wilderness—those disobedient fellows who probably became tainted with Universalism—contended, let us suppose, with Moses and Aaron in the following fashion: "We shall all reach Canaan without the loss of one. This is a fact as sure, as firm, and as unalterably fixed as the pillars of God's throne. God has sworn to Abraham and said 'shall'; there is no 'if' in the case, hence there are no conditions to reckon with. Mark, all ye partialists, how it reads: 'In the fourth generation they SHALL come hither again.' In addition, God confirmed the same thing to us when we were eating the passover: 'It shall come to pass, when ye come to the land which the Lord will give you, as he promised' (Exod. 12:25). God says he will give us the land, according as he has promised. No conditions here either: hence Canaan will certainly be ours; notwithstanding these partialists, Moses and Aaron, are continually trying to scare us by saying that our finite offences will frustrate the purpose of God. Don't get alarmed; such talk can only frighten the ignorant."

Plausible as this reasoning appears in the abstract the Lord has refuted this Universal logic in a most satisfactory manner. "As truly as I live, saith the Lord, your carcasses shall fall in the wilderness, and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured against me, doubtless ye shall not come into the land concerning which I sware to make you dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun. After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year shall you bear your iniquities, even forty years, and ye shall know my breach of promise—in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there shall they die" (Num. 14:28-35). This settles the question about absolute promises. "They could not enter in because of unbelief" (Heb. 3:19), notwithstanding God's oath of promse.

OUR RULE OF INTERPRETATION FORMALLY TAUGHT

To the illustrations already given we now add formal teaching. "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it; if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them" (Jer. 18:9, 10). Just as certainly as God has promised salvation to any body, just so certainly may they forfeit that salvation by disobedience. Consider this evidence: "When I say to the righteous that he shall surely live (no conditions are here expressed), if he trust in his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered, but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it. Again, when I say to the wicked, thou shalt surely die, if he turn from his sin and do that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live, he shall not die" (Ezek. 33:13-15). Suppose a Universalist could find in the Bible that all men "shall surely be saved"; still he could not from this declaration prove universal salvation unless he also demonstrates that the whole human family, without exception, obey the law of righteousness. By Ezekiel the Lord has explained in the plainest language that if he were to say the whole human family shall surely be saved; yet if they should commit iniquity, and refuse to obey him, they "shall surely die." There cannot be such a thing as an absolute or unconditional promice making sure the enlightenment and salvation of man. The quintescence of Universalism is destroyed by the formal teachings of Holy Scripture. That teaching fastens a mill-stone about its neck and plunges it into the bottom of the sea.

THE TEXT APOSTOLICALLY INTERPRETED

Our last thought is that since our text is quoted and interpreted by the apostles in the New Testament, some deference should be given to their exegesis. We get Peter's interpretation in Acts 3:25, 26: "Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed." Now Peter, is this an unconditional promise? Hear him: "Un to you first, God having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you (how ?) in turning away every one of you from your iniquities." Here we have the statement right from the mouth of Peter that we cannot be "blessed" according to the Abrahamic promise of Gen. 22:18, unless Christ turns us away from our iniquities. And mark the point with care, he was to do this by his first mission: "God having raised up his Son Jesus SENT him to bless you": not "will send him to bless you at the resurrection"! But Peter, what plan has Christ appointed to turn us away from our iniquities? His answer is: "Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out" (vs. 19). From this testimony it appears, if Peter understood Gen. 22:18 correctly, that the "blessing" promised in the seed of Abraham is forgiveness of sins, to be enjoyed by "all nations" in this life, and is conditioned upon repentance and conversion. So much for Peter's explanation of Gen. 22:18.

In conclusion, let us hear Paul's comments upon this Scripture: "When God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us" (Heb. 6:13, 18). From this Pauline declaration we learn that the "consolation" or the "blessing" contained in the Abrahamic promise in Gen. 22:18, is for those only who "lay hold upon the hope" set before them in the gospel. This is Paul's explanation of the promise. But let us hear him again: "The Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the nations through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed" (Gal. 3:8). Paul here says that the "blessing" referred to in the promise made to Abraham (Gen. 22:18) is nothing more than the "justification by faith." To make sure that we understand him correctly we ask him, Who are to participate in the "blessing" promised to Abraham? His answer is, "They which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (Gal. 3:9). "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise" (vs. 29). Well, Paul, who are Christ's? Answer: "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts" (Gal. 5:24). Heirship "according to the promise," then, is conditional. None are heirs but those who are children; for Paul says in Rom. 8:17, "If children, then heirs." If becoming "children of God" and "children of Abraham" is conditional, then the heirship "according to the promise" is conditional. I repeat, if we become "children of Abraham" conditionally we become heirs "according to the promise" conditionally: consequently the "blessing" included in the "promise" to Abraham in Gen. 22:18 is not unconditional. Paul expressly says so. "We are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 3:26). "Know ye therefore that they which be of faith, the same are the children of Abraham" (vs. 7). If Paul understood the Abrahamic promise correctly the matter stands thus:

I. The promise to Abraham is conditional.

II. All who are "of faith" are to share in the "blessing" promised.

III. We cannot be heirs "according to the promise" made to him unless we belong to Christ, who is the seed of Abraham, to whom the promise was made (Gal. 3:16, 18); and we cannot be Christ's unless we are baptized into Christ and crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts (Gal. 3:27).

IV. We cannot therefore be heirs of the "blessing promised" to Abraham unless we are children; and none can be children unless they "are of faith." The conditionality of the Abrahamic promise is now demonstrated, and Universalism is left twice dead, and plucked up by the roots.

A Parable of the Foolish Sheep and Its Interpretation

A CERTAIN shepherd had charge of a goodly flock of sheep, which were his pride and joy. They had come into the fold under his tender care, and for years they listened for his voice and were guided by his counsel in all things, and he was very happy with them, and they with him. But one night wolves from the dark woods came prowling around the fold. They beckoned and whispered to the sheep and told them of the joys of the green forests and distant mountains, where they had never been. They told them they were foolish to spend their lives in that little fold, and on these barren hills, when the world is so big and the distant woods and mountains so beautiful, cool and inviting and filled with everything that is nice and enjoyable and things good to eat.

Their voice was soft and purring, like the song of a kitten, and when they smiled they were careful not to show their cruel fangs, and their sharp claws they kept closely sheathed out of sight. But the old shepherd knew them well as dangerous enemies seeking to destroy his flock. Therefore he earnestly counselled his sheep to avoid them, to draw closer around the fire where peace and safety were, and go not near the outer enclosure where wolves and serpents prowled, nor hold any conversation with them. For they are filthy, evil and dangerous, and surely are come to destroy you. But these foolish sheep, for the first time, refused to listen to and be guided by their aged shepherd, whose greatest earthly care and pleasure was their welfare.

They said: "Our shepherd is growing old and cranky. These wolves are not dangerous. They are kind and gentle to us, and it is quite evident that they love us equally as much as does our timid, fussy old shepherd. We have often admired those beautiful mountains and green woods away off there beyond our pasture, but our old shepherd has ever refused to lead us there. So now come, let us leap over this fence and go with these nice, kind wolves and share with them the joys of freedom! We have lived too long in this stupid old pasture."

Over the fence they went; and the dark woods swallowed them up and they began to live like wolves and very soon a marvelous change began. Their beautiful wool, so silky and white, became coarse and dark like wolve's hair, and they began to grow fangs, and cruel claws, and in all things soon lost that purity and innocence which by nature, belongs to sheep, and became evil and revenous as the wolves around them.

THE INTERPRETATION OF THE PARABLE

Dear ones, this is my little parable of the foolish sheep. I will now give you the interpretation thereof. The sheep are a company of young people who have taken upon themselves the name of God and have agreed to enter his service. The shepherd is the dear old leader who first showed them the way of life and to whom they have been accustomed to go with confidence, for advice and counsel upon questions of faith and duty, and whose greatest earthly pleasure has been to guide and watch them grow strong in the truth from year to year. The bright warm fire, around which he invites them to draw in time of perplexity and danger, is the love of God. The wolves that come prowling around the outer enclosure of the fold are all evil, worldly pleasures and fleshly lusts, such as public balls and dance halls gambling dens and games of chance, saloons and strong drink, houses of ill fame and disreputable theatres and places of questionable amusement. The green woods and distant mountains are where the wolves live and practice their unholy callings. The change in the coat of the sheep and the growing of fangs and claws is the invariable consequence to a person who associates with them. They soon become like them. The fence over which the foolish sheep leap in the law of God, beyond which a true child of his may not go.

Should this little parable chance to meet the eye of any dear ones who are now making the fatal leap, or who are listening to the seductive whispers and purrings of wolves, I beg of you, dear ones, return ye unto God and your faithful old shepherd.

A Christmas Prayer

TO MY DEAR SISTER ADA ASHUTE

How I wish that you were here,
Just to share my Christmas cheer!
Chicken fried and pumpkin pie,
Mashed potatoes piled up high!
Bread and butter, peaches and cream,
Flowers as bright as poet's dream!
The children, too, to play with me,
And fill my home with song and glee

How our prayers would upward go,
To the Lord who loves us so!
But vain my wish, you cannot come,
Nor children shout o'er car and drum:
And yet I know you'll think of me,
And pray that I may happy be.
On this glad day when sweet refrain
Of "peace on earth, good will to men."

And wish the joys they prophesied,
May fill my heart this Christmas tide,
And that sad grief may pass me by.
Nor any evil thing come nigh.
For you, my Sister, true have been,
Since first I learned to call you "friend";
And so my prayers composed in love,
Ascend to him who dwells above,

Beseeching him this Christmas day,
To give you needful things alway,
Provide you food and raiment, too,
Send work such as your hands can do:
Give health and strength for daily tasks,
Give blessings such as true hearts ask,
With few dark hours and much of shine,
While you walk on in paths divine.

Waiting the dawn of that fair morn
When grief and tears and death are gone,
And Christ himself our king shall be,
And Christmas last eternally.
Trust on! trust on! he surely hears,
Thy faintest call can reach his ears!

S. ROXANA WINCE.

Obituary

Death in Adam; Life in Christ

JABEZ D. HOGARTH died Dec. 1, 1920 at his late home, Norwich, Ontario, Canada. He was in the 67th year of his age. He was the third son of Daniel and Elizabeth Hogarth. Heart trouble was the cause of his death. He leaves to mourn his loss his wife, two sons, one daughter, three brothers, six sisters, and many other kindred. He was reared in the truth, and has always been a reader and supporter of "The Restitution," well versed in the Scriptures, always ready to defend the Bible, and its teachings. He was a school teacher during the younger period of his life; recently he held a government position. His father, Daniel Hogarth, four of his brothers, and a few others were the pioneers in Ontario east of Toronto, both in clearing the land, and proclaiming the near coming of the Lord. They built a chapel at what is known as "Solina," about 69 years ago, which still stands as a beacon light in a benighted and superstitious neighborhood. All the old pioneers are gone. We who were small children at that time are now old, many have passed away. The few remaining are still waiting to hear the call of the trump. May that day soon come, and end all sorrow, death and pain.

Many of the old preachers of the long ago have labored at Solina, O. R. L. Crozier, R. V. Lyon, J. M. Stephenson, Marsh, Newman, Hines, L. C. and J. H. Thomas, Peter Hough, John Bower, James Evans, and others.

A number of the pioneers moved to other parts; the remainder of them are sleeping behind the church. The time cannot be long now. "The fig tree is budding." Come, Lord Jesus: come quickly.

Though trials still await us, and sorrows o'erwhelm.
Faith and hope will cheer us, our Father holds the helm.

Written by his cousin, J. E. HOGARTH.

GOD'S GRACE AND LOVE

What a glorious thing it is that through the grace and love of God we have been permitted to realize, to believe and proclaim that God is the Lord Jehovah, a prayer hearing and a prayer answering God; that God is the Father of Jesus who is the Christ and who, through our faith in him has become unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification and redemption; that Jesus is coming again to drive from the earth sin with its results, and establish a rule of righteousness with joy and peace.

Sunday evening, Jan. 16th, Brother George B. Alldridge gave an interesting lecture on "The Forbearance of God."

—o—

We are thankful to Brother Ball, of Philadelphia, Pa., for his work in getting new subscribers for The Restitution.

—o—

Jan. 2nd the following were baptized into Christ after making the good confession of faith concerning the gospel of the kingdom of God: Miss Mary Smith, of Monroeville, Ohio, the daughter of Brother and Sister B. F. Smith; Miss Emma Byall, of Roll, Indiana; and Mrs. Pearl Drabenstott, wife of Brother Cantwell Drabenstott, of Cleveland.

—o—

On New Year's Eve the Sunday School held their annual festival. The number of attendants was not ascertained, but the hall was fully occupied. The program given by the children was a credit to both teachers and pupils. Brother Chas. Pate is Superintendent. It is gratifying to report the Sunday School is in a flourishing condition. Twenty-five new scholars were added during last year.

—o—

For ten years we have edited The Restitution. With this issue we cease to be Editor It is not worth while here to recount our trials and labor; they are before the reader and he has his mind made up, and we can say nothing that would change his opinion. We have made friends and enemies as every man must who is faithful to dogmatic principles. Those whose sympathies were with the unchangeable principles of the gospel have been drawn to us; those whose sentiments were antagonistic to them, have been repelled from us. Some stormy times have passed over our head. Inveterate opponents of the truth have been unwearied in efforts to "kill The Restitution," to use their own words; but we have survived each wave of opposition, and thank God, during ten consecutive years, our testimony for the truth has not been silenced. If The Restitution had expired in the murderous attacks made upon it repeatedly, it would have given up the spirit like Christ died on the cross, "with a loud voice" in testimony of the truth of God. We took up our pen to edit "The dear old Restitution" fully resolved that it should be one paper "narrow" enough to preach the truth, and nothing but the truth. We have not been able to see any good purpose is served by spending money to publish abroad religious falsehoods. Therefore we have published no articles of this kind except where editorial estimate has been frankly given. In editorial strictures we have only exercised the right of a contributor. We thank God for his continued mercy to us in all our labor, and for the hearty cooperation of literary brethren who have helped us so admirably in writing. And now may God's blessing and the support of the brotherhood be transferred to Brother Brown, who succeeds us, in seven-fold abundance; and may The Restitution continue to radiate light in a dark place until the Day Star arise!

Introducing Our New Editor

THE NEXT issue of The Restitution will be edited by Brother William Brown, of Elizabeth, New Jersey. Readers will recall that during 1915 and 1916 Brother Brown contributed a series of articles to The Restitution entitled "Preaching the Truth." He is the famous "blacksmith preacher" in those much appreciated articles. Our readers will be glad to learn that so able, competent, and faithful a brother is to succeed us in the editorship of "The Restitution." We implore heaven's blessings upon him in his labor of love, and beseech the brethren everywhere to give him unstinted help and wholehearted co-operation as he toils and spins for our enlightenment, edification, and eternal well being.

Usefulness of Troubles

TROUBLES ARE often the tools by which God fashions us for better things. Far up the mountain side lies a block of granite, and says to itself, "How happy am I in my serenity—above the winds, above the trees, almost above the flight of the birds! Here I rest, age after age, and nothing disturbs me."

Yet what is it? It is only a bare block of granite, jutting out of a cliff, and its happiness is the happiness of death.

By and by comes the miner, and with strong and repeated strokes he drills a hole in its top, and the rock says, "What does this mean?" Then the black powder is poured in, and with a blast that makes the mountain echo, the block is blown asunder, and goes crashing down into the valley. "Ah!" it exclaims as it falls, "why this rending?" Then come saws to cut and fashion it; and humbled now, and willing to be nothing, it is borne away from the mountain and conveyed to the city. Now it is chiselled and polished, till at length, finished in beauty, by block and tackle it is raised, with mighty hoistings, high in air, to be the top stone on some monument of the country's glory.

So God almighty casts a man down when he wants to chisel him, and the chiselling is always to make him something finer and better than he was before.—Selected by the Editor.

"They Spake Often One to Another"

TO THE RESTITUTION READERS:

New Year greetings to all of the dear ones that are watching for our King in his glory. I want to thank all of you, young and old, that have held up the grand banner of truth. May they find that they have many stars in their crown; and may all have plenty of oil in our lamps when the Bridegroom comes.

DEAR ONES IN CHRIST:

JUST A few lines to wish you all a Happy, Healthy New Year. Let us all promise to fight more earnestly for "the faith" and to keep from the world as much as possible.

I am starting a new Correspondence Book, and I wish you all, yes, every one, would write me if only a card so I can fill my book.

"Our paper" continues to be full of good things. How thankful we are to the dear brethren who labor to make it so. I agree with Sister Ora on the second death for the wicked, a second destruction, for as in the days of Noah so shall it be when Jesus comes. The wicked were destroyed and the righteous saved. Brother Huggins says it is to be by war, and I do not doubt it. Pray that we be found worthy to escape that second death, or second desttrucion, is my prayer. Best Christian love to you all.

Your sister,

ADA ASHUTE.

—o—

DEAR BROTHER HUGGINS:

WE ARE sending a renewal for our paper. The dear old Restitution has been a welcome weekly visitor for many, many years; and it is still shedding its glorious light on our pathway. We think some of the brethren are making a serious mistake trying to broaden the narrow way. We hope to hear from some of our brethren on the text in 1 Tim. 2:4, which reads, "Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto a knowledge of the truth." I think this means the Gentiles, as well as the Jews, may repent and be saved. I hope Brother Huggins, or Brother Robison, or some one else will write something on that subject. In Christian love,

Your sister in the faith,

LAURA SKEELS.

DEAR RESTITUTION:

IT HAS been so long since I wrote a letter to you I cannot remember the date. The last two papers were so full of good articles I cannot forbear writing.

In December 21st Brother John Parker's article is one of the best I ever read, and presented in a way I never saw before. I do not see how any thoughtful person can believe in a future one-man antichrist after studying just this one article. And Brother S. H. Thomas' open letter to Mr. Thomas Edison reads like inspiration; which indeed it is, for it is inspired by the word of God, through which we in this age receive the Sprit. There are many other good words in this number of the paper which we have not space now to write of particularly.

Then the Restitution of December 28th, which we got yesterday, is nearly all good. There are no two minds exactly alike in thought, as there are no two faces exactly similar. Although all who are really in the Christ-body see eye to eye on the gospel (the things of the kingdom of God and the things of the name of Jesus Christ), yet in the interpretation of some verses in the Scriptures there are many diversities of opinion. So some things even in our beloved paper we do not see as set forth in its pages. This does not divide members of the body on essentials. Some time I want to take up some articles upon which I cannot see eye to eye with their authors, and thus perhaps get more light on the subjects under discussion.

In the issue of December 28th the Editor's sermon on "The Punishment of the Nations" is most scripturally and clearly set forth. Then "Good Company," by S. H. Thomas. How we see this verified every day before our eyes. If the Marthas were found only in the world we would not be surprised; but alas! how often we see saints who profess to have come out of the world walking with this class of aliens, striving seemingly to see who can be the most hilarious and mirth provoking and, sadder still, indulging in unclean words which is expressly forbidden. See Eph. 5:4. How few who have the courage of the Marys! To many people flattery and applause is as the breath of life. So I am persuaded many fall through this weakness of the flesh.

Then Sister Wince's lines of exhortation—how true are her words, "Love is the first and the greatest of all commandments. On this command all other commands are made to hang." In this age of self-love and selfishness how scarce is this jewel; this pearl of great price. As Sister Wince truly says, "Love expressed only in words is a mere sentiment." It is what Paul calls sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal (1 Cor. 13:1). He who truly loves God will love his brother (1 John 4:20, 21).

Then the editorial items: how true their words! It is true that the loving, trusting, generous natures are the ones who suffer when those they exalted fail them in the time of need. Selfish natures suffer only in wounded self-love. Then there is nothing truer than where children (or any one else) see one who talks and with self-superiority of the doctrine of truth and is "barren in good behavior," instead of being won to the truth are driven away from it.

The whole paper is good, but these articles and sayings seem specially to the point and "meat in due season." To all the true members of the family of God my wish is that 1921 may be the happiest year of their life; and that means the coming of the Deliverer.

Fellow Helpers' Society

THE FELLOW Helpers' Society met at the home of Brother and Sister Hugins the evening of Jan. 7th. The meeting was opened by a song after which prayer was offered by Brother Griffiths. During a short business session several of the members volunteered to visit the sick on behalf of the Society. Also much emphasis was laid upon Article I. of the By-Laws of the Society, "That it shall be the duty of each member to endeavor to teach the gospel to the world at every opportunity."

The leader of the evening was Brother Cantwell Drabenstott, who gave a very interesting and instructive lesson on the following subject. "Will there be Sacrifices During the Reign of Christ?" It was manifestly proven that Christ will exercise the double function of King and Priest upon his throne (Zech. 6:13; Heb. 7:17); that he shall intercede for sins, and offer sacrifices to the Father on behalf of the mortal subjects (Ezek. 45:17-25): and that the saints (the sons of Zadok) will also exercise this double function (Rev 1:6; 5:10; Ezek. 44:15, 16). The sacrifices under the Levitical law were prospective of the death of Christ (Heb. 9:9-15), and the breaking of bread in this dispensation is retrospective of the death of Christ (1 Cor. 11:23-26); so the sacrifices during the reign of Christ will also be retrospective and commemorative. The meeting was closed with a song, and prayer by Sister Huggins.

Report of Meetings

IT WILL soon be two months since I left my home at Chanute, Kansas, to do some preaching. I met Brother MacFarland at Wolcott, Kansas, where we had a good interest but a small attendance. The few believers there appreciated the encouragement received.

I had Brother MacFarland go with me to Jordan, Mo., where we had the usual good attendance for nearly three weeks, and got the church stirred up to resume their meetings, which they had dropped for over a year. They have a good church building here, and over thirty members.

As our church there is open for anyone to talk, the Mormons of both factions have used it, and as I had been refused one of their church buildings in Kansas City, I publicly rebuked their sectarian spirit. As a result, one of the Re-organized preachers invited me to a building of theirs a few miles away, which, however, is in a locality where they can get almost no hearing. I talked there for three evenings, followed by their preacher. I believe that all outsiders will say that I undermined their whole foundation. They challenged me to meet some of their debaters there, which I know is simply to get the people out. I accepted the challenge to meet any man they could produce in their Zion at Independence, Mo., which I predicted that they would never accept. I have heard nothing as yet about this offer sent to their authorities there. Such a debate I would truly enjoy.

Brother MacFarland returned to Kansas City and I to St Paul, Neb., to visit my parents there. I talked several evenings at the home of Sister Belle Scott, where Brother and Sister Williamson are now visiting. Through their influence and my preaching one fine looking man, Tracy Tucker, requested baptism, so I baptized him in the Loup River, in the place where Brother Almus Adams baptized my wife and I thirty-six years ago. Brother Tucker will be a light and a credit to the cause.

My expenses and those of Brother MacFarland that I paid, up to the present have been $71.00. Received in collection $60.85. Received by letter in answer to my appeal for the work in our leading paper, $32.00. Net $21.85. It is well that I had some money in the bank before leaving home, as our taxes are $60 in the city. This shows how badly we need conference funds for work in over 25 states where there is not a dollar in the Lord's treasury for evangelistic work. See Ezek. 7:19.

Seventh Day Adventists and Mormons, in one call can raise several thousand dollars and the Jews can raise millions, but our people have not been educated in God's way of tithing. Therefore God's treasury is empty and the great mass of those who profess the faith of Abraham (Heb. 7:4-9), have a barren faith and a lip-service love (James 2:; 1 John 3:18).

Brother MacFarland and I tried to get the use of several missions in Kansas City, when they were not in use, but all showed sectarian fear of their craft, and shut out Christ in his truth and in his brethren. I had hoped to sell my property in Chanute, to buy a building for meetings but close money conditions spoiled my sale. We are praying that the Lord will yet supply the means to start in Kansas City a real "Fearless Truthseeker's Mission," where anyone can have a hearing. I am now preaching in the Christian Church at Ferguson, Iowa, with good interest.

I Wonder

IF it be a fact that the righteous dead are now in the high courts of heaven, and know infinitely more than when on on earth, as popular theology teaches, I wonder what Solomon means when he says: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might, for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest" (Eccl. 9:10).

If the righteous dead are now playing on golden harps before the throne of God and singing praises to his holy name, as creeds and hymn books teach, I wonder what David means when he says: "In death there is no remembrance of thee (God), in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" (Psa. 6:5). God says by the mouth of Solomon: "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything" (Ecl. 9:5). The modern preacher says the dead know infinitely more than the living. I wonder which is true.

If the soul or thinking part of man, is immortal and cannot perish, as popular theology teaches, I wonder what David means when he says: "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4).

A father of a large family and a brother of standing in the church is dead, and on the front seats of the church sit the bereaved family. The minister, thinking to teach an impressive lesson says: "Dear children, your honored father is not dead. This form you see in the casket is only the house in which he lived. Your father is now in heaven, and is looking down in pity upon you. If you do that which is right you will make him glad, but if your deeds are evil you will cause him sorrow." I open my Bible and read: "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them" (Job 14:21). Shall we believe God or man ?

If man is by nature immortal, as theology teaches, I wonder what Job means when he says: "Shall mortal man be more just than God ?" (Job 4:17). In 1 Tim. 4:16 Paul tells us plainly that "God only hath immortality." If this be true, I wonder how all mankind can possibly possess it.

I wonder why the great mass of professing Christians refuse to believe the plain teaching of God's word on these and kindred subjects, and by so doing exchange. as did their father Esau, their precious birthright for a mess of pottage. God in heaven, I wonder why!

Obituary Again

JACOB BARBER, aged 67, died Wednesday morning at 12:15, Jan. 12, 1921, at his home in Salem, Ohio. About nine years ago he had a slight stroke of paralysis from which he never fully recovered. His last sickness lasted less than two weeks, when he fell asleep in Jesus, waiting the soon coming of him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life. He who believeth in me, though he be dead, yet shall he live again."

Brother Barbar was born July 31, 1853, near Salem, Ohio. He was baptized into Jesus Christ in 1905, and was always regular in attendance at church services and gave of his means each first day. While a young men he made two trips through Europe, after which he moved to San Francisco, Cal. For the last 18 years he has been in the jewelry business. He is survived by his wife and a foster daughter, whom they reared from childhood, Frank Barber, a brother, who lives near Salem, Ohio, three sisters, Mrs. Nannie Faucett, Elizabeth Blackburn, and Ella Dwiggins, also three half sisters, Mrs. Mary Godward, of Oklahoma, Miss Hanna Barber, and Mrs. Edith Holcomb, who reside in Colorado.

Funeral services were held in the Friend's church conducted by Brother Walter S. Tomlinson, of Cleveland, Ohio. Burial in Grand View Cemetery.

KINDNESS

'Tis not alone what we give .
That makes the joy of living,
But rather burdens we relieve
By our unselfish giving.

Sweet thoughs, kind words, and noble deeds,
Their power we cannot measure,
So oft they are the golden seeds
That bring forth hidden treasure.

A friendly act that's timely done.
A few words gently spoken,
May soothe the anguish of some one
Or heal a spirit broken.

It is not meet that we should pray
For deeds of pomp and splendor,
But rather fill each passing day
With service true and tender.

THE HOLY LAND OF LIFE

"AND GOD said, Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standeth is holy ground" (Exod. 3:5).

This is God's way of letting us see Moses turn a sharp curve in the road of his destiny. It may be that Moses, up to this flashing hour, thought himself a huge failure. But life, like the mountain, requires perspective for adequate measurement or appreciation. Therefore, looking back upon the career of Moses preceding the burning bush, it appears as a splendid whole inwrought of meaningful details. Behold him as a babe in the ark of bulrushes. Think you the eyes of his mother and sister watched over him as jealously as did the eyes of God ? Behold him as a scholar-courtier. What training could have been more serviceable than those growing years in the Egyptian court ? Behold him as a vindictive, ill-advised reformer. Did not his indignant outburst of temper, resulting in murder, admonish him of the wisdom of patience in the weary years yet to be ? Behold him as a refugee from Pharoah's avenging hand. But in seeking refuge in the wilderness did he not simply retreat more deeply into the divine solitudes, "the mother country of the strong" ? Behold him as a shepherd tending his father-in-law's sheep. But it was while a shepherd of sheep that God made him a shepherd of the centuries. Now what is greatly explicit in the soul of Moses is vitally implicit in the soul of every human. Therefore, it may prove instructive and inspirational to study our text as a kind of guidepost to the Holy Land of Life, hearkening unto the Ancient of Days as he speaks not only unto Moses but unto us, saying:"Draw not night hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground."

Today, as in the case of Moses, place occupies an important position in the Holy Land of Life. "The place whereon thou standest is holy ground." Then let us identify the place where Moses stood. "And he led the flock to the back of the wilderness." The wilderness! And what is a wilderness ? It is a stretch of land inhabited only by wild beasts—that is one definition of a wilderness. It is a desert, whether forest or plain—that is another definition of a wilderness. We do not need to insist upon exact topography in order to appreciate the environment of Moses. It is enough to know that the place wheron he stood possessed the grayness, the dulness, the drabness of a wilderness. Yet that place suddenly became glorious! There was a swift revelation of the presence of God, a quick understanding that the Father was near. "And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush."

One very practical question emerges here. What makes any place glorious ? The answer is twofold, as old as Moses, as new as yourself. First, there is God, with his universal, besieging, heartwarm presence. "And the angel of the Lord appeared"—when God exposes himself the wilderness catches fire, the place becomes glorious. What is your wilderness ? Is it a factory, or is it behind a counter ? Is it a career steeped in ignorance, or is a laboratory full of intellectual brilliance ? Is it a hall bed room, or is it a palace ? Is it pushing a wheelbarrow, or is it travelling in a private car ? Is it the heavy load of poverty, or is it the golden burden of wealth ? In each and all of these spheres the possibility of a wilderness—dry, songless, infertile—are not only impinging and immediate, but appalling, terrible, dreadful. Only the holy invasions of God can resuce men from those invisible, rainless lands where no spiritual water is, where inner wildernesses stretch on and on through the gray wastes of time and eternity. Do you wonder that the angel of the Lord was enclothed in bush and fire ? Then let him possess your being, and all other wonders, though wonderful still, must still be secondary wonders. This is the finding of every human in every land in every age who has met God in life's way. The unity of the experience of godliness is as definitely established as the unity of natural law, and infinitely better worth realizing. "The only death to be feared," said Paracelsus, "is unconsciousness of the presence of God."

MARRIED

ON THE evening of Tuesday, Dec. 28, 1920, in the presence of about fifty invited guests, Miss Marion Leslie Douglas and Mr. N. Martin Swensen were united in marriage. The ceremony being performed by Pastor John Donaldson, an uncle of the bride. The ceremony was both interesting, and instructive, the Pastor giving, in few well chosen words, the origin of the ring as well as its significance.

The house was prettily decorated in autumn leaves, under a canopy of which the bride and groom stood during the ceremony. Knowing the young couple as we do, we bespeak for them a happy future, feeling assured that they will follow the Pastor's advice, to be as careful and considerate of each other's feelings during the marriage term as they were during the days of courtship. And we pray that the union will not terminate with this life, but that each as son and daughter of the Most High will be with him in the kingdom of his Christ throughout eternity.

GROW IN KNOWLEDGE AND IN GRACE

THE PRIMARY need of the world is to know God through personal experience. The disclosure of God's love for man came in the regular order of events. Indeed some one has said, and in truth, that Christianity represents the law of the universe. The all-powerful God is not subordinate to his creation. Matter is the mask which on occasion he removes to assure his creatures of his love for them. To such as are children he invites to be "fellow workers" with him. Many sincere Christians speak of God as a companion. This is a point for thought for the new year. The nearness of the Father, who is in sorrow when we err and who rejoices when we achieve a spiritual victory, is a vital doctrine of fact not to be overlooked. To grow in grace simply means that, in a marked degree, we have come to a knowledge of God and his Christ. Kindred spirits naturally are drawn together, hence community of life with the Father and the Son to the real Christian should be (is) a normal experience.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 73 CLEVELAND, OHIO, FEBRUARY 1st, 1921. NUMBER 5

Chrystmasse of Olde

God rest you, Chrysten gentil men,
Wherever you may be—
God rest you all in field or hall,
Or on ye stormy sea;
For on this morn oure Chryst is born
That saveth you and me.

Last night ye shepherds in ye east
Saw many a wondrous thing;
Ye sky last night flamed passing bright
Whiles that ye stars did sing,
And angel came to bless ye name
Of Jesus Chryst oure Kyng.

God rest you, Chrysten gentil men,
Faring where'er you may;
In noblesse court do thou no sport,
In tournament no playe,
In paynim lands hold thou thy hands
From bloudy works this daye.

But thinking on ye gentil Lord
That died upon ye tree,
Let troublings cease and deeds of peace
Abound in Chrystantie;
For on this morn ye Chryst is born
That saveth you and me.—Selected by JOHN PARKER.

Dissertation on the Trinity

"Prove All Things; Hold Fast that which is Good"

IN A preceding paper we especially noticed the argument, and some of its consequences, regarding what might have been the case had God the Father not raised Christ from the dead. We saw clearly that in such an event Christ would have remained dead, and that all others that have since died and were buried would also remain in the same condition. We also saw in prospective that the proof of such a possibility regarding Christ "would astonish many of us, as it confronts us with opinions and beliefs we formerly held to be true; for a fact once established cannot be overthrown, but itself overthrows falsehood."

IS THE TRINITY A TRUE DOCTRINE?

Bearing these thoughts in mind, let us ask ourselves the question, Is the Trinity true? Is Jesus Christ God?

It is the common belief of all Protestant and Roman Catholic churches that God is three in one, and one in three; and for anyone to deny such teaching is looked upon as heresy of the worst kind.

I was recently reading the sermon of a very noted theological professor in which he said, "certain facts in Christianity were above reason." To my mind, no scriptural fact is "above reason," and if we will only use the reason with which God has endowed us I am persuaded that all scriptural truths are based on the very best of reasons, and it is only owing to our lack of knowledge that we cannot now fully comprehend. I am, moreover, more and more inclined to the belief that many doctrines given out to be scriptural facts, are neither scriptural nor are they facts; and this is my firm belief regarding the subject under consideration.

I am well aware that many of my best friends in both "orthodox" and 'conditionalist" faiths are believers of the doctrine of the Trinity and I do not write these lines in thes pirit of personal attack upon any of them, though I may perhaps admit that some of my articles have been written in hope that quiet and attentive reading may yet influence some in whom I have a special interest. I have, however, given the matter a good deal of study, and the more study I give it the more I am impressed by its importance and the responsibility that lies upon me to testify to the truth.

Oregon Bible College
Oregon, Illinois

REASON AND SCRIPTURE BLENDED

It was my intention to deal with this question from a reasonable standpoint first, and then from a scriptural; but these two issues are so blended it seems well nigh impossible to separate them. For a moment I just wish to call your attention to one of the many marvels of this Bible of ours. Here we have comprehended in one volume 66 books, written by men of greatly varying capacity and widely separated from each other in point of time, each being in totally different surroundings and circumstances, without any possible collusion of authorship, yet all agreeing in oneness of mind and expression concerning such vital truths as the one now under consideration. Surely this is a marvel indeed.

In our last paper we came to realize that Christianity could only stand if the resurrection of Christ were an assured fact, for if that were disproved then Christ himself remained dead and all hope vanished. I have never yet met a professing Christian who did not acquiece to that statement, yet I have met very few, comparatively speaking, who have realized its full meaning. They admit, as Paul did, the possibility that Christ might have remained in the tomb; but they seem to be blind to the fact that if it were necessary for Christ to be raised from the tomb before he could again be alive, it would be equally so for them. They also seem to overlook that fact that if God did not raise Christ from the dead then one member of the Trinity (according to their belief) would be for ever dead—if part, why not the whole? When these serious facts first dawned upon me I was staggered by them, but was unable to get away from their logical force; for I could not help realizing that in whatever direction a fact may lead, its legitimate conclusion can only lead to the truth, or the proof of its being a fact is weakened. Some facts being temporary changes and circumstances have effect upon them. There are others, which to all eternity must by their very nature remain the same, and which God himself recognizes in his dealings with mankind as recorded in his word. The former class are numerous, and will be easily called to mind; as for instance, the proportions of land and water upon the earth are a present fact, but they will not always be the same. Among the latter class, possibly less numerous but none the less real, are the facts relating to number, the laws regarding which are absolutely immutable. This is a point that any thoughtful person can realize, else the whole universe would be in confusion, as the relative proportion of things could not possibly be understood. For instance, the fact that two and two make four can never admit of dispute. Three cannot stand for one, and one cannot possibly stand for three. Numerics have a very prominent place in God's word, as a simple reference to the concordance will show, and deeper study will intensify the assertion. Another instance of an immutable fact, is the positive law that two objects cannot possibly occupy the same space at the same time. These instances will suffice for our purpose; we way perhaps note others incidently, later.

THE UNITY OF GOD

Now I wish you to specially notice some passages in the Bible declaring the existence of God, and you will readily see how fact, figure, and reason agree with the sacred word, and the objects I have in view in calling your attention to the statement just made.

DEUT. 6:4: "Hear O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is one." Could language possibly be more simple to understand? The children of Israel knew the gods of the heathen were many; but in contrast they were told that Israel's God was one, and only one. This fact is repeated again and again. In many cases it is repeated with emphasis, as for instance in Deut. 4:35-39, where we are told, "there is none else beside him." Isa. 44:6-8, "Beside me there is no God." Read Isa. 45:5, 6, 14, 18, 21, 22. Six times in this one chapter is this fact reiterated! Reader, are we not in danger of "making God a liar" if we persist in teaching the Trinity in face of such unequivocal statements? Scores of passages in God's word make the assertion that "God is one," and many hundreds carry the proof of it. Is there any passage anywhere that affirms there are three gods who are one God, who in reality is three? We who are believers in conditional immortality make it a strong point that belief must be built on plain statements. God nowhere says the soul is immortal, we therefore do not believe it, so here, God nowhere states the Trinity: can we believe it, then?

Let any candid, God-fearing Christian quietly study the following passages, and say if the doctrine of the Trinity can logically or legitimately be drawn from any one of them—nay more, do they not categorically deny it?

John 17:3: "The only true God, and Jesus Christ."
Mark 12:29: "The Lord our God is one Lord."
Mark 12:32: "For there is one God and there is none other but he."

1 Tim. 2:5: "For there is one God, one Mediator between God and men, himself man, Jesus Christ."

Some say the doctrine of the Trinity is the progressive revelation of God in the New Testament; but the generally accepted doctrine that Christ is God could hardly be more forcibly denied than it is in this last quoted passage.

1 COR. 8:4-6. These verses are, if possible, even more impressive: Deut. 32:39; 1 Sam. 2:2; Isa. 46:9; John 5:44, R. V.; Eph. 4:5, 6; Mark 16:19. In this reference we have an apt illustration of the second instance of an immutable fact. See also Acts 7:55; 2:22; Rev. 3:21, which illustrate the same point. In the same connection see also Acts 10:38, and consider if it admits of any reasonable interpretation from a trinitarian point of view.

1 PET. 1:3. "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

PHIL. 2:9. "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him and given him a name which is above every name."

To reconcile such language as is contained in these texts with the current doctrine of the Trinity is utterly impossible to anyone who abides by the axiom that language is for the purpose of conveying an idea—not to hide it.

JOHN 10:30. "I and my Father are one." This text is frequently used in support of the Trinity, but properly read anyone must see the absurdity; for in that sense how could there be "one" without the Holy Spirit, for two certainly never made a trinity. The conjunction "and" completely upsets the idea. If that idea is in the verse the sentence is incomplete. "I and my Father are one"; one what? But take the view meant to be conveyed, viz., oneness of mind and purpose, nothing need be added; for Christ had been speaking of the safety of his sheep, and on that point he and his Father were indeed one. See also John 17:20, 23; 8:16-18; 1 Cor. 1:3; Gal. 1:3; Eph. 1:2. Note the conjunction "and" in these verses. The fact that in many instances God is the giver and Christ is the recipient, both before and after resurrection, disproves equality with God.

PSA. 21:4: "He asked life of thee and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever."

REV. 1:18: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive for ever more." Was God ever dead? Perish the thought!

1 COR. 13:4: "He liveth by the power of God."

If words mean anything we are told that Christ actually owes his present existence to God (by resurrection). It is not possible to harmonize such a statement with the doctrine of the Trinity, and it is to my mind the strongest possible argument against any belief in the Trinity or the deity of Christ. These three last quoted passages clearly show that Christ owes his very life, his present life, to the power of God, owing to the fact that God raised him from the dead. Here let me say I believe in the divinity of Christ, but not in his deity. He is the Son of God, but not God.

ROM. 1:3, 4: "Concerning his Son who was born of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power . . . by the resurrection of the dead; even Jesus Christ our Lord." See also Acts 3:13; Rom. 6:10; Heb. 8:1; John 3:16; Rom. 3:30; Acts 2:22; 1 Cor. 15:24, 28. All these passages and many more are entirely inconsistent with the idea of the Trinity. The last two verses quoted are especially so. The unvarying use of first personal pronoun is also proof that the doctrine of the Trinity is without foundation in the Bible. Every Scripture can be brought into reasonable harmony with the oft repeated statement, "The Lord Jehovah is one; beside him there is none else."

JESUS CHRIST NOT GOD

But some say: "Do not these passages in Colossians and Hebrews which speak of Christ as the creator, prove him to be God as well as man?" We admit the Authorized Version would certainly give these impressions to anyone with these thoughts in mind; but when we find that God had previously declared through his prophet Isaiah that he alone was the Creator, we must look for an explanation that does not conflict with these statements. Had the translators borne that fact in mind they could have given an equally faithful translation that would be in accord with Isaiah and in harmony with facts, and the plain teaching of God's word elsewhere. The Revised Version does much to enlighten us over the difficulty. The sense of the passage is that "God . . . hath spoken to us by his Son, whom he appointed heir of all things, through whom (or for whom, or on account of whom) also he made or constituted the ages"—that is the idea. Everything in the past led up to Christ, pointed to Christ; everything in the future for Christ, until the Son himself be subject unto him. It seems to me a silent but forceful testimony against the doctrine that "Jesus Christ is God," that almost if not quite all the passages hitherto relied on for its support, have unconsciously by the Revisers been so altered as to disprove it. Take for instance 1 Tim. 3:16, "God manifest in the flesh," so often quoted. The Revised Version reads, "He who was manifested in the flesh." That God is here referred to seems doubtful. See note in R. V. margin; but the fact that God was manifested in the flesh through the person of his Son Jesus Christ no one can dispute any more than they can the fact that I am manifested through my two sons. The statements in God's word on this subject are so numerous, so plain, so uniform, so didactic and emphatic, they leave no room for any other possible meaning. It would seem impossible to mistake the sense intended to be conveyed.

THE TRINITY AND DR. SHIELDS

At the great Baptist Convention held in Toronto this year (1920), Rev. Dr. T. T. Shields, who is probably the most widely known man in the city in ministerial circles, said, "Jesus Christ is the only wise God." I wrote to him pointing out that Christ meant anointed, and that the statement carried its own refutation except to those (and they would be many) who would take his word without examination. If Jesus Christ is the only wise God, there can be no other God, and by so saying Dr. Shields practically dethrones God, himself, at whose right hand the Scriptures assert Christ to be. At least twice in the Bible we are told "God is not a man." In face of such assertion the fact must be self evident that man cannot be God. I have met and conversed with many trinitarians, and have had considerable correspondence on the subject, but I have yet to come across a believer in the Trinity who can prove his contention by either Scripture or reason. These pages are not written for the mere sake of attack or controversy. The writer desires nothing but to gain the truth, and he will welcome honest criticism from anyone; he will also be pleased to answer any questions that may be asked of him, to the best of his ability.

Yours very sincerely, R. H. JUDD.

Daniel's Image

VOLUMES HAVE been written upon this chapter, and it may seem presumptious for me to add to the interpretations already on record. Nevertheless, I feel impelled in the interests of the truth to offer for the consideration of the church an interpretation that materially differs from those that have gone before.

This chapter, and the image which it pictures, is in my judgment of vast interest to those who are looking for the coming of the Lord, and a correct understanding of corresponding importance to Bible students. Although the significance of the image seems so very plain and easily applied, yet each interpretation has its difficulties. For example, if we agree that the image represents first, the Babylonian empire, second, the Medo-Persian empire, third, the Grecian empire; fourth, the Roman empire, and that the stone strikes the image on the feet, or during the supremacy of the two kingdoms, or the divided Roman empire: How can it crush and reduce to chaff "together" those proud kingdoms of gold, silver, and brass, which have long since passed into history?

In order to overcome this difficulty many good and earnest students argue that in order for the gold, the silver, brass, iron, and clay to be broken and reduced to chaff "together," they must in some sense exist when the stone descends. And as it is unthinkable that those ancient mighty nations will be actually restored to their former state, therefore it is argued, that they will be reproduced "representatively," that is to say, certain modern kingdoms will, in these last days, develop characteristics similar to those ancient nations, and these will be reduced to chaff together "respresentatively," and the word of God will be vindicated.

Now dear ones, I am so constituted that I rebel against any interpretation of Scripture that sounds strained, or far fetched. This word "representatively," so frequently used by those who interpret as above, is not even remotely suggested in the prophecy. The word says plainly and distinctly that the gold, the silver, brass, and iron, will be broken in pieces "together," not representatively or by proxy. Therefore, it seems to me, that whatever it was that was represented by the image, still exists in its entirety, and since that time, has not ceased to exist. To my mind, it was the image itself, that was and still is, representative. It was and is, a pen picture of the 2520 years of the times of the Gentiles. The vivid picture of Gentile supremacy was shown the king, and he was told by Daniel that these times of the Gentiles began with his dominion, and would end in another of iron and miry clay. Nebuchadnezzar was the beginning, head, or first King of Gentile times prefigured by the image. The last form of Gentile supremacy or government, is the present one, of iron mixed with miry clay.

This image of Gentile supremacy exists today, as actually and literally as in the days of Nebuchadnezzar. It bears the same ear marks now as then; selfishness, and savage ferocity are still its most prominent characteristics. They still teach their children from the cradle that to be a great warrior is the noblest profession of man. Beautiful and accomplishd young ladies, vie with each other for the privilege of kissing the hand that is most deeply stained with human blood, and feeble age raises its cracked voice to applaud him who has the greatest number of victims to his credit; while he whose savage and bloodthirsty brain can invent the most terrible engine of destruction and revolting crulty, is lauded and praised as his country's greatest benefactor. The general, who by some master stroke of military wisdom and strategy, has accomplished the death and mutilation of tens of thousands of his fellow men, is bedecked with medals and high sounding titles, and orders of honor, and paraded from nation to nation as the most noble specimen of mankind.

Surely the image. "whose form was terrible," still retains its old characteristics, and stands complete, ready for the stone to begin its work of destruction: in view of the above facts, it seems reasonable to conclude that the image was but a picture or shadow, representing the 2520 years of Gentile times; and as the substance of the shadow, or Gentile times exist today, not in part only, but complete, as in the days of Daniel, it would seem that the image now stands on its feet before us, ready for the fall of the stone.

If any further evidence were required to substantiate this interpretation, I would ask the question. What is the work that our Lord and his saints will undertake, when he comes? Is it not to break in pieces and consume all these nations, and declare the times of the Gentiles ended? Then, manifestly, existing Gentile nations, that are to be broken and destroyed, are the substance of the image shadow.

Help the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

FAITH AND WORKS GO HAND IN HAND

IT IS not what we read, but what we remember, that makes us learned. It is not what we intend, but what we do, that makes us useful. It is not a few faint wishes, but a life long struggle that makes us valiant. It is not merely, "Lord, I believe," but a full surrender to God, willing to do his will, having Christ within you, that makes you a Christian. A. D. DONALDSON.

A PRAYER

DEAR LORD, I do not ask of thee
That all my days may cloudless be.
But I would ask for courage strong
To do my best when all goes wrong.
And conquer when 'tis hard to see
The hand of love that's guiding me.

The Church at Elizabeth, N. J.

IT WILL no doubt interest the brotherhood to know that a church of God has been established at Elizabeth, New Jersey. It is a small community at present, but we hope with the help of God that we may grow not only in numbers, but in love for the truth. Many years ago there was a church of God at Elizabeth. After the death of Brother J. O. Woodruff, with whom many of the readers of The Restitution were acquainted, the church was dissolved. Some of the members of that church are members of the church just established. Among these are Brother and Sister Moore, daughter and son-in-law of Brother Woodruff, Brother Jarvis Williams, and Brother and Sister Munro.

We welcome to our fellowship any who believe the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and who have been baptized for the remission of sins. We ask the prayers of all of like precious faith everywhere. We meet every Sunday for the breaking of bread at 2 P. M.; lecture 3 P. M., 127 Jefferson Avenue, Elizabeth, N. J. If the Lord wills we will publish in a later issue of The Restitution a statement of our faith. Elizabeth is about twelve miles from New York, and can be reached from that city by Pennsylvania R. R. or Central R. R. of N. J. We will be glad to welcome any brother or sister travelling this way, or anyone interested in God's glorious truth.

Cleveland Ecclesial Notes

We have enjoyed a visit from Sister Ola Fleming, of Toledo, Ohio. She expects to leave within a few days for Saint Cloud, Florida, where she will spend the winter.

The Young People's Society met Friday evening, Jan. 14th, at the home of Sister Chappelle. About twenty-five members answered to roll call. After a short business meeting the lesson was given by Brother Lester Bliss on the apostle Peter. As all joined in the discussion, many interesting details concerning the remarkable character of Peter were brought to light.

The Second Death

A Reply to Sister Orr

MRS. ORR implies at the commencement of her paper that as Paul does not specifically state the fact of the second death in so many words, therefore it is not contained in "the whole cousel of God" which the apostle says he declared. She bases the idea on Paul's statement that it is "appointed unto men once to die." Why not quote the remainder of the sentence; by so doing we are far more likely to get a better idea of the meaning of the apostle. Here it is: ". . . it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this cometh the judgment."

Mrs. Orr will probably grant that even the statement as she quotes it does not preclude the possibility that some men may die twice. But what of the second half? Is judgment held and pronounced upon dead men? In Rev. 20:12 we read that the dead "stand." Do dead men stand? But does Paul ignore the second death? He does not enjoin baptism in the same pointed way it is done in the gospels, but none of us will question that he believed in and taught baptism. The same holds true in this case. The first death is appointed for all men. They are mortal by nature; it is not in their power to avert it

We find passages where Paul uses language which clearly implies that a second death awaits some men. For instance, Rom. 8:13. "For if ye live after the flesh ye must die (A. V. "shall die," future); but if through the spirit ye do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Here is a case where Paul puts life and death upon conditions. "If" ye do this ye shall die; "if" you do not you shall live. Such conditions do not apply to natural death; it is man's appointed portion over which he has no control (Eccl. 8:8; Job 7:1; 14:5). Moreover, he was speaking to living men, yet he predicates life upon conditions.

Then again, see Rom. 5:9: "Much more being justified by his blood, shall we be saved from the wrath of God through him." Paul surely cannot mean here that they will be saved from their natural death! Does not "the wrath of God" referred to here have reference to death? I think Mrs. Orr will grant that it does include that. See also 1 Thess. 1:10, where it speaks of "the wrath to come." Such a term can hardly apply to the natural death of the individual as asserted by Mrs. Orr when she says that "every sinner who has died unrepentant since the flood has died the second death."

If Mrs. Orr's assertion here is correct, how can it be said in Rev. 20:6, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power." If a person's natural death is the "second death," then it has had power, and the righteous man has already died the second death before his resurrection!! But Scripture nowhere applies the fact of the second death to the righteous. Scripture distinctly states "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Moreover, of what force is the statement, "thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," if only the first are resurrected? Most people will assume that a resurrection of the unjust is implied; though I admit not necessarily, unless considered in the light of other Scriptures.

I quite agree with Mrs. Orr that some passages of Scripture clearly teach that the wicked will never see life a second time. Where I think she is in error is in applying them to all the wicked. Some certainly will "never see the light." That I do not dispute. More might be said, but this is probably enough for the present. R. H. JUDD.

Good Company: a Serial Article

A Collection of Friendly Talks on Bible Subjects: By Brother S. H. Thomas

Dedicated Specially to the Infidel and Skeptic

I LOVE the Bible because I firmly believe that it is a message from God to man, mercifully telling him how he may escape the prison house of death, and stand up alive again, to die no more forever.

Because I am fully persuaded that it contains within itself, indisputable evidence that it is exactly what it claims to be, the word of the living God.

Because it is the only book in the world that tells us from whence we came, and whither we go.

Because it contains our only hope of a resurrection from the dead, and life in the ages to come.

Because, it makes known the infinite love of God, for those of his creatures who believe his word, and obey his commands, and his promise of pardon for their sins, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

I wonder why the infidel hates the Bible, and would destroy it if he could? The only book in the world that offers him life again from the dead, or hope that he may again clasp in his arms those dear ones whose eyes are closed in death.

I wonder why he would destroy this book which contains God's message of a love so great that he freely gave his only begotten Son, that "whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Truly his hatred of God and his word is most unaccountable. If perchance he sees a fellow-man devout, sincere, and earnest in his faith in God, and the Bible as his word, he promptly proceeds to tear down and destroy that faith, which comforts and sustains a brother. He sneers at it, and points out the the musty old Bible is no longer taken seriously among refined and educated people as true, and as the word of God. That only the weak minded and simple so regard it in these enlightened days. That it is now generally conceded to be but a collection of ancient fables, and foolish fish stories, and of interest only as a curious relic handed down from the days of witchcraft and simple minded superstition.

Mr. Infidel, do you not think it a mean and unkind act to seek to tear down and destroy the faith and hope which sustains and comforts a fellow man? Indeed, it is worse: it is robbery to take away and destroy the faith and hope of another, unless you are prepared to replace it with a better. Can you do it? Nay, verily: search as ye may through the volumes of your scoffing litertture; sift Ingersoll's "Mistakes of Moses," Tom Payne's "Age of Reason," and ali vain vaporings of Voltaire, Bradlaugh, and others, and find if you can one single sentence that will comfort a man in the solemn hour of death. In such an hour infidelity is a miserable failure.

Let us now consider a few of the multitude of evidences that the Bible is the word of God. I ask you to consider the Jew. I want no greater evidence than he to confirm my faith in the book. Even before he became a nation, his future nationality was foretold and written down in minutest detail. And before he went into the promised land would scatter him among the nations, and that among those nations he should "find no rest," should have "a trembling heart and sorrows of mind," and that he should be in great danger, and should have none assurance of life (Deut. 28:63-67); and although robbed, persucuted, massacred, and murdered by the millions yet remain a great nation down to the coming of the Lord. And today he stands an unanswerable evidence of the truth and inspiration of the Bible.

Where are the Babylonians? where are the Medes and Persians, the brazen-coated Greeks and mighty Romans, all of whom in turn robbed and massacred the helpless Jew? They have passed into history, have become but a memory; while the persecuted Jew is still with us, ready to play his part in the closing scenes of Gentile times. Without a visible king or capital city, but still scattered among the nations of the earth, they stand a great nation, controlling the wealth of the world. During all these long centuries they have not mixed with other peoples, but remained separate and distinct, retaining all their national and individual characteristics and customs--an eloquent and unanswerable evidence of the truth and divine authenticity of that grand old Book, which fore told all these remarkable things thousands of years ago, even before they became a nation.

But space forbids mention of the multitude of other evidences, equally as positive and unanswerable. The prophecies concerning Babylon, Turkey, Egypt, and other nations, and their marvelous fulfilment; the testimony of numerous monuments and ancient libraries, clay tablets, and records on stone, and papyrus, dating back to the days of the patriarchs, hidden deep in the ruins of ancient Babylon, Nineveh, and Dedin, buried beneath the sands of Egypt and the lands of Moab, God has kept these silent witnesses securely hidden and in these last days of skepticism and unbelief, they have been uncovered and brought forth to confound and silence the infidel and atheist.

Wherever the Bible goes, civilization and an uplifting of the standard of morality, follow. Remove the Bible and man would soon return to violence, anarchy, and semi-barabrity. Why? To the infidel death ends all. Therefore his motto is "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die." Why deny ourselves? The world is ours for today and the fulness thereof. Let us drain the cup of pleasure to its dregs. A short life and a merry one, and then a plunge into the land of forgetfulness from whence I came. Poor fellow! I am sorry for the infidel. From my heart I pity him; no beams of light and promise ahead; naught but darkness, coldness, and everlasting forgetfulness. With such a faith can we wonder that ninety-nine out of one hundred criminals, murderers, robbers, liars, fornicators, adulterers, etc., are infidels? Rarely indeed is a Christian convicted of crime. Will infidels tell us why?

The infidel declares that the Bible has been responsible for most of the bloodshed of the world, and that mankind would be much better off if the Bible could be burned. But I have always noticed that he continues to remain close around where the teachings and principles of the old Book are revered and practiced. If he really believes the Bible an impediment to human knowledge and progress, why does he not go to some country where it is not known? To Turkey, China, or the South Sea Islands? His life or property might not be so safe as in a Bible country, but he can get away from the old Book if he wants to.

The infidel says that Moses made mistakes, that Jacob lied to his poor old blind father, and cheated Esau out of his blessing and birthright. That king David, the man after God's own heart, fell in love with another man's wife, and caused her husband to be killed, that he might have the woman. And that according to the Bible itself, every last one of these holy men of old were guilty of evil and disreputable acts. Mr. Infidel, you are right; your charges are true: and I cite this very fact to prove that the Bible is the word of God. The Old Testament Scriptures are a history of the Jewish nation, written by Jews under divine inspiration. If God had removed his influence during the making of these records of that nation, would not the national pride of these Jewish writers have prompted them to leave out those details that would discredit their history? When they came to that sin of king David, would they not have said: "We will not say anything about that matter: to mention it would do no good, and only disgrace our nation for all time." But when God writes or causes to be written, the record of a man or nation, he tells the truth about it. Human nature is poor stuff, and always has been since Adam's fall. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Moses, and king David—all were but human, weak and prone to sin just as we are; and the Bible is a true and faithful record of their faults as well as their virtues. If the Holy Scriptures had described them as superior beings, entirely free from sin, and yet partakers of a sinful nature, we then might, with reason, have questioned its truth.

Infidelity is all right on dry land, when everything is lovely and no trouble or danger in sight, but when at sea the storm rages, and billows war and foam, and the old ship founders and is about to sink—it is then, on bended knee, he calls on God to save him, and with earnest fervor sings, "Nearer My God to Thee." Ingersoll's "Mistakes of Moses," and Tom Payne's scoffing litreature, has no charm for him now, as in terror and desapir he stretches out helpless hands to that God whom he had so often denied and disowned.

Thousands have been known to bitterly regret on their death bed that they were infidels, but there are two things I never expect to see: Two mountains with no valley between; and a dying man who regrets that he is a Christian.

It is said that the last words of Thomas Paine, the great infidel writer and author were, "I am taking a leap in the dark." What a contrast between this and the last words of a Christian! No leap in the dark for him; all is light, and he sees exactly where he will land. Our Lord says: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

The world has but one example of a great nation discarding the Bible and its principles, and adopting those oc infidelity; and no nation has since cared to repeat the experiment. About the year 1790, Voltaire, the great French infidel and author, devoted his time and brilliant talents to destroy the Bible and the Christian religion in France; and the world for the first time heard a vast assembly of men, born and educated in a civilized country, lift their united voices to deny the worship of God, and the Bible as his word. One of the leaders of the nation publicly challenged God as follows: "God, if you exist, avenge your injured name. I bid you defiance; you remain silent; you dare not launch your thunder. Who after this will believe in your existence?" In all public cemeteries this inscription was placed, "Death is an eternal sleep."

Soon all law and order were abolished, and mob law was established throughout the empire. Infidelity ran riot, and blood flowed like water, while hundreds of thousands perished. Finally, realizing the necessity of some form of worship, to hold the infidel fanatics in check, they brought a veiled harlot into the national convention. Senator Chaumette took her hand and said, "Mortals, cease to tremble before the powerless thunder of a God whom your fears have created. Henceforth accept no divinity but reason: I offer you its noblest and purest image. If you must have idols, sacrifice only to such as this." Thus, the harlot was established by infidel France, as the Goddess of Reason. Madame Milard was her name. She was conducted to the Cathedral of Notre Dame, and elevated upon a high altar, and worshipped in place of God.

This season of triumph of the principles of infidelity in France, has gone down in history as "the reign of terror." But the Bible, and the principles of Christianity, were restored in time to save the nation. Voltaire has passed into history, and it is said that the press used by him to print his infidel literature, has since been used to print the word of God.

The infidel reminds me of a foolish sailor who was washed overboard during a terrible storm. His mates threw him a rope, but he found all kinds of fault with it, and refused to grasp it. It was too small to suit him, and was made of cotton instead of hemp, and it had spots on it, that looked to him like defects, or weak spots. In vain his mates shouted to him that this was the only rope they had, that it was all right, and would land him on board if he would grasp it; but he would have nothing of it, and miserably perished. Just so the foolish infidel is sinking in the great sea of eternity. His mates on the gospel ship, throw him a gospel rope and implore him to grasp it; but he scoffs at, and ridicules it, finds fault with it, and criticises it. In vain they assure him that it is strong and safe, and the only rope on board ship that will reach him, but he turns away from it, and is lost for ever in the sea of eternity.

GOLDEN TEXT: Gal. 6:14.

JESUS, MY LORD!

Thou blessed Son of God,
Hast bought me with thy blood,
Jesus my Lord!
O how great is thy love,
All other loves above,
Love that we daily prove,
Jesus, my Lord!

When unto thee I flee,
Thou wilt my refuge be,
Jesus my Lord!
What need I now to fear?
What earthly grief or care,
Since thou art ever near?
Jesus, my Lord!

Soon thou wilt come again!
I shall be happy then,
Jesus, my Lord!
Then thine own face I'll see,
Then, like thee I shall be,
Then evermore with thee,
Jesus, my Lord!

HIGH SPOTS OF HAPPINESS

LONGFELLOW had the wrong idea when he said, "Into each life some rain must fall; some days must be dark and dreary." The only gloom there is in this life, we put into it ourselves. And if we are the ones that put the gloom into our lives, we most certainly can keep it out.

The normal and natural condition of our bodies is health. The only reason any body ever gets sick is through some disregard of nature's laws. We eat, or drink, or breathe something that disagrees with us, or else we strain our powers by over exertion or taking undue chances, or allow those powers to deteriorate through laziness and misuse. No machine that ever was constructed could stand the ill treatment we give to our human organisms. If we lived naturally and as nature planned, we always should be well.

Similarly, happiness is the normal condition of the mind: for every one will admit that happiness or unhappiness is purely a mental condition. Enjoyment is being satisfied with what we have, what we do, or who we are.

Each of us, if we cast our memories back, can recall hours that we have spent that stand out as supreme, days that were perfect in every particular.

What made these moments so happy? Not necessarily conditions or circumstances, or the weather, or the companionship, or the season of the year. If we analyze these joy periods truly, we will discover that we found them happy simply because we were free for the time from fears or apprehension.

Contrariwise, turn your mind back to the blackest hours of your career. Was there ever any actual disaster, or horor, or trouble you experienced that was equal to your dread of it? The reality never is so bad, so insupportable as imagination paints it.

We suffer a thousand terrors through our fears for one that we actually encounter. In any year the chances of any individual person are a million to one against being struck by lightning: yet look how people cover and shiver and take to their beds every time a summer shower darkens the sky.

We say, we trust in God, but we don't, not one of us. Or, if we do, it is a very weak kind of trust, for God is good; and if really we trusted him we would not worry and be troubled as we now are. And what we exepect and dwell upon in our minds, we are bound to manifest in our lives. Indeed, were it not for the unquenchable spark of hope, we must long ago ceased to exist.

Is it not about time to right about face? What has fear and worry ever done for us that we should cling to them so, even considering them at times virtues? Why not give faith and hope a trial? Why not trust in God and make all our moments high spots of happiness?

ALEXANDER KENNEDY

NOTICE HAS just been received of the death of Brother Alexander Kenndy, of Bayonne, New Jersey. No particulars were given. Brother Kennedy was born in Scotland ninety years ago. He leaves a widow to mourn his loss. We knew him well and all we knew was good.

THE NEW EDITOR AND THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S PAGE

The Following Letters Explain Themselves

OUR LETTER

37 South Twelfth Avenue,
Mount Vernon, N. Y.
Jan. 10, 1921.

DEAR BROTHER BROWN:

THE RESTITUTION has just been delivered and we notice item, "Our New Editor." What does it mean?

We trust you will want The Young People's Page continued as it now is; but should you not, and so as not to cause you embarrassment, I now withdraw as its conductor, to resume upon your request.

I pray your new work will be filled with the success that brings glory and honor to God our Father, and may the name of Jesus the Christ be praised.

Sister Donaldson joins in all good wishes and full Christian love.

ALEXANDER D. DONALDSON.

BROTHER BROWN'S REPLY

527 Morris Avenue,
Elizabeth, N. J.
Jan. 12, 1921.

DEAR BROTHER DONALDSON:

YOUR LETTER just received. Referring to my taking up the work of the editorship of The Restitution: I have consented to take up this work at the urgent request of Brother Huggins. By all means we want The Young People's Page with you as its conductor. It is an excellent feature and we would feel very sorry to lose it. We shall appreciate very much your co-operation and help in the work. Brother Huggins has had too much to do; he has been overworked for a long time. That is all (as far as I know) that is meant by the change.

Your brother in Christ,

WILLIAM H. BROWN.

---o---

THE OLD AND THE NEW

SOME DAY we hope to meet Brother Huggins. This means that up to this writing we have never done so. But, though we have never met there is no one who holds him in higher esteem. One reason we love and admire this good brother is on account of the enemies he has made. We exceedingly regret that Brother Huggins finds it necessary to lay down this branch of his work, for in both education and temperament we think him well qualified. No matter what his future activities may be, we pray that God will bless his efforts.

Brother Brown we have met. We have talked with him, even ate at the same table, and to those who have not been thus privilged let us remark that he is thoroughly human. He is a pleasant speaker, broad minded, still he never will compromise the truth, and, in insisting on the truth, he too, will in time make enemies. Knowing what is before Brother Brown we almost feel like offering him commiseration; but in place of that we will congratulate him on his opportunity for working for, and with the Master to the glory of God the Father. "May the words of his mouth and the meditation of his heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, our strength, and our redeemer."

GRACE

THE FOLLOWING prayer, which was found after the death of the Duchess of Gordon in her own handwriting, was used by an old man, a native of Fifeshire:

Lord! give me grace to feel my need of grace;
And give me grace to ask for grace;
And give me grace to receive grace;
And, O Lord! when grace is given, give Me grace to use it. Amen.

PERTINENT QUESTIONS

WAS THERE any hope of anyone obtaining eternal life through Christ, as the son of Joseph?

Did Abraham rejoice to see the day of the son of Joseph or the day of the Son of God—which? (John 8:56). Did all that died in faith, as recorded in Heb. 11th chapter die in the faith of the son of Joseph, or faith in the Son of God? Paul declares that anyone that preaches another gospel than the one he preached, should be accursed. Please tell us where he preached that Christ was born the son of Joseph (Gal. 1:8; Acts 9:20; Rom. 5:10). We see from this last quotation that we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son.

The class Paul speaks of in Heb. 6:4, 6 we think is the class that deny Christ being born the Son of God. Now is it possible for such to come unto repentance again? (Matt. 12:31, 32).

Do these questions seem harsh? Please remember they are not our words, but are the words of God, written by inspired writers, and are written for our learning, admonition, and instruction in righteousness (Rom. 15:4; 1 Cor. 10:11; 2 Tim. 3:16). Cry aloud; spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions (Isa. 58:1).

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 73 CLEVELAND, OHIO, FEBRUARY 8th, 1931. NUMBER 6

A Roman Catholic Confession

A father asked a priest, his boy to bless,
Who forthwith told him he must confess.
"Well," quoth the boy, "suppose I am willing,
What is your charge?" "To you 'tis but a shilling."

"Do all men pay and all men make confession?"
"Yes, everyone of Catholic profession."
"Well, who do you confess to?" "Why the dean."
"And does he charge you?" "Yes, a whole thirteen."

"Do deans, sir, confess?" "Yes, boy, they do, Confess to bishops and pay smartly too."
"Do bishops, sir, confess; if so to whom?"
"Why they confess and pay the pope at Rome."

"Well," quoth the boy, "all this is mighty odd,
And does the pope confess?" "Oh yes, to God."
"And does God charge the pope?"
"No," quoth the priest, "God charges nothing."
"Oh, then, God is best; he is both able to forgive and willing;
To him I shall confess and save my shilling."—Sel. by Sister Ola M. Fleming.

An Epistle on Trinitarianism

Further Discussion of the Doctrine of the Trinity

WHILE DEPRECIATING too much discussion on the subject that has already engrossed so much time with both of us, I do not feel that I can very well leave the matter where you have left it. Now what I want to do is to get at the truth of this question of the Trinity in as kindly a way as can be done consistent with a clear and straightforward way of stating one's case.

I am sure I had not the slightest intention of suggesting in any way that you were insincere. I believe you are perfectly sincere. It is useless for me to guess what there was in my letter which could possibly suggest such a thought, as you have not stated it. I will say frankly, however, (and I wish you to be equally frank with me) that so far the discussion has been very one-sided. You have put questions before me and I have endeavored to answer them; I have also asked you questions, and so far no replies have been forthcoming. You have intimated that my way of understanding Scripture is not sound, yet you have not shown me what is not in accord with Scripture and sound reasoning. If any statement of mine is in error I am glad to have it pointed out. You did point out my error in being a little too emphatic on the question of the stoning of Jesus, and I am obliged; but after all that is not a matter that really touches the point at issue, the vital question, and you have made no attempt to show where we are wrong. True, you bring forward a statement like Heb. 1:8, but Heb. 1:2; 1:9 you do not attempt to explain, although these passages have been called to your attention.

SOME DIFFICULTIES

How do you account that Christ whom you say is "Jehovah God," "the only true God," is in Heb. 1:2 "appointed heir of all things?" and how do you explain Heb. 1:9? I shall be glad to have your reply. To my mind, and it seems to me rational, the only sense in which Christ can be called God in view of the statement referred to in Heb. 1:2,9, must be in a secondary sense. It cannot be the primary, can it, for the reasons given?

You say, "why did not Christ deny his deity to the Jews?" Well, was there any need when all through his ministry he had talked to them of his

Oregon [illegible]
Oregon [illegible]

Father (God) who dwelt in heaven at the time of the occurrence? Does not the reply that he was "Son of God" amount to a denial that he was God? Does not the very name "Christ," which means "anointed," itself declare that he was anointed by another, even God?

I might just as well ask you, and do ask you, "why did Christ ascribe creation to God, and not claim to be the Creator if really the Creator himself?" Is it not possible that Heb. 1:10 applies to God? Certainly anyone would think so from the original in Psalms 102! Is it not natural, then, for this also to be applied to God? It is not an uncommon occurence in Scripture that themes are suddenly changed, and it is not always easy to separate one part from another. This I think you will agree is notably true in prophecy. It seems to me far more logical and reasonable to accept such an explanation than to make Scripture teach what is palpably contradictory and impossible.

If you can explain how it can be said of Christ that he is "appointed heir of all things," and that "God, even thy God, shall anoint thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows" (plural), and yet at the same time he is Jehovah God, the Creator himself, I should be very glad to have the explanation, very glad indeed. Will you please give it? I ask the question because I need it. I do not ask for curiosity; the subject is too serious. At prayers the other morning we read how Jesus grew in favor with God and man. I asked, "How can Jesus in such a case be God—Jehovah God?" Everyone at once said, "why of course he could not."

THE WORDS "LORD" AND "GOD"

I think you will find that both words "Lord and "God" were used by the Jews (as they are by orthodoxy today) in a secondary sense sometimes. I think, indeed, I am sure, you will find instances in Scripture where it is done. Can you (I cannot) imagine any Jew—not even Thomas—believed that Jesus Christ was "the only true God" and that consequently God himself had left heaven vacant of his presence at the time Thomas spoke—for that is the logical conclusion of your belief, is it not? Surely the better explanation is that Christ was God's representative on earth, and that God said he would put his words into the mouth of that prophet. Even Moses and Aaron God sent as messengers for him, and said they should be a god (as God, Elohim) to Pharoah, using the very same word "elohim," as is used of Christ in Psa. 45:6. So by that arguing Moses and Aaron were God, and if so, they never died and are still God; but what says Scripture? Here is a point that I think you will find it very difficult to answer; it completely answers your difficulties. If it is true, and I think it can be well established, that the words "Lord" and "God" are used by the Hebrews in Scripture in a secondary sense (as illustrated above), then Heb. 1:8 does not need any alteration as in the margin of Psa. 45, even though the original is legitimately capable of being so translated.

As to your having gained no spiritual help from the discussion, I am sorry, for I have. I cannot see what real spiritual help is gained by attempting to accept a theory that would be discarded as unreasonable in every realm of thought other than theology. Common sense in every walk of life tells us that if a person is in New York he cannot be personally in London at one and the same time; but that is the very thing contended for when it is taught that Jesus Christ was (and is) God, at the very time he taught his disciples to pray, "Our Father which art in heaven." You would find a very great deal of spiritual help if you would find out how God has given to Christ a name which is above every name, and all that that includes both now and in time to come.

Again, I ask you can you answer these difficulties which seem to me greater than any you can bring forward? Can you tell me how it is if Jesus Christ is "Jehovah God"—"the only wise God"—that we are told, "For though he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth (now) by or through the power of God"—that is, he actually owes his present existence to God. I have asked that question before and got no reply, and if you can answer it in a satisfactory way consistently with the doctrine of the Trinity, I should be very grateful, for I have tried to get an orthodox answer to that question many times, and have failed.

With regard to "Immanuel"—God with us— I am sorry my explanation "seemed stretched to meet the case." However, I am still of the opinion that the meaning is that it is an indication of God's purpose to be once more with his people. Heb. 1:1, 2 seems to confirm this. Nor am I alone in this, for since writing to you I find Barnes agrees with the explanation, and I find too he says that "God" is frequently used as a term of honor in the east without in any way being derogatory to the one true God.

MORE DIFFICULTIES

Then, again, how do you account for the fact that Jesus "grew in wisdom," if he were really God? It is often argued that he is God because he knew and did things that other men have never done. But surely it is better to accept the Bible definition of that fact than to suppose what is an impossibility. The Bible says "God did the works by him." Surely two distinct persons are embraced in this statement only one of them being God in the primary sense. Again we are told, "For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the spirit by measure unto him." Others with a limited measure of the spirit were able to perform wonderful things, as instanced in the cases of Elisha, Abijah, Peter, and others, even to the raising of the dead. There were also some things he did not know as he himeslf testified that none knew but the Father.

You say, "I do not agree with you in my conception of what God is." Certainly so. I most emphatically do not agree with you there; for your attempt to explain the Trinity on the basis of man's constitution certainly did not help me in any way to comprehend the doctrine of the Trinity.

Here is my conception of God: first, compare it with Scripture; then compare it with your own as you gave me:

WHAT THE SCRIPTURES SAY

God is a person (Heb. 1:3).
God is a spirit (John 4:24).
God dwells in heaven (1 Kings 8:30. 39, 43, 49; 2 Chron. 6:21, 30, 39; Psa. 123:1; 113:5; Matt. 6:9).
God dwells in light (1 Tim. 6:16).

The proofs of his personality are abundant. not the least of which is the wonderful plan of the ages, Jesus Christ being the centre and object of all.

THE HOLY SPIRIT

You have my views regarding the spirit of God, and its differing manifestations right down the ages as it proceedeth or is shed abroad or poured forth or given by God. If the Holy Spirit is a personality, it is very stange that it is not mentioned in Heb. 1:1, 2. Surely it is because the Spirit was manifested through the prophets and through his Son. Mr. Weir, Editor of "The Student," in combatting my paper on the Holy Spirit, copy of which you have, admitted the error of the popular view, but fell into a worse one himself by attempting to prove that Gabriel was the Holy Spirit. I pointed out, among other things that if Gabriel was the Holy Spirit, then according to the gospel account Jesus Christ must have been the Son of Gabriel (Luke 1:35). That silenced him. Of course if the Holy Spirit is not a person the doctrine of the Trinity falls to the ground.

But I must stop. If any of my explanations are unscriptural or unreasonable, please point out why, and give a better one. I do not say there are no better, but I have given the best I know. I am seeking further information on some points. However, I am satisfied that the general trend of the teaching I have endeavored to place before you is in accord with the Scriptures and common sense.

You say you believe Christ to be "Jehovah God"—"the only true God, God himself." You say that in spite of the fact that God says he sent his Son, Jesus Christ. You say that in spite of the fact that Scripture says Christ liveth (now) by the power of God; and yet you say you think you have Scripture for your side. Then is it not evident to any ordinary man—and I am only an ordinary man—that Scripture is self-contradictory and unreasonable?

Yours affectionately,

R. H. JUDD.

Because

Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold I come quickly: hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown (Rev. 3:10, 11).

THE APOCALYPSE was primarily addressed to the seven church of Asia Minor, but as these churches represented what the phases and conditions of the church would be throughout the entire Christian dispensation, we must consider the words of that book as addersssed to the church in all places, and in every age of that dispensation.

So we must remember that the words I have quoted were for the Philadelphian phase of the church in its entirety, because it having been loyal to the Lord throughout the nearly nineteen centuries of its existence, was worthy of both the commendation and the promise given in the eleventh verse, to be theirs when "the hour of temptation" was reached just anterior to the coming of the Lord.

They were to be kept from "the hour of temptation," not exempted from it, but to be kept from falling, kept from wickedly turning away from God, to worship idols or from being ensnared by any of the false systems of belief that would be so prevalent in the last days.

And why so kept? "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience," is the answer. They had kept what the Lord had given them to safeguard, and he in turn would keep them, for "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation." What a blessed "because!"

Can it be said to us, dear ones, that because we have kept the gospel word of patient endurance we shall be kept from the hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth? Are we true Philadelphians?—lovers of the brethren, as the word implies. This is one of the tests and a vital one, for if we love not our brethren, whom we have seen, how can we love God whom we have not seen? We can meet with our brethren face to face, can interchange thoughts, can receive and give advice, can take hands and have happy times with them; and how sad it is that we can hate one another too! Be careful brethren. "Put away all anger and wrath and malice and evil speaking." Put them away!

Only those who conquer self can conquor others. Do not hate a brother for what he believes, because hating him will not change him; better cry over one another as two of our esteemed western brethren do.

But though we can see our brethren we cannot see God. We could not live and look upon him; so great is his glory. And yet we can know him as intimately as we do our dearest friends and love him with a far deeper love.

Jesus said, "He who hath seen me hath seen the Father also." We see the Father as manifested in the life of Jesus, and from knowing Jesus, we come to know God, and people come to know Jesus through us. A little blind boy went to a picnic. He could hear nothing, see nothing. All he could find out was by talking with his fingers. A little girl was appointed to entertain him. She told him everything that was going on, described the birds, the woods, the flowers, and refused to leave him when her playmates called her to come and join them in their games.

Then the fact that had looked so sullen and moody before, lighted up, and when they asked him what made him so happy he said, "Because I know now what God is like. He loves us and never will leave us, because he loves us." It is a fine illustration of how we can teach others "what God is like."

To keep the gospel word of patient endurance is to hold fast to the faith in its purity, to believe in a spirit-begotten Christ, in the one true and living God, the Creator and upholder of all things, in Christ as the only source of future life, that life to be bestowed upon us through the resurrection at his second coming, in a kingdom that is to embrace the whole earth; the metropolis of which is to be Jerusalem, with Christ and the elect of all nations as its rulers, with the twelve tribes of Israel and "the left of the nations" as its subjects: the anti-god and all his forces and all Gentile governments having been overthrown and the tares gathered into bundles and burned as they have been in the last great war. No other gospel is to be believed or preached, under peril of being cut off when the Lord comes.

But in what did the "patient endurance" consist? Was it not in holding fast to the faith, when called upon to give it up and worship the Virgin Mary, the crucifix, the mass, the Lord God, the pope, or be burned at the stake, or torn to peices by wild beasts. You know the story of the martyrs; of the cruel mockings and scourgings, of bonds and imprisonment, of how some were stoned, others sawn asunder; how they were tempted in every possible way, were slain with the sword; how they wandered about with no clothing except sheepskins and goatskins; were driven into mountain fastnesses and into caves and were robbed and banished. I need not tell you more. The true church endured all things in the days that are gone. They died rather than deny Jesus.

But what of that message given to the Philadelphian church just before the Lord comes? If we belong to that church, the message belongs to us, and we must pass through that "hour of temptation"; and is it not already upon us? Judging from the way in which the Christians who have preceded us have been tried, it would be quite reasonable to think that this later hour of trial would come from the same idolatrous power that so hated the followers of Jesus in other days.

They hate the followers of Jesus now, just as they did in the days of the Inquisition. They hate the Bible just the same. They are working in every possible way to get our people to accept their canon of faith and bow to their gods.

Whether they will use more cruel means in the future remains to be seen. "Arm yourselves to suffer." None but they who hold fast to the faith will endure. Others will go under—have already gone under, and have lost the crown.

"Little children, keep yourselves from idols," whether they be Buddists idols or the idols of Rome. Jesus is at the door!

S. ROXANA WINCE.

The Second Coming of Christ

WE REALIZE the importance of this subject when we learn that one verse out every twenty-six in the New Testament bears upon it. Very few ever take the time to look up these interseting facts; others refuse to believe anything of the kind and say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Peter says: "There shall come in the last days scoffers walking after their own lusts." These people really think the world will continue in about the same condition as now. They believe the world is growing better in spite of prevailing conditions that show the world to be growing worse and worse. Such people are not thinking of the coming of Jesus, are not thinking of their Savior much at all. They are so much taken up with the cares and pleasures of this life.

Let us turn to God's word. In John 14 Jesus tells his disciples what will befall him, and of his intended departure from them. He said: "I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Very plain and clear these words. After his terrible death on the cross where he gave his precious blood a sacrifice for the whole world, that all who should turn from their sins and believe on him should have everlasting life, we know he was raised to new life, and eventually, while in the company of his disciples, was caught up and ascended to heaven in a cloud. But we have his word that he will "come again." And while they stood looking toward heaven, filled with sorrow that their Lord should leave them, "two men stood by in white apparel who said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

The return of this same Jesus to earth is necessary in order to show the world that Jesus of Nazareth was what he claimed to be. The Scriptures' teach that his second coming may be at any time. He wants his people to be ready for him at any moment. The angel shall appear. At this time his coming will not be visible to the world; for at this time he comes for his saints, but later he will come in power and great glory and all his saints with him, to judge the world which at that time will be in a state of unbelief. Even the churches are in a condition of apostasy. The believers or "called out" ones of this dispensation, compose the bride or body of Christ, he being the head. This body will be made up of all true Christians. When this body is complete this gospel age will be closed. The Lord will descend into the air, then will come the resurrection of the dead, and the rapture of the living in Christ, visible only to the saints.

While these events are taking place what is transpiring on the earth? The church has been removed, and God's spirit withdrawn. Then will come a time of anarchy and wickedness such as the world has never yet seen, and which will be known as the "great tribulation." An event of great importance will be the return of the Lord in judgment, his "revelation" when the whole world will see him. "Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him."

Then he will proceed to execute judgment upon all. The judgment of the nations will take place, the everlasting kingdom will be set up, and the saints will reign with Christ during the millennium. This will be a period of great blessedness and glory, and will continue a thousand years. The world at the present time is filled with unbelief in the Lord's near coming, and even in the church many have grown skeptical and refuse to listen; but we have only to look around us to see many signs which indicate the near coming of the Lord. Who of us are waiting and watching and happy in the knowledge that we are ready and filled with joy unspeakable with the thought of meeting our Lord and King? Do we not feel that it is worth all the hardships, trials, and persecutions we are called upon to bear in this life to know we are saved for life eternal? "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

Dear Lord, be thou ever near,
  In thee we trust and feel no fear;
Thou art our refuge and our guide,
  Safe in thee, whate're betide;
Watching and waiting, soon wilt thou come,
  And bear us away, to our glorious home.

JENNIE McNEE.

Faithfulness Pays

OVER A year ago when I began to see the need of weekly communion to comply with Christ's commandments, and our small number had joined in the feeling, the wife of Brother B— — —, a member of the Christian Church, insisted that she could become a member of the Church of God on her former baptism. As an elder and to be faithful to divine instructions I refused, whereupon she became very much offended, so much so that she withdrew herself from our company and our Bible study and sought to influence Brother B— — to remain away also. To our great surprise last fall she openly acknowledged her mistake, felt her need of accepting Christ and baptism, which caused us all to rejoice. Now if in the first place we should have extended fellowship, she perhaps to day would be out of Christ and without hope. So I am learning to take rebuffs patiently and await the judgment of God.

Future Policy of "The Restitution"

IN TAKING up the work of editing The Restitution, we have one great thought in mind. That thought is well expressed by the single word "service." We look upon the work, first of all, as a service to God; and our humble prayer is, that it may be acceptable to him even though like all things human it is bound to be more or less imperfect.

In the second place, we look upon it as a service to our fellow men, particularly those who are readers of The Restitution. It is our determination to earnestly and humbly render the very best service within our power; and we pray God that he will give us wisdom and strength to do the thing that is right. We ask the readers of The Restitution in passing judgment upon our work to remember that we are all part of an imperfect order of things.

As to the nature of the service to be rendered, we are not left in doubt. It is defined and plainly stated on the front page of The Restitution. Under the title on the front page we have the words, "A Paper Representing The Church of God." What a high place this calls us to as an institution, and what responsibility it places upon all connected with it! We tremble as we think of our share of this great responsibility, and yet we have perfect confidence knowing that he with whom and for whom and through whom we labor is a loving and wise and beneficent and understanding God. Our first duty then is to conduct the paper so that in the highest sense it will truly represent the church of the living God. This means that we must be prepared to stand firm for God and the truth even though doing so makes every man (opposed to his truth) a liar, and brings upon us the enmity and opposition of men. It also means that the paper must breathe the spirit of Christ and be a medium for the expression of the love of God.

But the statement on the front page continues and becomes more explicit as to detail. It says it is "Devoted to the exposition and defence of the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ." This expresses the scope of our work. It gives plenty of room for the discussion of the glorious things that bear directly upon the purpose of God and help to establish his eternal truth in the minds of men. At the same time it sets a limit that prohibits us from using the paper as a medium for the discussion of "foolish and unlearned questions" which usually only "gender strifes." Our conception of the purpose of the paper expressed in our own words is that it is to help those who are without to come to a knowledge of the truth, and to build up spiritually those who are within. Any articles that come to us and are within the scope of this main object will be gladly considered for publication in The Restitution. We are determined, with God's help, so long as we are permitted to remain at the wheel, to keep this good old ship "The Restitution," headed against wind and storm and tide, straight for the harbor for which it started some seventy odd years ago. That harbor is the glory of God and the salvation of men. Reader, you have a great opportunity to share in this glorious work, aye, and a responsibility too. Will you help us? It is God's work; he will bless you in it. What can you do? You can pass along the good word to others. Go out of your way a little to get people interested. If every reader of The Restitution were to determine to get one new subscriber, he could undoubtedly do so—and think of it: The Restitution would reach twice as many people and would do twice as much good! That is what the paper is for, to reach people with the gospel message.

Brethren, pray for us; and may God help us all in this good work. "If God be for us who can be against us?"

"They Spake Often One to Another"

DEAR BRETHREN

I WISH to remind the brothers and sisters that February 10th is Auntie Wince's 83rd birthday Brother Alexander, who now sleeps that last, long sleep, used to remind us of the date, so I am taking the liberty of speaking of the matter myself.

Cannot each of us write a cheery letter or send some little token of our love? To me, and I know to a good many others, Auntie Wince is the dearest sister we have. She has helped me wonderfully to bear my troubles and trials. I know she has helped many others too. But my dear brothers and sisters, Auntie Wince's eyes are troubling her so we won't ask her to acknowledge all our letters A general acknowledgment through The Restitution should be sufficient. She has a good deal of work to do, and a shower of birthday letters bearing love and good wishes would, I think, help her wonderfully.

Your sister in Christ,

SUSAN A. HOWARD.

A very similar letter to above has been received from Sister Minnie B. Porter, of South Bend, Indiana. —Editor.

DEAR READERS OF THE RESTITUTION:

I KNOW you have been wondering what has become to me. It will not take me long to tell the story. For some weeks before Christmas I was not well, and could get little writing done, exasperating head aches drove me to rest. I seemed threatened with a nervous breakdown. It was a false fear. I am back at my study table again with the Christmas and New Year's letters and cards nearly all answered; brain as active as ever and busily weaving my thoughts into rhyme as I go about my work. I wish I could capture some of them for you, but they come and go too swiftly; chasing one another like a bevy of butterflies. One on "Being Tested" I very much wanted to note down for our dear paper, but by the time my clothes were on the line it had gone dancing away. How much I wish for someone to lend me a hand when I could so easily write! Our dear Sister Nichols is with me, doing all she can, but she is too frail a flower to carry all the burdens that fall upon me.

I must write for our paper now. Letters that are still unanswered must wait. I have been grieved and worried because I could not write. I know you need me. We all need each other, God has so ordained it. He makes us strong so we can help others to be strong. He gives us courage to persevere; he shows us how poor a soldier the man is, who is bound to desert, because the first gun he fires does not bring men to their knees. We must stay in the battle; we must stick to our guns; keep firing our volleys, remembering still the oft repeated words, "work we do for God is never lost"; and that every word we speak for him, every effort we make to bring to others the knowledge of the truth, hastens in some small way the coming of that blessed time of peace and goodwill of which the herald angels sang at the birth of Jesus.

Yours in the good fight of faith,

AUNTIE WINCE.

The Love of God

WE READ in the word very much, and quite often, of the love of God towards man, and many there be who presume to take advantage of this supposed weakness of God. They say in their heart, "God is good and kind, and loves me so much, that he gave his only Son to die for me. Therefore I will enjoy myself while I am young, for when I get old I can't. Away with self-denial, temperance, godliness and sobriety. I hate and despise them. Pleasure, laughter, fun and frolic are the heritage of the young. Let us drink deep and long of the sweet cup that youth holds to our lips, and when age and infirmities puts the cup forever from us, and we find we may no longed drink thereof, then we will reluctantly turn to God, and at the eleventh hour implore his mercy. And he is so good and loves us so much, that he will accept our belated professions of love, and say to us, 'Well done, thou good and faithful seruant.'"

I wonder if he will. Sometimes I have my doubts about it. True, in our Lord's parable of the vineyard, the laborer who began work at the eleventh hour received the same wages as he who began at the first hour. But he was not invited to work, and did not know of the job, until the eleventh hour, and went to work at once as soon as he heard it. If he had been invited at the first hour, and refused, wasting the day in pleasure and rioting, and then appleid for work at the eleventh hour, do you think he would have got the job? I don't.

What is it then that God loves? Is it that great multitude in all ages who "as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, and who shall utterly perish in their own corruption?" Is it they? Hardly! Did God love the wicked, and utterly corrupt nations who perished at the flood? Why did he love and save Noah and his family only of the whole world? God says: "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." Why should God love and preserve some of his creatures, and hate and destroy others? They are all made of the same dust and ashes. All are the work of his hand, Dear reader. I will tell you why. Because the one has developed an obedient spirit and a godly character. It is that which God greatly loves. It is that which is the most precious in his sight. A godly character, not created by him, but developed by his creatures, through love for the Creator. All flesh, both of man and beast, without character, is in the sight of God but dust and ashes, and as the grass which withers. But the individual who voluntarily loves God and keeps his commandments, thus developing a godly character, receives in return the love of God, without measure.

Therefore we must conclude that it is character which God loves, and the man who has not by faith and obedience developed a godly character has no part whatever in the love and ultimate purpose of God. Out of the multitudes who have lived, enough will be found when the Lord comes who have developed character to serve his glorious purpose in the ages to come. While those who have failed will ultimately go back to the land of forgetfulness from whence they came, and become as though they had not been, having no part in the joys and glories of endless life in the kingdom of God.

The Restoration of Israel

Zionism a Fulfilment of Prophecy

WE READ: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea" (Isa. 11:11). When God led the children of Israel from Egypt under Moses that could not have been the time referred to from the fact that they were in Egypt only. No ingenuity of reasoning can set this aside. Oh, yes, those people whom God has loved from the days of Abraham down, notwithstanding they have fallen, yet has God punished them for their transgressions by scattering them among all nations; causing their nation to fall, their name to become a hiss and a by-word; they will be restored to their own land and become a great nation. "God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew."

We have shown why the Lord is going to do these things to them. Not for their sakes, "but for my holy name's sake" (Ezek. 36:22). A long time ago the Lord said: "I will be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people. Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with lovingkindness I have drawn thee" (Jer. 31:1-3). "For the Lord will not forsake his people for his great name's sake: because it hath pleased the Lord to make you his people" (1 Sam. 12:22). Yea, he said: "But now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by my name; thou art mine. Fear not for I am with thee; I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west; I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back; bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth" (Isa. 43:1-6). They are now suffering for their disobedience. "Let his blood be upon us, and upon our children" was their cry when they crucified their King. "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" was Jesus' prayer in their behalf. He knew their eyes were blinded, their understanding darkened, hence they were not enlightened rejectors of the Son of God.

In Mal. 9:32-35 we read: "Now therefore, our God, the great, the mighty and the terrible God, who keepest covenant and mercy, let not all the trouble seem little before thee, that hath come upon us, on our kings, on our princes, and on our priests, and on our prophets, and on our fathers, and on all our people, since the time of the kings of Assyria unto this day. Howbeit, thou art just in all that is brought upon us; for thou hast done right, but we have done wickedly: neither have our kings, our princes, our priests, nor our fathers kept thy law, nor hearkened unto thy commandments and thy testimonies, wherewith thou didst testify against them. For they have not served thee in their kingdom, and in thy great goodness that thou gavest them, and in the large and fat land which thou gavest them, neither turned they from their wicked works." God is leading them under the rod of chastisement. His object is, "their dross to consume, and their gold to refine." And then, "for his great name's sake" will he gather them.

Now we do not want to forget that the restoration of Israel is unconditional (without regard to moral character) while their salvation is absolutely conditional. While all of them will be restored, only those that believe will be grafted in again. In other words, only the obedient among them will be saved. All, both Jew and Gentile, must be saved, if saved at all, by faith in Christ and repentance towards God. That they will then have an opportunity to believe, repent and obey is true, but that they have such an opportunity during their dispersion, except a remnant, is not true. Notice Paul says they are "blinded;" and so can neither accept nor reject Christ. "According as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear; unto this day." and David saith: "Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling block, and a recompense unto them: let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back always." This is the condition they are in today. But this condition will be removed "when the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

What does Ezekiel prophesy concerning the restoration of Israel? Let us read Ezek. 37th chapter: "Then he said unto me, son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts. Therefore pophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, O my people, I will open your graves and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live: and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the Lord hath spoken it and performed it saith the Lord. Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick and write upon it, For Judah and the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick and write upon it, For Joseph the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick: and they shall become one in thine hands. And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee saying, Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these? say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the land of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand. And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes. And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and I will gather them on every side and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." This could not have been fulfilled when the Jews returned from Babylon, from the fact that only two tribes returned. But the "whole house of Israel" will be restored to their own land and "stand upon their feet, an exceeding great army" (Ezek. 37:10), as certain as the Bible is the book of God.

This is in harmony with Paul who says: "Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them be the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness. For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?" The Zionist movement among the Jews proclaims the imminence of the national resurrection foretold by the prophet, and therefore heralds also the resurrection of the dead at the Lord's coming. But while they will be restored only those that believe and obey will be grafted in; for Paul says, "If they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in; for God is able to graft them in again." "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land" (Isa. 1:19). "Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart" (Psa. 73:1).

Paul says again, "God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew." If he hath not, what hath he done? "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Now listen to Paul's conclusion, "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part has happened unto Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away your sins. As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sake, but as touching the election they are beloved for the fathers' sake. For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance." That this is the literal Israel, there can be no doubt; for when was spiritual Israel enemies of the gospel? If we say before they were converted, I answer they were not Israel at that time; for they had to become converted to become Israel. Let us read on: "For as ye in time past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief; even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all." They will be restored to their own land and their blindness taken away. The Deliverer is sure to come out of Sion, and then will be fulfilled the following prediction: "And Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem. The Lord also shall save the tents of Judah first (the ten tribes were first carried away captive, and they will be the last to be restored, as it is written, "The first shall be last and the last first"), that the glory of the house of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem do not magnify themselves against Judah. In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and it shall come to pass in that day that I will seek to destroy all nations that come against Jerusalem. And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and supplications; and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him as one mourneth for his own son, and shall be in bitterness for him as one that is in bitterness for his first-born. In that day there shall be great mourning in Jerusalem." This could not be the return from Babylon, for they did not and could not, look upon him whom they had pierced. The fact is, they had not pierced God's son at that time. It could not be when they crucified him, for they did not mourn then; hence it must be future. It matters not at all where the prophets lived, nor when they prophesied, their prophecy is true. See Rev. 1:7: "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every one shall see him: and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." And Acts 3:20, 21: "And he shall send Jesus Christ which was before preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." When that time comes the Prince of Peace, the Gospel King, before whom every enemy shall bow, will "return, and build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down: and will build again the ruins thereof and set it up: that the residue of men might seek after the Lord" (Acts 25:15-17).

Thus the eternal Father spake
To Christ the Son: "Ascend and sit
At my right hand, till I shall make
Thy foes submissive at thy feet."

From Zion shall thy word proceed,
Thy word, the sceptre in thy hand,
Shall make the hearts of rebels bleed,
And bow their wills to thy command,
That day shall show thy power is great,
When saints shall flock with willing minds,
And sinners crowd thy temple gate,
Where holiness in beauty shines.

GOLDEN TEXT: John 5:24.

LORD, TEACH US TO PRAY

You say you are busy this morning,
In the maelstrom of family cares,
And husband must rush to the office,
So there isn't a moment for prayers.

Then children are sent to the school room,
And the grind of the day thus begins,
With no word from God's book to remember,
Nor the echo of strengthening hymns.

What wonder the burdens are heavy,
And the hours seem irksomely long;
What wonder that rash words are spoken,
And that life seems discordant and wrong.

Pause for a little each morning,
And again at the close of the day,
To talk with the Master who loves you,
Remember he taught us to pray.

CONCRETE

HAVE YOU ever watched a child build his house of sand upon the seashore? He works hard, he labors diligently throughout a whole afternoon perhaps, rearing its walls and laying out the different rooms, and if called away before it is finished, expectantly working forward to completing it on the morrow.

But on the morrow what a disappointment! When he goes to the shore all that meets his gaze is the smooth level of the beach. The tide has washed over his work, and what had cost him so much in time and labor on the day before was utterly gone; not even a trace was left.

This boy's house of sand, washed away by the rising of the tide, is a symbol of the foolishenss of of all human earthly hopes and toil.

But suppose the child had combined with his wet sand an admixture of Portland Cement permitting the compound to dry and harden in the sunshine? Then if the structure had a proper foundation and otherwise was sufficiently stayed, and if left undisturbed by man, it will out last the centuries.

Of itself the sand has no staying power, but by the addition of the cement it has been transformed into concrete, harder than the everlasting rock. Not even the stormiest and most powerful seas can prevail against it.

I know of no better figure to illustrate the creation of faith in the heart and mind of man.

Our human hopes and fears we learn from bitter experience, are as unreliable and deceptive as the shifting sands, the sport and plaything of all the tides of life.

But infuse into those hopes and plans a realization of God's omnipresent care and loving thought for us. Let the result grow and harden in the sunshine of his love. Then you have faith—the stoutest and most enduring substance in the world. It is the bridge of solid masonry by which we approach to God: the one sure way of realizing our hopes and crowning our undertakings with success.

The apostle Paul writes in Hebrews 11:6 "Without faith it is impossible to please God: for he cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Can we comprehend that? Do we thoroughly understand the meaning of those words of Paul's? To please God we must believe that God exists, also that God will reward all those who with patience and diligence and perseverance seek after him. We must, without getting weary, work with and for God, willing in all ways to do his will. Then as surely as the sun rises, shines and sets, his reward is sure and steadfast.

This makes it our work to see that our faith—not our heads—is of perfect concrete, flawless in texture, free from all weakness of fear or doubt, stable and enduring. For "according to our faith shall it be unto us."

NATURE

The rippling brook that passes by
Gives music to my ear,
I love to listen to its songs
Throughout the entire year.

The trees shade me from the sun,
The flowers that nod their heads,
The grasses that I lie upon
Are softer than some beds.

I love to watch the flowers nod,
And watch the grasses sway,
For they were made that way by God
Who I worship every day.

Aged 12 Viola Josenhans.

FEBRUARY

FEBRUARY IS the shortest month of the year, having but 28 days; but do you realize that if you already have not become a child of God that now is the best time to accept Christ as your personal Savior and come out on the Lord's side. Delays are dangerous. Act now.

RECIPE FOR SCRIPTURE CAKE

By Ethel May Howard

Here is an excellent recipe for Scripture cake. If you carefully follow directions you cannot fail in making a good cake. Do not buy your ingredients at the store, but find them in the passages mentioned.

Four and one half cups of flour	1 Kings 4:22
One cup butter	Judges 5 25
Two cups sugar	Jer. 6:20
Two cups raisins	1 Sam. 30:12
Two cups figs	Nahum 3:12
Two cups almonds	Num. 18:8
One half cup sour milk	Judges 4:19
One cup honey	1 Sam. 14:25
Pinch of salt	Lev. 2:13
Six eggs	Jer. 17:2
Two teaspoons soda	Amos 4:5
Spice to taste	2 Chron. 9:9

Follow Solomon's prescription for making a good boy (Prov. 3:12), and you will have a good cake.

Bake in a slow oven.

LEADERSHIP

THE FACT must be emphasized that scriptural leadership, in the trues sense, must mean leadership in the spirit of Christ. "Not by might, nor by power, but by spirit, saith the Lord." Only as we are spiritually led ourselves can we truly be spiritual leaders in the family, in the church, in the world. Only as we recognize that the gospel is the power unto salvation can the ultimate end be attained.

A THOUGHT

If when morning breaks,
Clouds obscure the sky,
Fear not;

God who makes clouds,
Has sunshine nigh,
Be patient.

"The Master is Coming": Selected by Sister Wm. H. Brown

They said, "The Master is coming,
To honor the town today,
And none can tell at whose house or home,
The Master will choose to stay."
Then I thought, while my breast beat wildly,
What if he should come to mine,
How would I strive to entertain,
And honor the Guest divine.

And straight I turned to toiling,
To make my home more neat,
I swept and polished and garnished,
And decked it with blossoms sweet;
I was troubled for fear the Master,
Might come ere my task was done,
So I hastened and worked the faster,
And watched the hurrying sun.

But right in the midst of my duties,
A woman came to my door,
She had come to tell me her sorrows,
And my comfort and aid to implore,
But I said, "I cannot listen,
Nor help you any today,
I have greater things to attend to,"
And the pleader turned away.

But soon there came another,
A cripple pale and gray,
And said, "Oh, let me stop and rest,
Awhile in your home I pray,
I have travelled far since morning,
I am hungry and faint and weak,
My heart is full of misery,
And comfort and help I seek."

And I said, "I am grieved and sorry,
But I cannot keep you today,
I look for a great and noble Guest,"
And the cripple went away.
And the day wore onward swiftly,
And my task was nearly done,
And a prayer was ever in my heart
That the Master yet might come.

And I thought I would spring to meet him,
And treat him with utmost care,
When a little child stood by me,
With a face so sweet and fair.
Sweet, but with marks of tear-drops,
And his clothes were tattered and old,
A finger was bruised and bleeding,
And his little bare feet were cold.

And I said, "I am sorry for you;
You are sorely in need of care,
But I cannot stop to give it,
You must hasten otherwhere."
And at the words, a shadow
Swept over the blue-veined brow,
"Someone will feed and clothe you, dear,
But I am too busy now."

At last the day was ended,
And my toil was over and done,
My home was swept and garnished,
And I watched in the dark alone.
Watched, but no foot-fall sounded
No one paused at my gate,
No one entered my cottage door,
I could only pray and wait.

I waited till the night had deepened,
But the Master had not come,
He has entered some other door I cried,
And gladdened some other home.
My labor had been for nothing,
And I bowed my head and wept,
My heart was sore and longing,
Yet, spite of it all, I slept.

Then the Master stood before me,
And his face was as grave and fair,
"Three times today I came to your door,
And craved your pity and care.
Three times you sent me onward,
Unhelped and uncomforted,
And the blessing you might have had was lost,
And your chance to serve has fled.

"The poor you have always with you,
They are ever in need of a friend,
And as often as you give them food to eat,
Those gifts to your Master you lend.
Whenever you give them cold water,
Or whatever their needs may be,
You are aiding not only my little ones,
But you are also helping me."

"O Lord, dear Lord, forgive me,
How could I know it was thee?"
My very soul was shamed and bowed,
In the depths of humility."

And he said, "Thy sin is pardoned,
But the blessing is lost to thee,
For failing to comfort the least of mine,
You have failed to comfort me."

Good Company: A Serial Article: By Bro. S. H. Thomas

The Drama of Human Life

ONE NIGHT upon my pillow, in sad meditation on the tragedy of human life, me thought an angel of light appeared and beckoned to me saying, "Son of man, come with me, and I will show thee a picture, and see if perchance thou canst interpret its meaning." And lo, I was caught away in spirit to a high mountain, and the angel said, "Tell me, what seest thou?" I gazed a moment in awe and wonder, and trembling much, replied, "I see a dreadful valley, both deep and wide, and through this valley rushes mighty waters, leaping, bounding and foaming. On one side of the valley is darkness like a wall, silent and dense, and without beginning. Upon the other side I see beauties beyond the power of tongue to tell—a land of beauty, and of joy; a bright and shining city, set upon seven hills, before whose brightness the sun hid her face in shame, and the moon and stars refused to shine; a city so bright that the human eye cannot long behold its dazzling beauty; and in the gateway of the city I see one like the Son of God, surrounded by a host of bright beings. They stand and beckon. I see also, a great bridge. It spans the valley and its mad waters, from the wall of darkness to the highway which leads up to the city gate. I see millions of human being crossing the bridge, multitudes so great that no man can number them. They come out from the darkness and leap on the bridge, laughing, shouting, jumping, skipping, and playing as if they were overjoyed to get out of the darkness into light. Some are chasing gay plumaged butterflies, which ever elude them; others run after beautiful hued bubbles, which burst as soon as grasped; others are after flitting shadows, which vanish when approached.

"But look, I see a more terrible sight: Millions of these happy careless beings are falling through the bridge into the mad waters which foam and leap upwards, as if reaching for fresh victims. And I see the multitudes of despairing faces sinking in the flood, I cover my eyes in horror."

Then again, the angel spoke and said, "Son of man, be not afraid, look again and tell me why they fall from the bridge." I looked as I was bidden, and behold the bridge was full of trap doors, ingeniously hidden and concealed, which fell downward when trod upon, allowing the careless victim to fall through into the water beneath. I looked again and perceived that, whereas countless millions entered on the bridge from out of the darkness, but exceedingly few reached the other side in safety, and went joyfully up to the wonderful city. I wondered at this, and asked my angel guide why these few were favored, and the others lost. He replied, "Son of man, look again, and perchance thou mayest read an answer to thy question." Accordingly I looked more closely, and behold, I perceived guide posts, and notices of instruction, and danger signals, and numerous and exceedingly plain and easily comprehended directions for safe travelling, posted along the bridge. And occasionally one here, and one there, of the multitude, would stop at each notice and carefully study it, and by its help cautiously pick his way among the pitfalls, and dangerous places. Some proceeded thus cautiously, until they reached the middle of the bridge in safety, and then becoming careless, neglected to study the guide boards, and were lost. Only a few were wise enough to follow over the bridge in safety, and were given a joyful welcome into the city.

While I stood contemplating this wonderful scene, the angel of light again spoke saying, "Son of man, declare to me, if thou canst, the meaning of the vision which thou seest." But I was speechless, and blind, and could not reply. Again he spoke and said, "Listen, and I will open thine eyes and thine understanding that thou mayest comprehend the vision; go then and tell it to thy people, perchance it may aid some to cross the bridge in safety. The valley which thou seest, with the mad and rushing waters, is the valley of death; the bridge which spans it, is the pathway of human life; the darkness on the one side, is the land of forgetfulness from which all mankind comes; the lovely land and the beautiful city on the other side, is the kingdom of God, and its capitol city, the new Jerusalem; the hidden traps and pitfalls so cunningly disguised along the bridge of the pathway of human life, are the evil lusts, desires, and sins, which God has declared must end in death; the guide posts, direction notes and danger signals posted along the bridge are the commands of the living God, as revealed in his Word; the multitudes who come out from the darkenss of the land of forgetfulness and enter so playfully and carelessly, upon the bridge spanning the pathway of life, are the whole human race; the butterflies, bubbles, and shadows, which they so fruitlessly pursue are the pleasures and foolish things of their life, which perish with the using. As truly as the Lord liveth, and lovingly beckons from the gate of the beautiful city, none may ever reach him, except those who abandon their giddy pursuit of worldly pleasure, and carefully and prayerfully study the guide posts of instructions, directions, warnings, and danger signals, as revealed in the Word of the living God. "For wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat. But strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it" (Matt. 7:13, 14).

The Blood of Christ

Was it Necessary to his Resurrection?

TO ME the answer seems very plain, and the doctrine in accord with God's righteousness. The penalty of death was pronounced on account of Adam's sin of disobedience, with no provision that the execution of the sentence would abrogate, atone or expiate the sin; death would therefore be final in the absence of other or special provision for a release from the death state.

Known unto God are all his works from the beginning. His wisdom had provided that the command given to the man and his wife should not fail on account of their sin. Blood was shed to obtain skins to cover their nakedness (sin makes naked) and roll forward the day of death, that the earth might be filled with their posterity, and the seed of the woman produced that would bruise the serpent's head.

In God's economy he provided that without the shedding of blood in sacrifice there is no remission of sins; and that blood must be the blood of a sinless victim of Adam's race. Adam could transmit to his posterity only that which he himself possessed, namely a dying nature. Jesus was born in this nature, subject to death, which, as with Adam, would be final unless redeemed by blood.

God's purpose to fill the earth with sinless descendants of Adam required provision for resurrection from the death state. The scheme embraced the provision that if death overtook one to whom no personal sin attached, at the appointed time such one would awake. Jesus passed through life without committing sin. However this law or covenant of God was conditioned on the shedding of blood for its ratification.

All of God's promises are covenants whether conditional or absolute. When special importance was attached the covenant was ratified by blood sacrifice. Blood sacrifice was involved in the promise that the seed of the serpent would bruise the heel of the woman's seed—that is, cause his death. But by his righteousness he would crush the serpent's head; that is, abolish sin which has the power of death. Jesus' sinless life served as a proof of the righteousness of the law that it could be kept. But the one so keeping it did only that which was his duty to do, and unprofitable to abrogate the inherited death through Adam.

Jesus, dreading the suffering, shame and ignominy of death on the cross, his agony was such that his sweat was great drops of blood falling down to the ground; and in his distress prayed, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." When no other way was found he voluntarily and willingly offered to yield up his life blood in sacrifice; which sacrifice was acceptable to the Father, being the blood that was typified under the old covenant dispensation, and which ratified and brought the same into force; the everlasting covenant by which "The God of peace brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant."

Having been made perfect through suffering and obedience, and exalted to the divine nature, he became, by God's appointment, the author of eternal life and salvation to all who accept the offered gift. "He that overcometh I will give to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down on my Father's throne."

It is evident therefore that the sacrificial blood of Christ brought into force the provision for the release from death that Adam's sin caused, for all sleeping ones against whom no personal sins stand charged, or which were blotted out in the act of obedience.

The Lord's Side

SOME BELIEVE the word of God as recorded; others add to the word. "God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book" (Rev. 22:18). I will give in parallel columns a few examples of Scripture that sound blasphemous in using the new addition.

GOD'S WORD	MAN'S WORD
God sent forth his Son made of a woman (Gal. 4: 4).	God sent forth Joseph's Son made of a woman.
God sent his only begotten Son into the world (John 4:9).	God sent Joseph's son into the world.
He shall be called the Son of the Highest (Luke 1:32).	He shall be called the son of Joseph.
This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased (Matt. 3:17).	This is the son of Joseph in whom I am well pleased.
Thou art my Son (Heb. 1:5).	Thou art the son of Joseph.
And I saw and bare record that this is the Son of God (John 1:34).	And I saw and bare record that this is the son of Joseph.
If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down (Matt. 4:6).	If thou be the son of Joseph, cast thyself down.
If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross, for he said, I am the Son of God (Matt. 27:40-43).	If thou be the son of Joseph, come down from the cross; for he said, I am the son of Joseph.
Say ye of him . . . Thou blasphemest; because I said I am the Son of God (John 10:36).	Say ye of him . . . Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the son of Joseph.
By our law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God (John 19:7).	By our law he ought to die, because he made himself the son of Joseph.
Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? (Mark 14:61).	Art thou the Christ the son of Joseph?
Art thou then the Son of God? Ye say that I am (Luke 22:70).	Art thou then the son of Joseph? ye say that I am.
Truly this man was the Son of God (Mark 15:39).	Truly this man was the son of Joseph.
Rabbi, thou art the Son of God (John 1:49).	Rabbi, thou art the son of Joseph.
Dost thou believe on the Son of God? (John 9:35).	Dost thou believe on the son of Joseph?
Of a truth thou art the Son of God (Matt. 14:33).	Of a truth thou art the son of Joseph.
These things are written that ye migh believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God (John 20:31).	These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the son of Joseph.
Condemned already because he hath not believed in the name of the only begottten Son of God (John 3:18).	Codemned already because ye believed not in the son of Joseph. Enough, enough. Yours for truth and righteousness,

E. W. KNAPP.

The Father's House

WE FIND in John 14 our Savior comforted his disciples with the words from his own mouth. He begins by saying, "Let not your heart be troubled." How wonderful indeed it would sound in our ears to hear those comforting words face to face with a loving Savior! He goes on: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."

The world seems to say by the life they are living the Lord has gone to prepare a place for us and will gather us home. We will just go on and have a good time. But listen: was Jesus talking to the world? No. Did he ever make such a promise to the world? No, See what he says in John 14:6: "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me." Well if the world ever goes into the kingdom, they must all come in by Christ. Are you willing to take the words of the apostle Peter, Acts 2:38, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."

Do you think we must be baptized before entering the kingdom? Yes. Why? Let us read John 3:3-5: But first comes another question: If a man had repented and should die before being baptized, could he enter God's kingdom? No. Do you say, "Herren, you are too hard on us?" Very well. Then shall we say Jesus lied? How did he answer Nicodemus? "Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Nicodemus, like many today, asks how can these things be? Jesus answered and said unto him, "Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Now go back with me to Gen. 7:1: "The Lord said unto Noah, Come thou and all thy house into the ark: for thee have I seen righteons before me in this generation." What do you think Noah did? Did he go fishing saying, "I'll go into the ark after a while"? No. Turn to Heb. 11:7: "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by which he condemned the world and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith."

Some say ask, "What is the house of many mansions? Is it the church?" Read 1 Pet. 4:17, 18: "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" Heb. 10:21, 22: "And having an high priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."

Let me give you another text: 1 Tim. 3:15: "But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." Question: How many churches of God are there? Only one. What is that one? It is the mystical body of Christ. Let us read again, 1 Cor. 12:12, 13-20: "For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body being many, are one body; so also is Christ For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one spirit." Many members but one body.

Again, Paul says, Rom. 12:1: "I beseech you, therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, wholly acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Then we find in John 16:7, 8: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth: it expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away the comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart I will send him unto you. And when he is come he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." What other reasons had Christ for going away? Luke 19:12-15: "Therefore a certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return. And it came to pass when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading." We are looking for his return. I fear many are not, but are doing just as they were when Noah entered the ark. Nevertheless the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:16, 17).

S. I. HERRREN.

Man a Compound Being

GEN. 2:7: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of live; and man became a living soul."

From this text we learn that the living man is a compound. Was there any man before this act of creation? No. Was the dust the man? Was the breath of life the man? No. Dust has no consciousness. The breath of life has no consciousness. Are we to believe, then, that God cannot put dust and the breath of life together and produce consciousness? No. Certain elements have certain qualities, but combined elements often have new qualities. If a living man is a compound, it is this union of his parts that constitute him such. All law proves this. What is brass? A combination of zinc and copper. Is zinc brass? Is copper brass? No, but combine the two in certain proportions, and you have brass. What is potash? Is it simple or compound? Compound. It is composed of potassium, a metal, and oxygen, a gaseous element. Oxygen is not potash, neither is potassium, but united they make potash, and this united with grease makes soap.

Now organized dust is called "man." Why is this? Because personality is in his organism, and all the faculties that inhere in man are there. Man was lifeless till God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. Certain parts of iron and steel brought together in proper form make an engine, but it is not a moving engine. What is needed to make it a moving engine? Steam. So after man is created the breath of life must be added to make him a living man.

What is death? The opposite of life. If living man is a combination of dust and the breath of life, and if death is a dissolution, will it not end the phenomena produced by this combination? If you separate the zinc and copper, have you not lost your brass? This is true of all compounds, that when you separate them, you lose your compound; and it is equally true of man. Now what becomes of man?

Gen. 3:19: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and into dust shalt thou return." Twice we have that word "return." What does it teach? Going back to former conditions, a reduction of the compound to its simple elements.—W. N. PILE.

The gospel is a fact, therefore tell it simply.

The great Italian tragedienne Duse was asked by her daughter, What is life? Her answer was: "Life, my child, is just a test of courage." There is a great deal of truth in this definition of life; for who will deny that, from the cradle to the grave, life is a warfare? It is not only the soldiers in our national armies who are engaged in battles. Many of us who have never shouldered a rifle or worn a uniform are engaged in a struggle that puts all our courage to the test. It is the great battle of life, in which we have arrayed against us the enemies of our own passions, our own weaknesses, our own vanity and selfishness, and our own fear. It is a fight against great odds, but the captain of our salvation will eventually lead us to victory if we trust and obey him.

May it be, brethren and sisters, that at the close of the struggle we will be able to say like the apostle of old: "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith."

THE SEQUEL

"After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb; . . . . and one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of much tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Rev. 7:9, 13-17).

God's Present Supervision

DEAR BROTHER BROWN:

In reading The Restitution I note with interest the articles you write on Larger Hope, and also what you name "Second Chance."

I understand that we should be all of one mind, and it seems that through The Restitution is the best way to understand each other.

I note in The Restitution dated Dec. 21, 1920, that E. W. Knapp makes the statement that "It is heresy to believe that those that have never heard nor believed the gospel will have another chance in the future."

If he did not have a chance in this age and had one in the next age, why should that be called his second chance?

Do not you and I agree that God's ways are equal, and that he is no respecter of persons? Now if you agree with me that God's ways are equal, you will also admit that all men learn the truth in this age, or else they will in the next age, will you not?

We both are sure that some learn the truth in this age and are given a chance to be saved. It seems to me that the argument that those who do not learn the truth in this age will never be given a chance to learn it at all and thus be saved, is a pretty big argument. I I cannot see where there is any "second chance" connected with it.

Yours for the truth,

R. E. ANDERSON.

Editorial Comments

A GREAT deal has been said and written upon the subject referred to in the above letter. We have tried to analyze the statement, made by those who believe this theory, of a post resurrectional opportunity to those who have not had the gospel presented to them during their life time. In making this analysis, the object in mind has been to discover the underlying thought, the mental attitude, from which this theory has sprung, in order that we might begin from this point, and follow the process of reasoning by which it is established in the minds of its adherents. This course has led us to the following conclusions:

LOVE FOR HUMANITY

(1) The theory has its origin in a large hearted love for humanity, which is very commendable in itself, and is shared by every true believer. "Why should we have a chance and the rest of humanity be passed by?" is an expression we have often heard from those who advocate, or believe in a post-resurrectional probation. They want to see everybody be saved, or as they put it, "have a chance" to be saved. This is quite in harmony with God's thoughts: he has said through the apostle Paul, that "he will have all men to be saved, and come to a knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2:4). Or as it is expressed by Peter, "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Pet. 3:9). Would to God that we were all so filled with this thought that we would go out into the highways and byways and cry aloud to men and women to come to Christ and know and believe his truth now. "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." Let us leave the future age to the judge of all the earth who assuredly will do right, and devote ourselves earnestly to the duty that devolves upon every enlightened son of God to preach the truth, in season and out of season, to those who are now in the position we once occupied, "without Christ, being alines from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world."

GOD'S SUPERVISION EXERCISED NOW

(2) Beginning with this very natural and commendable love for humanity, the adherents of "larger hope" begin to speculate: and the wish becomes father of the thought that they will all be raised from the dead to be given an opportunity for salvation, because they have not had an opportunity during their present life. This is predicated upon the equality of God's ways, which requires him to give every one an equal chance.

This is the first step in a wrong direction. The first premise laid down is wrong; and not only wrong, but does a terrible injustice to God. In fact, it is a direct insult to him. The first premise is that "all do not have a chance now." This is a purely human viewpoint and leaves out God's omnipotence, omniscience, and wisdom out of account altogether. Not only so but it ignores the plainest statements of the divine word. Solomon, or rather God through Solomon says: "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and the good" (Prov. 15:3) Listen to Jeremiah: "Ah Lord God: behold thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee: thou showest lovingkindenss unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: the great, the mighty God, the Lord of hosts is his name, great in council and mighty in work: for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men: to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings" (Jer. 32:17-19). Again, the Lord speaks: "I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to the fruit of his doings" (Jer. 17-10). "The Lord looketh from heaven; he beholdeth all the sons of men. From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth. He fashioneth their hearts alike; he considereth all their works" (Psa. 33:13-15). In Psalms 14 the Psalmist tells us why God looks upon all the inhabitants of the earth and considereth all their works: "The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand and seek God." The apostle Paul told the Athenians the same thing exactly in that wonderful address on Mars Hill; he said: "And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us" (Acts 17:26, 27).

Now in the face of these statements of holy writ which tell us of an all wise, omniscient and loving God looking down upon the world of mankind, fashioning their hearts alike, considering all their works, beholding the good and the evil, searching the hearts of men to see if there be any that seek him or who haply may feel after him; will anyone dare to say that a single individual is deprived of a chance now? for this great supervision of God is being exercised now; he is searching for those who have the least feeling toward him, and it is absolutely impossible for any to hunger and thirst after righteousness without being filled, or to feel after God without finding him. In the light of these passages the words of Paul have great force: "If our gospel be hid, it is hid from them that are lost: in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them" (2 Cor. 4:3, 4). We love those who have this large hearted love for humanity; our own hearts go out in love to a perishing world. Would to God that we might be the instruments in his hands to save many. Let us do our best for them now, brethren, and thus show our love by our works. It is easy to pass them along to another age but God has decreed that now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation. Let us take care that our love for men does not obscure our view of God's justice and wisdom; but let us bow to his will, knowing that he will do right.

Cleveland Ecclesial Notes

We miss Sister H. W. Stroud who, accompanied by her daughter, Sister Viola, is spending the winter in New Orleans, La.

Sister Paul Tomick has had to submit to an operation. At this writing she is doing fairly well. Remember her in prayer.

Feb. 2nd Brother Herron and Sister Irish were united in matrimony. The prayers and best wishes of the church are with them. As "heirs together of the grace of life" may they make secure a home in the coming Kingdom of God.

Jan. 30th Miss Marjorie Avery, the daughter of Sister Avery, was baptized to become a new creature in Christ. She is perhaps the youngest member of our church. But on account of the zeal and competence of her mother together with the help of the Sunday School her intelligence in the truth is wonderful.

The Scripture

A FRIENDLY TALK ON A FRUITFUL TOPIC

WERE WE to hold a Bible in our hands and ask a young child what it was, the answer would probably be, "a book." The Bible is not only a book, but it is the book; and not only so, but it is the book of books

In the winter of 1914 a printed letter from Queen Elizabeth, of Belgium was read by many people in this country; none could read that letter without feeling the deepest sympathy for that loving queen as she pleaded for her stricken people and country. The Bible is not one letter but a book of many letters, showing the loving heart of an omnipotent sovereign Creator to a world that had disregarded and revolted from his just and beneficent control. The book is one, in its instructions, its admonitions and its warnings; in its prophecies, its petitions and its promises; in its faithfulness in teaching the dire results of disobedience to its precepts, on the one hand, and also the glorious rewards awaiting the obedient on the other. All through the book are given examples of both, that we may profit if we will, avoiding the evil results of the former and gaining the blessedness of the latter.

In the physical heavens, after the summer shower, we see the beautiful bow of promise; so in the light of our holy book we see the bow of divine promise spanning the ages with its symbolic colors: the blood red band of sacrifice, the silver of truth, the golden band of love, and last and best of all, the royal purple of dominion, resting first in the Edenic garden with its promise, "the seed of the woamn shall bruise the serpent's head;" and at last in the Isle of Patmos, when the heavenly voice is heard saying, "Surely, I come quickly:" to which the beloved disciple in ecstatic vision replies, "Even so, come Anointed Jesus." Praise Jehovah for his unspeakable gift!

Wonderful story of love,
Though we are far away.
Wonderful story of love.
Still he doth call today.
Calling from Calvary's mountain,
Down from the crystal bright fountain,
E'en from the dawn of creation,
Wonderful story of love.

About Believing

1. A Pointed Question—Dost thou believe? etc. (John 9:35).

2. A Plain Answer—I believe that Jesus Christ. etc. (Acts 8:37).

3. A Prolific Result—Forgiveness (Acts 10:13), Justification (Acts 13:39), Salvation (Rom. 10:9), Sonship (John 1:12), Everlasting life (John 5:24), The Holy Spirit (John 7:39), Full and Final Victory over Death (John 11:26).

Through the first Adam we have nothing but sin and death; through the second Adam, or Christ, we have righteousness and life.

An Explanation of Psa. 145:9

REFERRING TO our explanation of this Scripture which was given in The Restitution Jan. 18th, a correspondent writes: "Your article on 'Inequalities Among Men' is stimulating to thought, and your comments on Psa. 145:9 are original. This passage is written in the present tense, a fact which I had not noticed before; but of the word 'all,' which occurs twice in the text, you say nothing. If you can reduce this word to the present tense, too, you have made your point."

MERCY AND GOODNESS IN PRESENT TENSE

QUOTED IN full the text reads: "The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works." By giving this Scripture a future application Universalists seek to prove that all will finally be saved. Advocates of Larger Hope, believing this application to be true, infer from the text that all must learn the truth sometime, and have at least an opportunity to be saved. Both these theorists are blind to the fact that God's goodness "is" and that his mercies "are" now in full operation. The passage itself reduces the word "all," whatever the extent of its meaning may be, to the present. The goodness and the "tender mercies are" for "all" in the present, not in the future; here, not hereafter. These words no more favor the salvation of all men in the future, or the enlightenment of all sometime hereafter, than they do in the present. If the tender mercy of God can be enjoyed by a man three score and ten years, and he be ignorant, sinful, and miserable all the while, what proof is there that he may not be ignorant and sinful in the future, notwithstanding the goodness and tender mercy of God? If "the riches of his goodness and forebearance and longsuffering" are despised in the present by the multitudes, "not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth to repentance" (Rom. 2:4), may not "the goodness of God" be wasted in the future, as it is in the present, upon hard and impenitent hearts? (verse 5). That "his mercy endureth forever" does not militate against the facts in the case. Yes, his mercy does endure forever; but still it cannot profit a man who will not receive it. This mercy "is forever" now, and yet men practice iniquity till they become a curse to themselves, a disgrace to society, and finally curse God and die. What better will it make the matter for mercy to endure forever? The mercy that will permit a man to live in ignorance and sin all his life, and die in this condition, will not benefit him by enduring forever.

GOD NOT GOOD TO "ALL" UNIVERSALLY

Our correspondent's trouble all comes from making the word "all" a term of universal extent. God is not good to "all" in a universal sense, and never will be. Was God good to the wicked Sodomites when he rained down fire and brimstone upon them? Yes, says latitudinarians; for God says, "I took them away as I saw good" (Ezek. 16:50). But good to whom? Not to the Sodomites who were burned up in a moment (Lam. 4:6); but it was good to Lot and his family. They were "set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire" (Jude 7). It was a good example for "those who should afterwards live ungodly" (2 Pet. 2:6). Paul settles the controversy and forever puts it to rest in these words: "Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God; on them which fell, severity; but towards thee goodness, if thou continue in his goodness, otherwise thou also shall be cut off" (Rom. 11:22). In this passage the word "severity" is used in contrast with "goodness," and hence must mean exactly the opposite. God, then, is not good to all in a universal sense; for it was not "goodness" to those who fell, but "severity." Goodness was extended to others upon the condition of "continuing in his goodness."

MERCY FOREVER

People of latitudinarian tendencies are always quoting David's words, "His mercy endureth forever." They make capital of the fact that in one psalm of twenty-six verses it is said twenty-six times, "His mercy endureth forever" (Psa. 136). Well let us give an extract from this psalm and the reader can judge for himself to whom the mercy of the Lord endureth forever: "O give thanks to the Lord of lords: for his mercy endureth forever . . . . to him that smote Egypt in their firstborn: for his mercy endureth forever: . . . . but overthrew Pharoah and his host in the Red Sea: for his mercy endureth forever: . . . . to him that smote great kings: for his mercy endureth forever: AND SLEW FAMOUS KINGS: for his mercy endureth forever." From this quotation one thing is surely evident: the mercy of the Lord is towards the people who love him—not at all towards the wicked whom he slew for their sake. The Psalmist frequently takes this view of the subject. "With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful" (Psa. 18:25). "All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth, unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies" (Psa. 25:10). "Many sorrows shall be to the wicked, but he that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about" (Psa. 32:10). "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting, upon them that fear him" (Psa. 103:17). These texts tell exactly to whom the mercy of the Lord endureth forever. It is "from everlasting to everlasting, upon them that fear him." Universalism teaches, under the disguise of Larger Hope, that the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon the wicked, just as much as upon them that fear God. "Therefore he that made them, will not have mercy upon them, and he that formed them, will show them no favor" (Isa. 27:11). How can a man be saved to whom God will show "no mercy" ?

CONDITIONS OF MERCY

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him" (Isa. 55:7). Universalism teaches that God will have mercy upon him whether he forsakes "his way" or not; Larger Hope teaches that he will have mercy upon those who refuse to give up their "thoughts" by giving them future opportunities to learn the truth. But God himself says: "Therefore will I also deal in fury, mine eyes shall not spare, neither will I have pity, and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them" (Ezek. 8:18). "I will dash them one against another, even the fathers and the sons together, saith the Lord. I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them" (Jer. 13:14). Now while it is true that "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him" (Psa. 103:13), yet it is also true that upon those who do not "fear him" these words shall come to pass: "Because I have called and ye have refused; I have stretched out my hand and no man regarded; but ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof; I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as a desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you: then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me" (Prov. 1:24-28). Under Moses' law certain ones died "without mercy" (Heb. 10:28), and James says, "He shall have judgment without mercy (on them) that have showed no mercy" (James 2:13). John speaks of some who "shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation" (Rev. 14:10). Wrath "without mixture": wrath without any mixture of mercy in it. It cannot be claimed that "wrath" means disciplinary stripes of Universalism; for such strifes are a means of salvation. John the Baptist exhorted the Jews to "flee from the wrath to come" (Matt. 3:7). This surely does not mean they were to "flee" from what would save them! Paul says that Christ has "delivered us from the wrath to come" (1 Thess. 1:10), and that "we shall be saved from wrath through him" (Rom. 5:9). This wrath to come, from which Christ has "delivered" and "saved" us, cannot mean the corrective and saving discipline so much paraded as a saving means of salvation. If we are to be saved by wrath, then when we "flee from wrath to come," as enjoined by Scripture, we are fleeing from the gracious means of salvation; and when Christ "delivered" and "saved" us from this wrath, he freed and "saved" us from being saved! "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36). If the wrath of God is what saves us, then as believers are "delivered" from that wrath, they cannot be saved; but as the wrath of God "abides" on unbelievers, they are all sure to be saved! Believers all lost; unbelievers all saved! Reader, can you believe it?

TRACTS

HAVE WE forgotten the tract work? In the parable of the sower, Math. 13:3-8, some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them; some fell upon stoney places, where they had not much earth: some fell among thorns and were choked, but others fell into good ground and brought forth fruit.

We can not always choose the ground, neither can we alway wholly prepare it, but a timely tract may help some one.

Let us plant and water by giving suitable tracts and leave it with God to give the increase (1 Cor. 3:6, 7).

Send for free tracts to Mrs. Lydia Railsback, 621 South Fellows St., South Bend, Ind.

DEAR BEREANS:

AS I was re-elected Secretary of the Nebraska Berean Society at our last conference, I am again appealing to you all, not only the Bereans, but others of the faith, to help spread the truth. As we can plainly see, we are close to the end and will soon be facing the great perils that are yet to arise. By helping spread the truth we can all feel that we have done something towards helping with the Lord's work. This can be done by sending to me for tracts and distributing them around to others. In this way you may get someone interested in the truth, and by doing this you will feel that you have done your part in the great work. You can also help in many other ways, as we all know it takes a great deal to have these tracts printed, and get them sent out. We should all help with some part of the great work and also contribute to its support. Let us try to give our mite toward the tract fund. There were not many that answered my appeal last year. Let us see if there is not a few more this year. As the Nebraska Bereans had done more work last year than any other, so we want to try and make it greater this year. Since our conference I have sent out sixty-six tracts, which is not many but there is time enough between now and conference so that we can distribute many more. Let us try to have a larger tract report to send in this year than last year. This is not meant for just the Nebraska Bereans, but all others. And I feel sure that you will all want to help with the great work. With God's blessing on you all,

Your sister waiting for the Lord's coming,

Help the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

BOYS, READ THIS

By a Boy

My friend, have you heard of the club for boys
  On the banks of the River Work,
Where the noise of the bustle fills the air
  And high ambitions lurk?
It lies in the valley of Now's-the-time,
  In the province of No-Delay;
It's the home of the careful, ever elert,
  Where the big Stick-to-its-stay.
The club is as young as the day before.
  And it grows in the darkest year;
It is wrapped in the sunshine of successful dreams,
And praises are sung to its honest schemes
  And echoed in joyous cheers.

TEMPERATE

TRUE: I want to be true to God, therefore I must be temperate. Intemperance leads to faithlessness.

ENERGETIC: To do good things. Intemperance leads to weakness and indolence.

MANLY: Intemperance makes men loose self-respect and the respect of others.

PURE: I want to be pure in word, and thought and deed; intemperance leads to impurity.

ESTEEMED: I want to so live that my Savior will say "Well done," therefore I must be temperate.

RIGHTMINDED: So that I can make wise decissions. Intemperance weakens judgment and will power.

ALERT: To grasp my opportunity. They pass by rapidly.

TRUSTWORTHY: My captain has assigned me to a post of duty. I must do as ordered.

EVER VILIGANT: The devil goeth about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour.

My Father's Face and My Father's Dream

A DREAM DREAMED IN OCTOBER, 1838

How plain I see in twilight gloom,
  My saintly father's face,
And read the story written there
  Of inner sanctifying grace!
Head bowed on hand in solemn mien
  He to me like a prophet seems,
Enrapt by God from all around,
  In deep prophetic dreams.

And once indeed there truly came
  To him a tall, angelic form
To herald to our own dear land
  War's swift approaching storm;
He paused outside our western gate,
  With war-drum swung before,
His right hand beating telling stroke,
  His left one, a call to war.

And far as father's eyes could reach
  Were hearses moving on,
Bearing the dead to burial place
  While many mourners mourned;
And then uprose that angel's voice
  Like thunder to the ear,
As he pronounced the solemn doom
  Of land we hold so dear.

"Woe! woe! woe! ye people of the land,"
  He cried, "because of your iniquity,"
Famine, pestilence and sword shall plead
  Till end of sin there be;
Then moved the funeral train along;
  And vanished out of sight
 And father rose from pallet bed,
  Excited and affright.

Already dressed, for he a watcher was,
  Above the bed of pain,
Where I by typhus stricken down,
  For weary weeks had lain;
Scarce conscious of a thing that passed
  Except my father's prayer
(That answered was) that I, raised up,
  His joy and work might share.

But others of our household band
  Had caught the plague from me,
And every bed below was filled
  With forms too pitiful to see;

And well my father knew that dream,
  To him portended ill;
That death would come within his doors,
  And empty caskets fill.

And angel vision came to pass,
  For ere the break of dawn,
Our little Johnny closed his eyes,
  To sleep till Jesus comes.
And Byron, staff of ageing years,
  My father's eldest son,
When few more weeks had passed away,
  To quiet rest went down.

My father's prayerful mother said,
  "I'll see the end of earthly things,"
And died just as the dying year
  Had folded up his wings.
My lover, aunt and cousin went,
  With other kindred friends,
Leaving us like the smitten tree
  That 'neath the whirlwind bends.

Yet father bravely bore it all,
  With eye uplifted to the hills,
Still saying, as did Job of old,
  Let God do with me as he wills,
"I will him trust, though he me slay"
  All blessed be his holy name,
"He gave," and he hath right to "take away;"
  His wisdom none can doubt or blame.

And two years later came the war
  The angel had foretold,
Freeing the slaves, that sinful men
  So long had bought and sold.
Fierce were the battles fought, and long,
  And blood in torrents surged,
That the dark crime of stealing men,
  Might from our land be purged.

The dreamer and his dream are gone,
  But O 'tis bliss to me,
That when I come to yon dear home
  I father's face shall see.
And walk and talk and laugh with him,
  As in the days gone by,
Where pestilence no more shall come,
  And friends shall never die.

Israel's Dispersion and Consolation and The Time of Gentile Dominion

IT IS amazing to learn how little is really known concerning the dispersion of Israel, and the times of the Gentiles, so explicitly pointed out in the Scriptures, by those who are avowed followers of Christ, and yet who reject the gospel of the kingdom. And in the rejection of the gospel, we easily find the cause of this ignorance, and their failure to discern the signs of the times.

THE CALL OF ISRAEL, THEIR REJECTION AND RECONCILIATION

When God called Israel out of Egyptian bondage, he promised a blessing for obedience. In the twentysixth chapter of Leviticus, we find an account of God's warning to them. If they should walk contrary unto him, a seven times plague or punishment would pass over them. Nevertheless, because of the sacred promise God made to their fathers, he is to gather a remnant of this people from the nations where he has scattered them and build again the tabernacle of David, and establish them in their own land, never again to be rooted up.

Why should anyone reject the emphatic words of God as recorded in Amos 9:11, 12, 15: "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breeches thereof: and I will build it as in the days of old: that they may possess the remnant of Edom, and of all the heathen, which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this. And I will plant them upon their land which I have given them, saith the Lord God." Let the angel Gabriel, sent from God tell us who it is that shall take the throne of David: "He (Jesus) shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David" (Luke 1:32). The Turks are in constant dread of the hordes of Russia. To day I read an account of a fear among them that Russia might in the near future sweep down upon them.

If God's set time is upon us we may look for wonderful developments. I hardly think it pleases God for us to be frightened or impatient. God is going to take ample time to handle the situation justly, as he always has done things, as Brother Huggins suggests to us, and the Scriptures tell us to submit ourselves to the present order of things until the appointed time comes. It is natural for those who long for the Lord's return to anxiously watch every movement for signs of his nearness. This attitude must be pleasing to the Bridegroom.

But are we sure that we are among those who have made themselves ready? Are we looking heavenward with a prayer for our Lord's return when we need to have our head bowed to the earth seeking the Lord's mercy that we may be among those of whom God says: "It may be that I will hide thee in the time of trouble."

THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES

We find that the kingdoms of the Gentiles, beginning with Nebuchadnezzar, the head of a great image representing Gentile dominion, has trodden down Jerusalem from that time. Now Jesus warns his followers concerning this treading down of the holy city in these words: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." God declares that he rules even in the kingdoms of men; that he raises up kings and puts down kings. The balance of power has been maintained by the power of God among the Gentile nations, and when the time comes for the overthrow of these orders of governments no earthly power can prevent it. Were it not for this divine intervention, government through human agency would have long ago perished from the earth.

How little the world realizes that the children of God have been a salt in the earth. On account of those whom the Father has called from the world the powers that be are upheld. God is still taking out a people for his name but the reins of government will soon be taken by his Son and shared by those whom the Father has given him.

ARE WE NOW LIVING IN THE TIME OF THE END?

Israel's overthrow seems to have covered a time cycle or epoch of about 19 years, or from 606 B. C. when Jerusalem was laid waste and the temple burned. The year 598 B. C. marks the time of king Jehoiachim's surrender to Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings 24:14).

There seems to be no question about the seven times period covering Gentile dominion and also the time of Israel's dispersion and punishment being 2520 years. By applying this time measure to these three dates brings us to an epoch covering 1914, 1922 and 1933. Time students may vary slightly in the time and scope of these beginning periods, but it is notable that all seem pretty well agreed that within the next seven years the Redeemer of his people shall return to deliver Jerusalem from the grasp of her enemies and God shall be magnified thereby before their eyes.

1914 has passed into history and God's people can see his hand in an unmistakable way among the nations; they shall be brought low and humbled. Do not the Scriptures teach that sometime prior to the sight prophesied of by Enoch, the coming of Christ with ten thousand of his saints (Jude 14), that the marriage is to take place? How long a time is to be occupied in the secret chamber does not seem to be made known, but nineteen hundred and twenty-two may bring in the redemption of Christ's helpmeet as stated by the prophet Daniel 12:2 in these words: "And many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life and some to everlasting contempt; and they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

The establishment of the kingdom of God over the remnant of Israel, shall be the first constructive step. Israel, sorely afflicted, is to accept their king when he comes, but the nations shall have to be broken in pieces before submission to the kingship of Christ. The nations who have been the enemies of the Jews, and who now refuse to serve Israel shall perish; yea, these nations shall utterly be wasted (Isa. 60:12) "For behold the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many. For I know their works and their thoughts; it shall come that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come an see my glory" (Jer. 65:15, 16, 18). May it please God for our own country to be among those who may offer the least resistance to a dominion and a kingdom that shall never be left to other people. Daniel when pressing the angel as to what the final closing scenes of the age should be, was told these words: "Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed until the time of the end. Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand" (Dan. 12: 9, 10).

Without any doubt we are upon the threshold of events that shall confound the high and mighty of the present world. To do this God has chosen the foolish of the world, rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom. When we lie down at night do we anticipate that before another sun we may stand before the Son of Man to give an account of the deeds done in the body; when we arise is there a prayer on our lips that God will keep us from the pitfalls of satan and fit us for the brightness of his coming.

The "Plymouth Brethren" and the Punishment of the Wicked

A VERY great responsibility attaches to the man who occupies the position of a religious teacher and leader. He ought to be above all things honest—honest in dealing with God's truth, and honest to his opponents, or those who differ from him. We fear that Mr. John R. Caldwell, a prominent leader of the "Plymouth" Brethren in Glasgow, does not come up to this standard as a leader, for whenever he has to refer to Conditional Immortality, he never uses that title, but "the non-eternity of punishment." All his followers do the same thing. On their part it is doubtless, in the great majority of cases, pure ignorance; but it is not so in his case. He knows well enough that believers in Conditional Immortality have over and over again repudiated his title as utterly misleading and nondescriptive of their position. Indeed they would never take the title as applying to themselves, were is not made plain by other connections that it is intended to be so applied. But in spite of all disclaimers—in spite of the knowledge that they believe in eternal punishmnt as strongly as he does himself—he persists in calling their doctrine "the non-eternity of punishment." This is not honest. If he should say that he does not admit that eternal destruction, or death, is an eternal punishment; that does not alter the case. He knows that the other side believes and maintains the contrary, and that they have adopted a title by which they choose to be known; therefore as an honest man he ought not to ignore their contention and title, and call them names with the intention of creating an unjust and ignorant prejudice against their doctrine. From such controversalists we can never expect any fair play.

Neither do we think that he deals honestly with God's Word. In his magazine, "The Witness," for July, 1896, he contributes an article on "Fundamental Error and Scriptural Discipline." In this article he classes believers in Conditional Immortaily and Universalism under the one title (another instance of his want of fair-mindedness), and says that "the enormously rapid spread of these doctrines throughout all Christendom, and the indifference with which they are regarded by some who are themselvs sound in the faith, seem to call for a decided facing of the question as to how the holders of such errors are to be dealt with according to the word of God." The attack is, however, almost exclusively levelled at Conditional Immortality, and the facing of the question is not as to the truth of the doctrine, but as to deal with those who hold the "heresy," for heresy it is by a foregone conclusion. And by a process of reasoning satisfactory to himself, judgment is arrived at and sentence of excommunication is pronounced. This troubles us just as little as any papal sentence of excommunication.

But the tables may be turned upon Mr. Caldwell quite well. He says: "If a defiled conscience be allowed, th Spirit is grieved and the power for maintaining the truth is gone. It is therefore certain that where fundamental error is embraced conscience has first been violated. This may not be apparent to others, it may have been in such a way as not to appear in this life, but as surely as the leprous spot on the forehead declares the man to be 'utterly unclean,' so surely does fundamental error discover the moral condition of him who holds it." Now Mr. Caldwell is evidently so wrapped up in his own sense of self-righteousness, that not for a moment does he pause to think that these serious accusations, which he does not hesitate to level at others, may be levelled at himself. He forgets that from our standpoint it is he who has the fundamental error, and so every word which he has used in condemnation of us is equally in condemnation of hismelf, according to which side has the truth. That is the point first to be settled. Whose "conscience has first been violated," if not those which have imbibed the Platonic dogma of natural immortality—the devil's lie of Gen. 3:4? Having first adopted that idea as a fixed principle, or fundamental doctrine, it is not possible for them to deal honestly with the word of God. Witness the following statement: "Scripture invariably conveys the thought of the punishment of sin being eternal, conscious suffering." "Invariably," observe! We begin to wonder whether the writer of these words has any eyes that he can see, or we may rub our own and wonder if we have been seeing aright. Let the unbiassed reader judge for himself from the following passages:

> Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; thou shalt diligently consider his place, and he shall not be. . . . . the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the excellency of the pastures: they shall consume; in smoke shall they consume away (Psa. 37:10, 20).
> Ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water. And the strong shall be as tow, and his work as a spark; and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them (Isa. 1:30, 31).
> What do ye imagine against the Lord? He will make a full end: affliction shall rise up the second time. For though they be like tangled thorns, and be drenched as it were in their drink, they shall be devoured utterly as dry stubble (Nahum 1:9, 10).
> Behold the day cometh, it burneth as a furnace; and all the proud, and all that work wickedness, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch (Malachi 4:1).
> Even now is the axe laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. . . . He that cometh after me is mightier than I. . . , whose fan is in his hand and he will thoroughly cleanse his threshing floor: and he will gather his wheat into his garner, but the chaff will burn up with unquenchable fire (Matt. 3:10-12).
> Gather up first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them. . . . As therefore the tares are gathered up and burned with fire; so shall it be in the end of the world (Matt. 13:30, 40).
> If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and they gather them, and cast them into the fire and they are burned (John 15:6).
> They are the enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is perdition (Phil. 3:18 19).
> But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption (2 Pet. 2.12).

In these passages (only samples of many more of similar import) we have several figures under which the punishment of the wicked is predicted. Is there in a single one of them th idea of "eternal, conscious suffering"? Do they not all expressly exclude the thought? An article that consumes away into smoke—what is left of it? A garden without water"—what life is there in it? How does the Lord make a "full end" of those who have an endless existence? How can those who are to exist forever in conscious indestructible existence be appropriately likened unto tow, or dry stubble, or chaff—the most inflamable and destructible of all materials? Who would ever think that a tree continues to exist and live of which it is said that "neither root nor branch" of it is left? Who would ever suppose that an unfruitful tree dug up, and cast out, and put in the fire; or a withered branch severed from the life-giving stem, and cast into the fire: or tares gathered up in bundles to be burned, are symbols of continued life and existence? Who believes that an "unquenchable fire" is a fire that does not burn up, or, in other words, does not do its work? or believes that there is no difference between burning up and burning on? or that there is no difference between coming to an end and having no end.? No one would say or believe any of these impossibilities except a man whose "conscience has first been violated" by the false doctrine of natural immortality. If we are the Sadducees of modern times, as Mr. Caldwell is pleased to call us (although we believe both in the existence of spirit and in resurrection), then he and his followers may be called the Pharisees of these days, to whom our Lords' words apply: "This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them."

So completely have they closed their eyes that it would almost appear as if the passages we have quoted were not in Mr. Caldwell's Bible. And in reality his Bible on this subject must be confined to the Rich Man and Lazarus, and perhaps such passages as Mark 9:42-48, and Re. 14:10, 11; 20:10. For assuredly in no other passages is it permissible even to deduce the idea of "eternal, conscious suffering." For what is the plain, unfigurative language of Scripture? "The wages of sin is death:" "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die:" "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption:" "Sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death:" "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord:" and so on almost ad infinitum. Again we ask, Who supposes that death means life; that to die means to live forever, even in misery; that corruption means an endless conscious existence; that everlasting destruction means an everlasting preservation (in misery); or that the finish of sin means that it shall go on without end? And again, we reply, No one, save those whose "conscience has first been violated" by the false doctrine of natural immortality. Only they would think of so perverting the ordinary use of language, and it is not possible for them to deal honestly with God's word.

Hence even their beggarly array of texts against the overwhelming and uniform testimony of the Scripture will be found on examination in no way to support them. For the scene of the Rich Man and Lazarus is laid in Hades, a place of the dead, where the Scripture informs us there is no knowledge, nor work, nor praise, nor speech, but silence, and the worm, and corruption. Therefore, in brief, we must view it as a parable or set ourselves in opposition to all the plain, unparabolic teaching as to the state of Sheol or Hades. "The unquenchable fire," and "the worm that dieth not," of Mark 9, are quoted from Isa. 66, where the connection shows the scene to be one of carnage, where worms are feeding upon corpses. And indeed, the passage when rightly understood is a strong figure of utter and irremediable destruction. The passage in Rev. 14 refers to a local destruction of certain ones that worship the beast, and their torment is limited by the expression "day nor night." It does not refer to the final punishment of the wicked in the day of judgment. The same limitation is found in Rev. 20:10, which, moreover, has special reference to the devil. The fate of wicked men is foretold further on in the chapter. Those whose names were "not found written in the book of life" were "cast into the lake of fire." "This is the second death."

We might say very much more, of course, on these things, and no doubt what we have said on these last few texts will not meet with Mr. Caldwell's assent; but we put the matter before any fair and open mind to decide on which side lies the truth; to decide whether it is not mad folly in the search after truth to reject say seven-eighths of the plain, unparabolic testimony laid before us, and pin our faith to doubtful interpretations, to say the least, of one or two parabolic and highly figurative passages. We have no fear of the result. Truth is stronger than error, and must prevail; but of course we can close the door to its entrance, and effectually shut it out. This is the prenest attitude of Mr. Caldwell and his followers. They have hardened their hearts and shut them up against the reception of God's truth. Perhaps God in his grace will soften their hearts some day, and open their eyes to see light in his light.

Matt 18:20 Outlined

this translation the reference is to only one lass of believers, those who die and live again at he resurrection. They live again, as Rotherham uggests in a footnote, "because Jesus is 'the esurrection,'" and those who thus live again, hall not die forever, "because Jesus is 'the life.'"

Whether we accept Bullinger's exposition or otherham's translation, in either case there is no believers who die are not dead.—Beli

We regret to lose for several months Sister John H. Avery, also her daughter Sister Marjorie, both of whom have gone to Ocean Park, California. We commend them to any believers they may chance to meet as daughters of Israel, and pray they may be preserved and blessed in their absence from us, and be returned to us in the safe keeping of God.

The Fellow Helpers' Society met at the home of Brother and Sister Drenske Jan. 28th. The meeting was opened with song after which Brother Titman led in prayer. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. Very good reports were received from the visitors of the sick. The meeting was then turned over to the leader, Brother Prosek, who manifestly proved that the number 666 of Rev. 13:18 was the man of sin spoken of by Paul in 2 Thess. 2:9. The meeting was closed with a song, and prayer by Brother Drabenstott.

The Man of Sin

PAUL, WRITING to the Thessalonian brethren commended them for their spiritual growth in "the truth," and for their love abounding towards each other, and prays for them to continue steadfast in "the truth" unto the coming of the Lord or gathering to him. Paul tells them not to be alarmed or deceived because the apostasy or falling away must first come, and then the man of sin was to be revealed. So we can see that there was to be an order in the development of the apostasy.

The falling away of the brethren; the man of sin revealed; and Christ's coming and the destruction of the man of sin.

Paul couples the development of the man of sin with the "falling away" that was to come, but at about that time the leaven had already begun to work and errors soon crept in (verse 7). False doctrine was preached and traditions sprung up after the first century. The man of sin was revealed at the end of the fifth century.

Is the man of sin the 666 of Rev. ?

SIX HUNDRED AND SIXTY-SIX

Read Rev. 13:18. It is the number of a beast and a man. The man's number signifies the man's name to which the number belongs. The man then to be ascertained is the name of the man of sin, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above every one called a god, or that is worshipped, so that he sitteth in the temple of God as a god publicly showing himself that he is a god.

The man of sin is not a single person, but an order of men or system of rulership. The pope is the man image set up for worship in Rome.

This man image has a name. Rev. 13:18 says it is "the number of a man"; either such a number as men use or a number implying in it the name, title or distinguishing character "of a man."

Now the Greek word "Lateinos" signifies the Latin man; or the man of Latium, from which city the Romans derived their origin and their language; and this word "Lateinos' contains in numerical numbers exactly the number 666.

Lateinos	666

The church of Rome is properly the Latin church, they use the Latin language in all their church ceremonies.

Mass, prayers, hymns, canons, bulls, etc., are conceived in Latin. The papal councils speak in Latin. No Scripture is read in Catholic churches except in Latin. The pope communicated his language to the people under his dominion as the mark and character of his empire.

The beast, therefore, or the authority through the ten kingdoms in support of that church, of which the pope is the head or image, may well be called Lateinos. Other words can be used to add up 666, but do not agree together in meaning and standing exactly for the same number in numerical letters.

Lateinos, then, being the number of the name of the Latin man, or the Roman, is exactly the number of the beast. I can see no occasion to doubt either about the beast or his number; and when we look up history we find Ireaneus in the second century put the same construction on it. On these grounds therefore I asert that "Lateinos" is the name of the beast; for in no other word, description of the beast or papal Rome, do we find such exact agreement.

"The Resurrection and Life"

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die (John 11:25, 26).

BELIEVERS in the natural immortality of the soul make much of this text of Scripture, especially the last part of it. It is often quoted at funerals for the purpose of supporting the idea that "There is no death; what seems so is transition." That this is not the teaching of the text is plainly evident.

1. The phrase, " though he were dead," shows that death is a possibility. Believers may die, but in every such case "yet shall he live." Jesus is the resurrection to all such. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead" (1 Cor. 15:21). "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose from the dead, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" (1 Thess. 4:14). That is, God who raised up Christ, the head, will bring the church, which is the body of Christ, up from the dead with Jesus, following in its train in due time. "Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. 15:23).

2. The phrase, "he that liveth," shows that those who "never die" are living believers. There are some believers who will be alive when Jesus comes to raise the dead, and such "shall never die." Jesus is the life to all such. "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed" (1 Cor. 15:52). "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. 4:16, 17).

Dr. E. W. Bullinger says, "At least one generation of Christians shall never die at all, but be 'changed' at the appearing of 'Christ our life.' This explains the words of Jesus in John 11:25, 26: 'I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me though he were dead (R. V. die), yet shall he live.' To him, 'I am the resurrection,' and whosoever liveth (i. e., is alive at my coming) 'and believeth on me shall never die.' To him, 'I am the life!' "

Rotherham translates the text as follows: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth on me even though he die shall live again! and no one who liveth again and believeth on me shall in anywise die unto times age-abiding." According to this translation the reference is to only one class of believers, those who die and live again at the resurrection. They live again, as Rotherham suggests in a footnote, "because Jesus is 'the resurrection.' " and those who thus live again, shall not die forever, "because Jesus is 'the life.' "

Whether we accept Bullinger's exposition or Rotherham's translation, in either case there is no hint that believers who die are not dead. Believers may die, and do die; but "Jesus is the resurrection and the life," and because of this great New Testament truth we "sorrow not, even as others which have no hope."—Selected.

Salvation

THE SAVING of man from the power and penalty of sin, and the conferring upon him of eternal happiness. How is man saved? By believing the gospel and being baptized into Christ (Mark 16:16). Does the gospel save all men? No; only those that believe it. Does believing the gospel save all men? No; only those who obey by being baptized. Does baptism save all men? No; only those baptized into Christ. Who are baptized into Christ? All of those who believe the one true gospel. Do all men believe the true gospel? No. Are all men saved then? No; only those who believe and obey the commands of Christ: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth (the gospel) and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not (the gospel) shall be condemned" (Mark 16:15, 16). Here are two positive commands. The believing class is rewarded with eternal life; the unbelieving class suffer the penalty of condemnation, which is eternal death.

Has the gospel been preached in all the world? Yes: Paul declares the gospel was preached to every creature under the heaven (Col. 1:23). Were the people saved under his preaching? Yes; all that believed and obeyed. Did the people in Paul's day all believe the gospel? No. What becomes of the class that do not believe? They are accursed (Gal. 1:8, 9), which means to devote to misery or destruction. Condemnation means to sentence to eternal punishment. The Scriptures further state that all who follow the works of the flesh shall not inherit the kingdom of God (Gal. 5:19-21). This is the plain word of God. Man comes in with the doctrine of "Universal Salvation," which is not scriptural, and is the invention of man, is adding to God's word, and is a dangerous position, for God will add unto him the plagues written in this book (Rev. 22:18). After diligently searching the Scriptures we find no evidence for Universal Salvation.

It May Be

IT MAY be, dear reader, that in all the days of your life you have failed to gather what men call wealth. Only the simplest necessities may be yours to enjoy, while your neighbor reclines in comfort and luxurious surroundings, you may toil from day to day, content with the meagre wages of honest labor; your name may never be spoken in terms of praise by press or people; you may never be called a warrior bold, or statesman wise; neither science nor any of the useful professions have advanced a fraction through your efforts. Even your very existence may not be known except in the immediate neighborhood of your humble home. In short, you may have totally and miserably failed in every worldly undertaking and ambition, and yet if you have loved God and kept his commandments, and so secured his promise of eternal life, and a part in the glories of the ages to come, your life will have been a grand success, overshadowing and overtopping the many achievements and selfish ambitions of the rich and powerful of this world, as the clouds of heaven over shadow the earth.

It may be that by shrewd and skillful management and great industry, you have accumulated a great fortune. You may have mastered the sciences, and bent the forces of nature to your will; you may be perhaps a great general, and like Napoleon, or Alexander, have caused the world to tremble; men may bow and cringe, and give place before you; they may run at your beckon and leap at your command, and yet, if you are not found among those exalted ones who rise to meet the Lord when he comes, your life has been a gigantic failure. Better had you never been born; for "what shall it profit a man if he gains the whole world and lose his own soul," or be cast away?

Workers

THE THOUGHT of work runs through the Bible from the first chapter of Genesis, where we read of God's creation of the world, to the very last chapter in the Revelation of John, where the promise is, "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me to render to each man according as his work is." Jesus could say, "My Father worketh even until now, and I work"; and if we are true followers of our Master we will always find plenty of work awaiting us. Nearly two thousand years ago Jesus could say to his chosen twelve, "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest," and truly the world has need of laborers today more than then.

Work is the law of life, and a blessing, and the interpretation sometimes put on the words of the Creator as to its being a curse when Adam and Eve were driven from the garden of Eden is a false one. It is a pretty certain thing that the man or woman who does not have to work in some fashion will never amount to much, and this rule applies to our spiritual life also. Too many are content to go to church once or twice on Sunday and think their duty is done until another week rolls around; but the very thought of Bereans means work, and the earliest ones were searchers after truth. What earnest workers for Jesus those early Christians were, for notwithstanding all the hardships and persecutions they endured, to say nothing of the lack of what we regard as necessities in the way of travelling facilities, the good news "concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ" had extended in a few years after the death of our Master all over the vast Roman empire. If this program had been followed the world of today would be a different place to what it is now.

Let us begin at once trying to spread as they did the good news of a Savior who ever liveth and who is soon coming back to the earth. May we always keep eye open and ear alert for a place where we can speak a word for the Master, or do a kindly act, and don't let us be afraid to extend a helping hand to the discouraged when we meet them, ever remembering we are "living epistles" and that the way we interpret God's word means more to your neighbors than what they read in the Book itself. Let us remember that the ministry of Jesus was in deeds even more than in words. We have many more instances of his healing the sick and saying "Be of good cheer" than we have of the sermons he preached. We cannot make our sick ones whole, but we can cheer their hearts. Nothing kills sick people like depression of spirits, and the neglect of friends is a great dampener of same. Let us carry everywhere we go the sunshine of the gospel of Jesus, kindness in our hands, faith, hope and love in our voices and countenances. If Jesus has been a real blessing to us we will want to tell others about him. If we have no desire to talk about our best friend it may be doubted whether we have ever become truly acquainted with him.

"Freely ye have received, freely give" was his command, and we who have tasted fully of his lovingkindness must be liberal in sharing our blessings with those less favored. Two by two the disciples were sent out to tell others of the wonderful Son of Man, and no matter how much alone we may think we are, his comforting promise is just as sure today as it was when he gave his last command to the men with whom he had been working in a little corner and who were now to carry his gospel to all the world. "Lo, I am with you always."

Obituary

Death in Adam; Life in Christ

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them.

AT PETERSBIRG, VIRGINIA, on Saturday, January 22nd, 1921, Brother John W. Morgan, late of Newark, New Jersey, laid down life's burdens awaiting the coming of the Master who shall bestow life eternal.

At West Brighton, Staten Island, New York, on Thursday, January 27th, 1921, Sister Selma Samuelson, member of the church of God at Brooklyn, New York, fell on sleep to awaken at the coming of him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life."

A. D. DONALDSON.

SELMA SAMUELSON was born in Sweden, Nov. 9, 1868, and died on Staten Island, N. Y. Jan. 27, 1921, and between these two dates stretches a loving and self-sacrificing life.

She came to this country when a young girl, soon after uniting with the Church of God in Brooklyn, N. Y., of which her brother was a member, and from then unto the day of her death she was a devoted loyal and whole-hearted follower of the Master she had chosen as her pattern in the days of her youth, giving to all good causes to the extent of her means.

Her greatest delight was to be where topics from the Bible were talked over, and at church and Bible class she was a faithful attendant, being not only a hearer but a doer of her Lord's commands. She was a subscriber to "The Restitution" for many years until failing eyesight made it impossible for her to read even the largest type, and tried to pass the papers on to others that they might learn of the truths she loved so dearly.

She was a great sufferer for more than a year, but always patient, hoping she would soon be stronger and less of a burden to her relatives and friends. Her mind was perfectly clear almost to the last day, and her loving messages to friends told of a faith burning brightly, and a mind in perfect submission to her Father's will. But with eyesight gone, and almost deprived of her power of speech, we can feel thankful she is now at rest.

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep,
A calm and undisturbed repose
Unbroken by the last of foes.

And so we say farewell to this dear sister: may her night be a very short one and she soon hear the voice of the Lord of life and glory, for we feel assured she will be among that blessed number who shall see the King in his beauty and have a part in the first resurrection.

Marriage

"Marriage is Honorable in All"

AT THE residence of the writer, Mr. Robert Anderson, and Miss Marie Adams, both of Gifford, Iowa, were united in marriage, December 29th, 1920. Brother Anderson is the operator at the above place, for the M. and St. L. and N. W. Railroad; and Miss Marie Adams who so far as we know is no relation to thew riter, is a graduate of the senior schools. This young couple are well and favorably known in their part of the country, having the confidence and respect of all who know them. They were both baptized by the yriter nearly three years ago; and start life in the most approved manner. We pray their present devotion to truth and to one another may continue till the Lord comes.

Help the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

Your life may be full of dros and rubbish which must all be removed before God can be fully glorified. It may mean many failures and humiliations, but fear not, cling to the promises of God and he will surely bring you through, "more than conquerors."

GOLDEN TEXT: John 8:31, 32.

TELL THE TRUTH

Traveller through time's treacherous thicket,
Tell the truth.
'Tis thy transport, 'tis thy ticket;
Tell the truth.
Tell, though telling; tell, though tilling;
Though thou'rt troubled, trembling, trilling,
Tell the truth, triumphant thrilling,
Tell the truth.

Thought that's twisted, twists the thinker;
Tell the truth.
Truth that's tainted, taints the thinker;
Tell the truth.
Toil's true task's truth's through tending,
Time's true trail, to trace truth's trending,
Thought's true throne, 'tis truth's transcending;
Tell the truth.

To thyself, thou'rt truth's translator;
Tell the truth.
Though the thousands term thee traitor,
Tell the truth,
'Tis triumphant truth they're trying,
'Tis the tempter's toils thou'rt tying,
'Tis through time thou'rt testifying;
Tell the truth.

TRUTH

DAVID, IN Psalm 116, wrote: "I said in my haste, all men are liars." A Scotchman, commenting on the above, remarked: "David, had you associated with the same men as I have you could have said it at your leisure; and I imagine our experience has been pretty much the same as the old Scotchman's. To find a person who religiously tells the truth is rare. We, in repeating any thing nearly always make it a little larger, or a trifle smaller, or give it a different color. In some way we change it so as to add interest. It has been said (and to my mind in truth): that a person who always spoke the exact truth, regarding men and things, would be so unpopular he could not live among men; his neighbors would run him out. Still, in the face of all this, no boy, no girl, no matter what the circumstances, ever has an excuse to lie. Lies are an invention of the evil one, and liars are the children of the devil. You remember what our Savior said regarding this class of people. John records it thus: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar and the father of it." These are extremely harsh words; still, well deserved; and coming from the source they do, we can not treat them lightly.

John, in his Revelation classes liars among those who shall not have a part in the radiant glory of our coming Lord, but rather he says they "shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." Not a bright outlook for those who will not speak the truth, is it?

What is truth? The truth is telling anything exactly as it is; no changing, no coloring in any way. You do not always have to speak, but if you do speak, speak the truth. Some times it is advisable not to say anything, and always so when the exact truth cannot be repeated. The poem at the top of the page says "Thought that's twisted, twists the thinker." Did you ever read anything more to the point. Is it not true that when you have spoken an untruth, your whole being is "twisted," warped, crooked? Don't you feel mean with yourself?

To us who claim to be "children of God," "heirs of the kingdom," "the truth" has another significance. When Jesus was before Pilate he used these memorable words in answer to Pilate's question: "Art thou a king?" "Thou sayest that I am a king, to this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice. Pilate said unto him, What is truth?" We have no record that this question was at any time answered, although in my own mind I feel that Jesus would not leave Pilate unenlightened regarding such an important matter. I do not believe that to be Jesus' way.

In the first chapter of John we read: "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," and regarding himself, Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," and in another place he said: "My word is truth." By this we see that "the truth" is the things that pertain to Jesus, and that Jesus as a person is the essence of truth, He is "truth" in the abstract.

Among natural men, all about us we find those who lie, who deceive; and the same can be said in a spiritual sense, all about us we find error, we find those who "have a zest but not according to knowledge." God is just as anxious to have us right in the one case as in the other. In speaking he wants us to state the truth; in our faith he wants us to believe the truth; the truth as it is in Christ Jesus; the truth as it is revealed in his most holy word. Will it make us stand alone? will it remove us from our friends? The question is: is it the truth? If it is, then acept it, follow it, live it. God will be satified with nothing short of a full surrender to him; nothing less than a full acceptance of his word. Do we wish to be sons and daughters of God? Solomon said, "Buy the truth and sell it not", and Jesus said, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." And Peter in answer to a question from Jesus said, "Lord, to whom can we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." Therefore "Believe God and live."

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"—Acts 8:12

VOLUME 73 CLEVELAND, OHIO, MARCH [illegible], 1921 NUMBER 9

Day of the Beautiful, Arise, Awake!

[illegible] a troubled dream, and then awake
To the soft shining of a summer sky;
To [illegible] alone, [illegible], forsaken,
[illegible] to wake and smile, and love, and joy!

To look at evening on the [illegible]
The [illegible]
And [illegible]
Soothed [illegible] the billows [illegible] sleep!

[illegible] the earth her story,
[illegible] shall it be ever told;
[illegible] the glory,

The Restoration of Israel and Zionism

WHILE I have quoted a large number of Scripture texts promising the future return of Israel to the covenant land of their fathers yet it is but a fragment of the mass of texts which still remain unquoted. The "half has not been told." This subject must surely be an important one or so much space in God's book would not be devoted to it. I believe there are more positive declarations that Israel will be restored than there are on any one subject in the Bible. There are not nearly as many on baptism, or the second coming of Christ, or the resurrection of the dead, or the destruction of the wicked, as there are on this. Yet strange as it may seem, our Adventist friends believe all the others, but refuse to believe this. Every prophet predicted it; Christ taught it; and Paul emphasised it: then why not believe it? We are afraid not to believe the Lord; we dare not disbelieve him. He says he will do these things, and further says that "God is not a man that he should lie: neither the son of man that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it, or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" (Num. 23:19).

Jeremiah records God's promises of mercy towards Israel: "Fear thou not, O Jacob, my servant, saith the Lord: for I am with thee: for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure; yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished" (Jer. 46:28). The fulfilment of this prophecy is witnessed to the present day. Where now is Babylon or Thebes; where can the Chaldeans or the ancient Egyptians be traced? To the final accomplishment we are still to look forward. The threatened penalties for disobedience have been and are being fulfilled to the letter.

I have heard it stated that the Jews are not an absolutely pure race. There has of course been some intermixture of foreign blood in the 3000 years which constitutes their historic period. But owing to persecution and prejudice, the intermarriage with non-Jews which occurred have resulted merely in taking away many from the Jewish community. Inter marriage has brought few additions. Therefore, the percentage of foreign blood in the Jews of today is very low. Probably no important European race is as pure. But common race is only one of the elements which determine nationality. Conscious community of sentiments, common experiences, common qualities are equally, perhaps more, important. Religion, traditions and customs bound them together, though scattered throughout the world. The similarity of experiences tended to produce similarity of qualities and community of sentiments. Common sufferings so intensified the feeling of brotherhood as to overcome largely all the influences making for diversification The segregation of the Jews was so general, so complete, and so long continued as to intensify their peculiarities and make them almost ineradicable. The nation is scattered, yet wonderfully preserved. The identity of the race is not lost. The Jewish people are indeed a standing miracle. Nothing but the especial interference of divine power could have kept them in a distinct and separate state, under every untoward disadvantage as to government and religion. Thus it is a most remarkable miracle that a full end has not been made of them. Truly indeed, has he been called "the imperishable Jew."

The Jewish religion is founded entirely on the Old Testament: it denies the divinity of Jesus Christ; but teaches its followers to believe in the coming of the Messiah, who will collect the scattered Jewish people and found a great empire. They observe the same ceremonies which the ancient Hebrews practiced With the ancient Jews all the priests were of the tribe of Levi. After the dispersion of the Jews, during the reign of Adrain, the principal doctors of religion assembled at Tiberias, where they formed a grand council of Sanhedrin, and founded a school which became the nursery of their rabbis. These rabbis composed, under the title of the Talmud a work designed to contain the oral law and traditions of the Jews. This work, with the greatest portion of the Jews, became the basis of their faith; some, however, refused to acept it. Hence arose the division of the Jews into the rival sects—the Talmudists or Rabbinists, who follow the Talmud; and the Caraites, who follow only the strict letter of the Old Testament:

Adventists surely do not believe that God can and does "rule in the kingdoms of men, and set over them who he wills." Ezra teaches us how to read all historical events. The two tribes of Judah and Benjamin were captives in Babylon. But the year 536 B. C. came, and Cyrus the Persian conquered Babylon. Ezra lived long after this event. He was a scribe born in Babylon, and became the historian of the period. Cyrus, king of Persia, is the first ancient conqueror who is represented as the type of a just and gentle prince. It was one of his political ideas to restore to their homes all captive peoples. On a small clay cylinder in the British Museum he was reperesented as saying: "I assembled all those nations and I caused them to go back to their countries." God was overruling in his actions. The Jews had been in captivity seventy years when "the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus, king of Persia" (Ezra 1 1). The Jews then were free to go home. The seventy years of their captivity were over.

Has God ceased to control the hearts of kings in these modern times? Study all political and national events in this light. God is working out his purposes. Can we not hear his voice in all that is happening? I doubt not that many of God's saints had been praying about the return from captivity. The answer came in the person of Cyrus. What was true of him and his policy is just as true of England today, as you will learn further along in this article. Hold fast by the conviction that God is working and manifesting himself to those who have eyes to see. An unseen hand presides over all the complications of political affairs. "He remaineth a king forever" (Psa. 29: 10).

Up to this point we have considered this subject entirely from the Bible standpoint. Now, is there anything outside of the Bible that supports and strengthens our belief that Israel's hope is to be realized as the prophets predict, and that current events are hastening the setting up of a Jewish state in the Jewish homeland, the land of Palestine? Is prophecy being fulfilled in the Zionist movement?

I believe many of the seed of Abraham will be restored before this age closes. In fact it is said there are more there now than returned from Babylon. I believe the Lord God is in this Zionist movement, and is working through different channels and instrumentalities, to carry out his great purposes and plans.

God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform,
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

Deep in the unfathomable mines
Of never-failing skill,
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will.

Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain.

Truth Versus Error

IN THE Restitution of February 1, 1921, there is an article by Brother R. H. Judd that every reader should study carefully. The article is entitled "A Dissertation on the Trinity." The whole article proves beyond question that the doctrine is squarely unscriptural.

The writer says: "I have given the matter a good deal of study, and the more study I give it, the more I am impressed with its importance, and the responsibility that lies upon me to testify to the truth."

These are my sentiments exactly; but being nearly 83 years of age, I feel my inability to do justice to the subject. But I rejoice to see the subject taken by a ready writer like Brother Judd. I will add a little to what Brother Judd has said, showing the evil nature of the doctrine of the Trinity.

The direct testimony against the doctrine has been superabundantly given in the article referred to, so I will follow another class of testimony. In Paul's salutation in his epistles, he omits the third person of the fabled trinity.

Rom. 1:7 reads: "Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ."

1 Cor. 1:2 "Grace be to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

2 Cor. 1:2 "Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

This is the substance of Paul's salutation in all of his epistles to the churches. And we logically infer from this fact, that he knew nothing of the third person of the Trinity. And if the doctrine was true, how shall we account for Paul's ignorance?

Again in Rev. 1:1 we read: "The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass."

The source of this revelation is God, who knows the end from the beginning, and with whom the past, the present, and the future are one eternal now.

Here the Father makes a revelation to the Son, therefore there were things to occur in the future that the Son did not know.

Again Jesus says: "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father" (Mark 13:32). This testimony by the highest authority gives emphasis to the unity of the Deity. Brother Judd says: "Reader, are we not in danger of making God a liar if we persist in teaching the Trinity in the face of such unequivocal statements?"

I say yes to this question, and furthermore, we are in danger of being idolaters.

Again he says: "Scores of passages in God's word made the assertion that God is one . . . . Is there any passage anywhere that affirms there are three gods who are one God, who in reality is three?" Yes, I answer, there is one (1 John 5:7). "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." But fortunately for us, the work of the pious interpolator is left out in the Revised Version.

The revisers split the sixth verse into two, leaving out the seventh, and still having the same number of verses.

In Eph. 3:9 "And to make all men see what is the followship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ." The last clause, "by Jesus Christ," is left out in the Revised Version.

Again in 1 Tim. 3:16: "And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen by angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." In the Revised Version we have "he," not God. What a difference one word makes! These interpolations are all in favor of the Trinity. When we consider the fact that all the revisers were Trinitarians, these changes speak volumes against these men who established the doctrine of the Trinity, and in favor of the unity of the Deity.

Any translator is liable to favor his own views in his work, and at the same time think he is doing service to the truth: but when they make changes that are against their own faith, they show fidelity to the truth. The fourth century built the creeds, and the great Athenasius who was born at Alexandria A. D. 296 says: "That whenever he forced his understanding to meditate on the divinity of the Logos, his toilsome and unavailing efforts recoiled on themselves; that the more he thought the less he comprehended; and the more he wrote, the less capable was he of expressing his thoughts" (Gibbon). Surely he must have been one of the builders of mystery Babylon the great (Rev. 17:5).

Items of Interest

THE BIBLE SEARCHERS have lost a valuable member on this curcuit in Sister Ruth Spencer who, on account of being much away from home, finds it impossible to remain on the letter route. A new member has been added, Sister Evelyn VanVactor, of Argos, Ind.

Brother Melville Lyon speaking of the good work done by the Bereans, writes, "The chief obstacle to unity in the church, or one of the chief, is sectional differences, due to wide separation and misunderstanding as to each other's motives. The Berean organization, in bringing these people together, is reconciling them in common interest, which, we hope, may eventually result in a greater co-operation among our church factions. Let us all pray for success of their efforts, and support the Bereans in every possible way."

"He learns most who remembers most of his learning." Benjamin Franklin listed in his autobiography, thirteen virtues, which are well worth our consideration. They are as follows: "Temperance, silence, order, resolution, frugality, industry, sincerity, justice, moderation, cleanliness, tranquility, chastity, humility."

Among the different subjects taken up for consideration by the "Bible Searchers" is the battle of Armageddon. Doubts arose as to who would represent the "King of the South" and Brother Lawrence Gibbs wrote the following in defence of his argument: "In my previous letter I believe I stated that the king of the north or Russia and her allies would come down to the south and take great spoils, and that the king of the south, or England and her allies, would do battle with them. Nearly all seemed agreed that Russia is the king of the north, but the statement that England is the king of the south has been challenged, the objection being that England is as far north as Russia and is known by a different name. As references I quoted the 38th and 39th chapter of Ezekiel and the 11th and 12th chapters of Daniel. We find that the title of king of the south does not remain constant, that is, it is not always the same nation which has been vested with this title. In Daniel 11:3, we read about a great king having great dominions. History has shown that this refers to Alexander the Macedonian king. In the fifth verse we read of the king of the south, who upon study of history turns out to be Ptolemy Soter, the first Macedonian king of Egypt. And again in 1838, not long after the Russian War, we find Mehemet Ali established as king of the south. He conquered Syria, attacked the armies of the Sultan, and would have taken Constantinople but for the intervention of the great powers of England, Russia, Prussia and Austria. They ordered him to surrender Syria and to restore the Turkish fleet, which had revolted from the Sultan. This he refused to do and so the allied powers took Syria from him by force and in 1840 threatened to bombard him in Alexandria if he did not surrender the fleet. He finally surrendered. The sun never sets on the possessions of Britain, and by virtue of her power, she is indeed a very king of the south and a fit foe for the king of the north. Can you not visualize Russia, with her hordes, hungry for an outlet to the sea, and greedy for more territory, rushing down towards Turkey, taking Constantinople and passing on toward Syria and Jerusalem and Egypt, 'and the land of Egypt shall not escape' (Dan. 11: 40). And can you not see England, fearful over Egypt and her other possessions urged on by necessity and not by desire, rushing to defend them? The king of the north is 'troubled by tidings' as Dan. 11:44 expresses it, or as Ezek. 38:31 says, 'The merchants of Tarshish with all the young lions thereof shall say 'art thou come to take a spoil?' Most assuredly England has another name. England is Tarshish and it seems reasonable to believe that the 'young lions' referred to here are America, Australia, and other offsprings. Then we have in Daniel 12:1, 'And a that time shall Michael stand up. So Christ comes when the king of the north and the king of the south are battling one with the other. He shall come as a thief in the night and the dead shall be raised first. And then, just as now, when the establishment of a new kingdom means war and bloodshed, so shall it be when Christ shall set up his kingdom. We are told in Daniel 12:1 that there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation. There has been terrible times in the past; there are terrible times now. In the worst famine that China, the land of famines, has had for forty years, there are today 35,000,000 people dying of starvation. They are eating up the seeds for next year's crop, and then there will be another famine. Surely this is a time of tribulation for China yet we are told that there shall be times far worse than this, and as the verse implies, for the whole world. The wrath of God is terrible. He has not only wars at his command: he has famines, pestilences, earthquakes, etc., as his weapons."

As there has been considerable comment on this most interesting subject, we hope to be able to give the views of some others a little later.

BESSIE K. WALKER.

Wit without wisdom is like sauce without meat.

What Think ye of Christ?

WE THINK the Scriptures teach very plainly whose Son he is. We find many who invent new doctrines not recorded in God's word, and get many to follow their pernicious ways: by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of (2 Pet. 2:2). One of the most "damnable heresies" is denying that Christ was born the Son of God (2 Pet. 2:1; 1 John 5:9; 5:1, 18). We are commanded to cry aloud spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions (Isa. 58:1). As this command is given by one of God's greatest prophets, it is the duty of every believer in the gospel that Paul preached, to cry aloud, against every heresy that is foisted upon the people of this age. God, who at sundry times spake by prophets, also sent his angels to announce great events (Heb. 1:1). Why was not Christ called the son of Joseph in the same sense that Isaac was called the son of Abraham? Because Christ was not the son of Joseph; and Isaac was the son of Abraham; the angel's visit should be very significant. An angel appeared unto Abraham and announced that his wife should have a son at the appointed time; and Sarah being past age brought forth Isaac as promised, and this son was to come forth out of Abraham's bowels (Gen. 15:1; 17:17, 19, 21; 18:2, 11, 13, 14). Again an angel appeared unto Zacharias and said: "Fear not, thy wife shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John" (Luke 1:7-13). There is no Scripture stating that an angel appeared unto Joseph to announce the birth of Christ. But an angel appeared unto Mary: and said she had found favor with God, and would conceive and bring forth a son and call his name Jesus. Instead of saying this son should come forth out of the bowels of Joseph as in the case of Abraham, the angel said the Holy Spirit shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: and that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God (Luke 1:30, 35). Now when Joseph found his wife was with child, he was minded to put away privily, but the angel appeared unto him in a dream telling him not to do so and said she had conceived of the Holy Spirit (Matt. 1:19, 20).

Admitting that Isaac was begotten of Abraham by the will of God, he was the real son of Abraham (Gen. 22:3, 12). And in the resurrection will still be the real son of Abraham, so was David the son of Jesse, and Solomon the son of David, and in the resurrection will each be the son of his father. About 50 passages of Scripture declare Christ to be the Son of God, and only one refers to him as the son of Joseph (John 1:45). Christ with his own voice told Philip that he (Philip) did not know him (Christ) (John 14:9).

Now if it were possible that Christ was the son of Joseph it would be scriptural to read the son of Joseph in the following Scripture: God sending the son of Joseph (Rom. 8:3). I believe that Jesus Christ is the son of Joseph (Acts 8:37). And he preached that Christ is the son of Joseph (Acts 9:20). We believe thou art the son of Joseph (John 6:69). For I proceeded forth and came from Joseph (John 8:42).

FEBRUARY

In this month (February) we celebrate the birthdays of two foremost Americans; I refer to George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. Washington is looked upon as the apostle of truth. You all remember the story of the cherry tree, when Washington, then a mere boy, said to his father, "Father, I cannot tell a lie." Regarding Lincoln, I wish to quote part of one of his speeches as follows: "I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true, I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I must stand with anybody that stand right; stand with him while he is right and part with him when he goes wrong." That would not be a bad policy for us to adopt. Suppose we try.

Help the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

Brother Drinkard came to Kennard Friday evening, to hold meetings over Sunday, but on account of a snowstorm not many were able to attend the Sunday services. The attendance Friday and Saturday was fine. He left Sunday evening for Iowa, having given one Bible lesson and preached three times.

Remarks

AFTER THREE months of unceasing labor, and travelling nearly three thousand miles, I arrived home the second day of December, and shortly received a letter from one of the board saying: "You better take a rest, we need you too much to have you wear yourself out." I appreciate this good brother's caution and care, but am glad to tell him, I returned out much the worse for wear, although I had talked thirty-one times during November, and twelve days of that was a debate, which is pretty hard work. I have found in my long experience, that just preaching during holidays, and a week or so following, there is little use to try to hold meetings. People have their minds all taken up with what shall I give this one and that one; and practicing for entertainments. Knowing this and the possibilities of bad winter weather, I try to put in every minute possible during the fall month and be ready for this slack time. This Christmas giving is a more serious matter than most of us think. When we remember the millions who we are told are on the verge of starvation in other lands, and thousands in want in our own country; and then think of thousands of dollars spent for toys, that are many times broken up in a few days, and are reposing in the junk pile. Think of the difference between God's gift and ours. If it were true that Christmas is the date of Jesus' birth, whom God gave for the sins of the world, what gift can I make commensurate with this? The nearest approach to it is a life of service.

Our gifts even to children should be studiously made. Tin horns and such like which are neither useful nor ornamental, but only for noise (which children are generally well supplied with, without any artificial help), only tends to make them more frivolous. We should begin very early in life to teach them more substantial things. You may say: Oh, they forget those things; and so they do as a rule. The things we should forget, we remember the longest. Look over the record and see how God teaches his children and take a cue from that, and teach in like manner. God knows how to give good gifts to his children, and we should know how to give in like manner to ours. Well whatever we have done is past, and now is the time to study what we should and will do next time. On the 26th we went to Blair after several efforts, and on Sunday afternoon a few gathered at Sister John's and we had a profitable lesson, and a splendid visit with those who came. Brother Harvey Krogh was there, full of the spirit, and posted up to date on current events, and with his earnestness it is a pleasure to talk with him. Sister Mead and daughter Josephine were there to help in the lesson.

We were so glad to find Sister Johns able to walk a little. You will remember some time ago her daughter (sister Free) wrote to The Restitution about her falling and breaking her hip, and it is a miracle to see her so well at her advenced age; who knows but it is the Lord's will that she tarry till he comes. Sister McChesney who is 88 fell down stairs, and for some time the doctor said it was only a matter of hours with her; but now she is about as well as ever, and has gone with her daughter to Denver, Colorado.

Each Sunday since I have been home, I have taught the Bible class, at Sunday school, and it has been a pleasure, for I am away so much I do not have the privilege of meeting with them very often. It is a pleasure to note that since this Sunday school was organized they have not failed to meet, except when storm prevented; and six have been baptized and advanced to the Bible class; and now the next have advanced to their place, and are in line for baptism. If each class goes on in that way it will be good work. This should be the aim of every teacher to keep before their class, that they will after a while be promoted to a higher class; and finally the Bible class f om which they will prepare to enter the kingdom. I am starting once more to fill mid-winter calls. In these times of utter intfiderence one can hardly figure on anything. Once upon a time we could count on a good attendance if nothing more; but now it is not safe to figure on that. Well we must do our part, and remember we are in the last days, when men's hearts are failing them, and their interest in eternal things is on the wane. Only 56000 were added to all the churches last year, a falling off of 715,940. There will no doubt be some improvement along this line, but nothing permanent. May the long looked for kingdom soon come.

Good Company: A Serial Article: By Bro. S. H. Thomas

The Yoke of Bondage

A REFERENCE to Paul's epistle to the Galatians will show that the brethren in Galatia, after receiving the Holy Spirit, and after starting out right in the race for eternal life, were in Paul's absence brought under the evil influence of false teachers, who perverted the gospel of Christ, and were led astray by them. And Paul writes them in no uncertain language concerning their sin, and the danger to them, unless they return to the purity of the gospel of faith in Jesus Christ. He says: I marvel that ye are soon removed from him that called you unto the grace of Christ, unto another gospel, which is not another, but there is some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto yau than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Gal. 1:6-8). "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth?" (Gal. 3:1). "I am afraid of you lest I have bestowed labor in vain. I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice, for I stand in doubt of you" (Gal. 4:11-20). It is evident from this earnest language that the noble Apostle deemed the offence of the Galatians a serious one, and it may be well for us of these latter days, to search out the nature of their error, and happily avoid stumbling over the same stone. In chapter 2 verse 16, Paul points out very definitely, that justification comes not by the law, but by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Thus indicating that the offence of the Galatians had something to do with the law. And in Gal. 3:2-5 he asks, "Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? . . . .He that ministered to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law or by the hearing of faith?" In other words, Did the observance of burnt offerings, feast days, Sabbath days, and other points of the law give you the power to heal the sick, and restore sight to the blind, or was it the faith of Christ?

In Gal. 4:9 Paul plainly states the charge against them: "But now after ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage?" Advocates of the new two-law theory, contend that this offence of the foolish Galatians had reference to the law of circumcision only. But Paul says in his complaint (verses 10, 11), "Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you lest I have bestowed labor upon you in vain."

In Gal. 3:10 we read: "For as many as are under the works of the law, are under the curse. For it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not, in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." Now what was written in the books of the law, the observance to which according to Paul, placed man under the curse? The ten commandments were written there, including of course the Sabbath day law, the laws of sacrifice, and of ceremonies written there. Numerous other laws calculated to hold in check and govern a rebellious, and stiff-necked people, were written there. In short all of the Sinaitic law, recorded in Exod. 20, 21, 22, 23 chapters was by the command of God written by Moses in a book, and this book was placed in the side of the ark for the government of Israel. This book has been variously called the law, the law of God, the law of Moses, the book of the law, the book of the law of God, given by the the mouth of Moses. This being so when Paul says, "the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith," he undoubtedly means the law, as written in the book of the law, not a part of it. When Paul said, "But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster," he manifestly meant us to understand that we are no longer under the law (schoolmaster), or any portion of it. These foolish Galatians, after having come out from under the law, and having after stood for a time under Paul's instructions in the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free, had deliberately turned to bondage, and were again observing days, month, times and years, as is written in the book of the law, they desired to again place upon their necks this old yoke of bondage, this emblem of servitude, which neither they nor their fathers could bear. God forbid that we in these latter days, should with the example of these foolish Galatians before us, commit the same sin. God forbid that Paul should say of us, "I am afraid of you lest I have bestowed labor in vain," or that we should make observance of even one of the "weak and beggarly elements of the law," a condition of salvation, and thus have it said of us, "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace."

[illegible] are of the household of faith; and especially those of you who have listened to the seductive arguments of the two-law theory and other plausable conclusions, reached by those who would pervert the gospel of Christ, let me earnestly beseech you to "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled with the yoke of bondage."

Sabbath Cessation

CONTRARY TO common thought the first occurrence of the word Sabbath is found in Exod. 16:23,35: "And he (Moses) said unto them, this is that which the Lord hath said, tomorrow is the rest of the holy sabbath. Bake that which ye will bake today, and seethe that ye will; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning. And the children of Israel did eat manna forty years, until they came to a land inhabited. They did eat manna until they came unto the borders of the land of Canaan." Gen. 2:2: "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made, and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made."

Now reader, do you think for a moment that God grew weary? If so, you are mistaken. Turn to Isa. 40:27, 28: "Why sayest thou, O Jacob, and speakest thou, O Israel: my way is hid from the Lord, and my judgment is passed over from my God? Hast thou not known, hast thou not heard that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? There is no searching of his understanding." Evidently the word means "ceased" in this passage. Are the days recorded in Gen. 1 24 hour days? If so, how were the first four days measured since there was no sun or moon? (Gen. 1:14, 15). "And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night, and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and for years. And let them be for lights in the firmament of heaven to give light upon the earth; and it was so."

Can the reader tell me how long the sabbath day is? Read 2 Pet. 3:8: "But beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Therefore it is safe to take one of these days as periods of time of longer or shorted duration in each of which God accomplished a set or definite purpose. Prophetically they doubtless point forward through to the seventh day which is the great millennial rest day. Yet we are told we must keep Saturday in each week as the holy sabbath unto the Lord. Study Gen. 29. Does the record show here that Jacob observed any sabbath day in his fourteen years labor for Rachael? (Gen. 29:18-27).

What knowledge of the sabbath had the Israelites or their fathers up to the time of their entrance into the wilderness (Nehemiah 9:13, 14)? Note verse 7 particularly. It is the God of Abraham who gave these commands: "Thou (God) camest down also upon Mount Sinai and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments and true laws, good statutes and commandments, and madest known unto them thy holy sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws by the hand of Moses thy servant."

Exod 16:16-26: "This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, Gather of it every man according to his eating, an omar for every man according to the number of your persons take ye every man for them which are in his tents. Six days ye shall gather it, but on the seventh day, which is the sabbath, in it there shall be none." Again, turn to Deut. 5:15: "Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day."

Do the above Scriptures bring Greeks under the law of Moses? No. Gal. 3:17-19: "And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul that it should make the promise of none effect. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgression till the seed should come, to whom the promise was made, and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator."

What is said of meats, drinks, holy days, new moons, and sabbath days? In Col. 2:14 16, 17 we find that Christ came and died to set us free, blotting out the hand writing of ordinances that was against us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moons, or of the sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ." Verse 20: "Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why as living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances?" Read on to end of this chapter.

What did Christ teach concerning the sabbath in Matt. 12:8-12? "For the Son of Man is Lord even of the sabbath day. How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the sabbath day." What did Christ teach concerning the elements of time and place in connection with true worship? John 14:19-26: "The woman saith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet. Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he." There is no scriptural warrant for the observance of Christmas, Thanksgiving, and like times for worship. What does Paul mean in Rom. 14:5, 6: "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike: let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day regardeth it unto the Lord, and he that regardeth not the day to the Lord, he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth thanks." See the difference between letter and spirit in Rom. 2:29: "But he is a Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter, whose praise it not of men but of God." Rom. 7:6: "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held, that we should serve in newness of spirit and not in the oldness of the letter."

In conclusion, let us turn to Gal. 3:12-15: "The law is not of faith, but the man that doeth them shall live in them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree, that the blessings of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ, that we might receive the promise of the spirit through faith. Brethren, I speak after the manner of men, though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed no man disannulleth or addeth thereto." John 7:38, 39: "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living waters. But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive, for the Holy Spirit was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified. 2 Tim. 1: 9-10: "Let us look to Jesus who hath saved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, but is now made manifest by the appearing of your Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolishedd death and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

GOLDEN TEXT: Isaiah 48:10

UNTO THE DESIRED HAVEN

What matters how the winds may blow
  Or blow they east or blow they west;
What reck I how the tides may flow,
  Since ebb or flow alike is best?
No summer calm, no winter gale
  Impedes or drives me from my way;
I steadfast toward the haven sail
  That lies perhaps not far away.

I mind the weary days of old,
  When motionless I seemed to be;
The nights when fierce the billows rolled,
  And changed my course, I know not why.
I feared the calm, I feared the gale,
  Foreboding danger and delay,
Forgetting I was thus to sail
  To reach what seemed so far away.

I measure not the loss and fret
  Which through these years of doubt I bore;
I keep the memory fresh, and yet
  Would hold God's patient mercy more.
What wrecks have passed me in the gale,
  What ships gone down on summer day;
While I with furled or spreading sail
  Stood for the haven far away.

What matter how the winds may blow,
  Since fair or foul alike is best?
God holds them in his hand I know,
  And I may leave to him the rest.
Assured that neither calm nor gale
  Can bring the danger or delay,
As I still toward the haven sail
  That lies, I know, not far away.

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

JESUS THE Christ is the heart of the Bible. He is the Shiloh in Genesis; the I AM in Exodus; the Star and Sceptre in Numbers; the Rock in Deuteronomy; the Captain of the Lord's host in Joshua; and the Redeemer in Job. He is David's Lord and Shepherd; in the Song of Songs he is the Beloved; in Isaiah he is the Wonderful Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, and the Prince of Peace. In Jeremiah he is the Lord's own righteousness; in Daniel he is the Messiah; in Zechariah he is the Branch; in Haggai he is the Desire of all Nations; in Malachi he is the Messenger of the Covenant and the Sun of Righteousness, and in the book of Revelation he is the Alpha and Omega, and also the Morning Star.

Who among his disciples, or among those who came to Jesus through the disciples were capable of inventing the sayings ascribed to Jesus, or of imagining his life and character as revealed in the gospels? Certainly not the fishermen of Galilee; as certainly not Paul, whose character and way of phrasing his thougths were of a totally different sort; still less the early Christian writers. About the life and sayings of Jesus there is a stamp of personal originality, combined with profundity of insight, which must place the prophet of Nazareth, even in the estimation of those who have no belief in his inspiration, in the very first rank of the men of sublime genius of whom mankind can boast.

O, thou Christ of God, thou most perfect of men, thou Son of God; what sayest thou of thyself? Hear him: "Before Abraham was I am." "I and my Father are one." He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." With lowly reverence I dare ask God the Father, "What think ye of Christ?" We are at Jordan, we are at the baptismal scene of our Lord, he is going up from the water, the heavens are opened and a voice is heard saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." We now are in the midst of the splendors of the glorious transfiguration of our Lord. Moses has disappeared, Elijah has disappeared: the disciples, lifting up their eyes, "saw no man save Jesus only." Then there came out of the overshadowing cloud the voice of God, saying: "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." In these wonderful and glorious words of the eternal God, the divine Father is heard giving his testimony to the Sonship of Jesus Christ.

Brethren and sisters, readers of this page in general, I ask you in his own glorious name: "What think ye of Christ?" I beseech you to come before him, learn of him, have full faith in him, follow close after him, and with Thomas fall at his feet and out of a penitent and faithful heart cry out this confession of faith and love, "My Lord and my God!"

AN EARLY CUSTOM

THE EARLY Christians, thoroughly believing in the resurrection of the dead, had a common practice of burying their dead with the face turned upward and slightly to the east. The idea was that the rising sun which typified "the Sun of Righteousness," was the emblem of the resurrection, and the dead were so placed that they could see the coming of the Lord at the last day.

A SHORT SERMON ON LOVE

WE ARE told that love is the greatest thing in the world, and so believing we will give you a few beautiful sentiments on the subject, the whole making a short sermon.

You have but a short time to live on earth; act in such a manner that you may spend your time in peace.

If you cannot bear with your brother, how will your brother bear with you?

Peace is the fruit of love; for in order to live in peace, we must bear with a great many things.

None is perfect, each has his failings; each leans upon the other, and love alone renders that weight light.

It is written of Jesus, that "having loved his own," which were in the world, "he loved them to the end."

For that reason love your brother and love him to the end.

Love is indefatiguable: it never grows weary. Love is inexhaustible; it lives and is born anew in the living and the more it pours itself out, the fuller the fountain.

Whosoever loves himself better than he loves his brother, is not worthy of Christ, who died for his brothers in faith. Have you given away every thing you possess? Go give up your life also, if needed.

The wicked man loves not, he covets; he hungers and thirsts for everything he sees; his eyes, like unto the eyes of a serpent, fascinate and allure, but only to devour.

Love rests at the bottom of every pure life like a drop of dew in the calyx of a flower. Oh if you knew what it was to love!

PENOGRAPHS

THERE IS no sense in always telegraphing to heaven for God to send us a cargo of blessings, unless we are at the wharf to unload the vessel when it comes.

To benefit others, we must be reasonably happy; there must be animation through useful activity, good cheer, kindness and health: health of mind and health of body.

To day is your day and mine, the only day we have, the day in which we play our part. What our part may signify in the great world we may not understand; but we are here to play it, and now is our time.

Peter said to Christ: "Lo, we have forsaken all and followed thee." So it always is; we make much of our sacrifices. What had the disciples left? A few old nets, perhaps broken, and some boats. What will they get in exchange? The kingdom of God.

The theory of the truth will not save men: the knowledge of God's will will not keep men from sin. There must be a "love of the truth." It is our affection for a thing that molds our lives like it. It is an overruling, controlling love of God as seen in his word; and that word as seen in the character of Christ. Such love keeps all of God's commandments and counts them not burdensome.

Acts 3:19-21. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be bloted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began."

"As a man thinketh, so is he." The person who thinks he is weak, and keeps saying so, will make himself and others believe it, but he who thinks he can do and proceeds to do it, will likely enhance his capital and surprise others with his efforts. And there is nothing like a poor weak fellow being harnessed up abreast with almighty power, with the heft of the load on the latter. Do not burden yourself with the Lord's burdens.

PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY

BE KIND and courteous to all, even to those who take no pains to be civil to you. Heed the advice of a father to his son: "Be polite to those who are not so to you, for remember, my son, you are courteous to others, not because they are Christians, but because you are Christian." This is not easy to do, but you may thus turn away the dislike and distrust of some person by your Christian spirit, and remember above all things, treat the members of your own household as courteously as you do the "stranger within thy gates." "Our own" seldom receive as good treatment as we give those who simply call for an evening's conversation.

Silently and unseen do many of nature's forces work. Out of sight in the dark ground the germ of life that is in the seed noiselessly pushes its way upward to the surface of an earth that is held in place by a power never yet seen by mortal eye. In the great work of bringing a lost world to Christ there are unseen places of labor and work that must be done without the blare of trumpets. Can the Master count on you?

FUTURISM ANSWERED

This booklet has just been printed by The Restitution Publishing Co. It is the only posthumous work by Brother John L. Wince. Futurism is rife in these last days, and is blinding the eyes of many to the soon coming of the Lord. This voice from the dead, from an able and venerated Brother now sleeping, should sober and help to prepare us for "the great day of the Lord." Price five cents per copy. Order from The Restitution Pub. Co.

Bible Lessons on First Principles

Lesson VII: The Father and Son — By Robt. G. Huggins

I. There is Only One God, the Father

THE "ONE God" of the Old Testament is revealed as "the Father" in the New Testament. The popular doctrine of the Trinity confuses the revealed relations of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and destroys monotheism to make room for polytheism—supplants Christianity to establish Paganism (Deut. 6:4; Mark 12:29-32; 1 Tim. 2:5; 1 Cor. 8:4-6; Eph. 4:6; John 17:3; Isa. 55:5).

II. Jesus Christ is the Son of God

Jesus Christ is the Son of God, having been begotten of Mary by the Holy Spirit without the intervention of man (Luke 1:35; Matt. 1:20; Isa. 9:6; Acts 2:22; 10:38; Matt. 19:17; Mark 15:34).

III. Jesus Christ is Mediator and Advocate

Notwithstanding the miraculous manner of his conception and his subsequent anointing with the Holy Spirit, Jesus was made of our nature. He died, was buried, rose again, and ascended to heaven where he is now an officiating mediator between the Father and sinners who come to God by him, and an advocate for his own house, the church of God (1 Tim. 2:5; Rom. 8:3; Heb. 2:14; Gal. 4:4; 2 Cor. 5:21; 1 Cor. 15.21, 45; Rom. 5:15, 19; Heb. 2:17; 3:1; 4:14, 15; 8:1; Luke 21:31; Acts 5:31; 15:11; John 17:9; 1 John 2:1).

IV. Posthumous Probation Unscriptural

Christ's mediation for the world and his advocacy for the church provide adequate means for the salvation of all in the world and in the church who make their calling and election sure. Probation for both, therefore, is limited to this life (Isa. 38:18-20, Psa. 88:10-12; Eccl. 9:5-10; 6:3-6; Hos. 13:14; 2 Cor. 6:1-3; Luke 4:19; Psa. 60:13; Isa. 55:3, 6; Heb. 3:6, 7, 13, 15). Posthumous probation* is exceedingly reprehensible, as it either represents the means of salvation which God has provided as insufficient, or repudiates Christ's mediation for the world altogether. The following indictments of the doctrine are sufficient to show its anti-scriptural nature:

(a) Posthumous probation belittles angelic ministration (Psa. 68:17; Dan. 7:10; Psa. 103:20; 34.7; Matt. 2:13, 19, 20; 4:11; 26:53; 18:10; Exod. 23:20-23; Heb. 1:14; Acts 8:26-39);

(b) It slurs the work of the Holy Spirit (John 14:6; 16:7-11; Rom. 8:26);

(c) It emasculates the word of God (Acts 13:44-48; John 17:19, 20; Acts 18:10, 11; Isa. 55:10, 11; Heb. 4:12; Jer. 23:28, 29; Num. 11:23);

(d) It denies the sufficiency of Christ's mediation (Luke 23:34; Acts 2:23, 37-41; John 1:46-49; Acts 5:31; Matt. 28:18; 1 Pet. 3:22; Heb. 2:18; 4:15, 16; 5:2; 7:25; Rom. 8:26-28, 32-39); and

(e) It charges God with incompetence (Gen. 21:17, 20; 1 Sam. 2 18, 26; 3:1, 7, 19; Isa. 45:1, 4; Jer. 1:5; Luke 1:15; Gal. 1:16; John 4.23; Acts 8; 10; Isa. 45:19; 59:1, 2, 3; 55:6, 7, 10, 11).

V. The Destruction of the Devil

The death of Christ was a necessary sacrifice for sin in order that the law of sin and death, introduced into the world by the disobedience of the first Adam, might be nullified through the obedience of the second Adam who obtained a full discharge of its claims by a temporary surrender to its power. Thus, immortality by resurrection was acquired in his own case, and through him will also be acquired by all believers in harmony with the law of obedience. In Christ sin is taken away, and righteousness is established. The devil, a word which is used interchangeably with "sin," has been abolished in the person of Christ; and its power will also be abolished so far as his people are concerned when he redeems, immortalizes, and makes them like himself (John 1:29; Heb. 9:26; John 3:16; Gal. 1:4; Titus 2:14; Acts 10:43; Rom. 3:25; Acts 4:12; Rom. 1:3, 4; 2 Cor. 13:4; 6:9; Eph. 1:20, 21; Heb. 2:14; Rom. 6:23; Heb. 9:26; 12:4; John 13:2; 6:70; Acts 5:3, 9; Jas. 1:14, 15; Eph. 2:2; 1 Tim. 5:14, 15; Matt. 16:23; Mark 8:33; Luke 4:8; 1 Thess. 2:18; Rev. 2:10, 12, 13; Psa. 68:21; Jer. 51:20).

*By "posthumous probation" in this lesson is meant probation in purgatory immediately after death, as taught by Roman Catholics, the "intermediate state" of renovation, as taught by some Protestants, and also the post-resurrectional opportunity to be saved as taught by Russellites.

Synthetic Remarks

I. THERE IS ONLY ONE GOD, THE FATHER

IN LESSON VI we concluded our study of "the things concerning the kingdom of God" (Acts 8:12). The latter part of this passage adds to these kingdom things "the name of Jesus Christ" Now this "name" comprehends "those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 28:31). Equally with the things of the kingdom, these things which relate to Christ and his name are integrant parts of the gospel. We are, therefore, confronted with the imperious duty of finding out what these things are. We begin our study of them by observing that one of "the things which concern our Lord Jesus Christ" is that his Father is God, and God alone. The doctrine of the Trinity which is so prevalent today is a contradiction of the word of God. The word "God" is used no less than one thousand three hundred and twenty-six times in the New Testament alone, and is always written in the singular number. By noting particularly the subjoined testimonies you will see how clearly, unmistakably, and unanimously the writers of Holy Writ teach the unity of God:

> "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord" (Deut. 6:4).
> "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we by him" (1 Cor. 8:6).
> "There is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all" (Eph. 4:6).
> "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5).
> ". . . . that they might know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3).
> "I am God and there is none else . . . . and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning" (Isa. 46:9, 10).
> "There is no God beside me" (Isa. 45:5).

The individual unity of the Deity thus stand upon a very broad scriptural foundation. The Trinitarian formula, "God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost," is a Pagan fiction and conceit—a doctrine which presents a contradiction in terms as well as in sense. "God the Father" could not say, "I am God, and there is none else," and tell the truth, if there were two other gods—the Son and the Holy Ghost. The Son, if he were "God the Son," could not say, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God," and make a truthful statement, if he and the Holy Spirit are gods, too—unless they are false gods, self-confessed! "God the Father" is a scriptural expression; but we never meet with this phraseology in the Old Testament. After Christ's birth the one God of the Old Testament is described in the New as "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 3:14). The reason for this change in diction is obvious: God could not be "the Father," nor could Christ be "the Son," until Jesus was born. This leads us to affirm that

The term "Son," which is so often applied to Christ in the Scriptures, implies derivation; and derivation implies subordination and inferiority (Matt. 16:16, 17). He is declared to be "the only begotten Son of God" (John 1:18; 3:16). The personal pre-existence of Christ and its inseparable concomitant doctrine, the Trinity, vanish into the Pagan illusions from whence they came, before the blazing light of these divine statements. He that is "begotten" cannot have existed from the same point of time as the one by whom he is begotten. A son cannot be the father of himself, neither can he be as old, nor equal to his father. Christ cannot be God himself unless he is his own Son and his own Father! "God the Son" is a misnomer and an impossibility; "the eternal Son" is eternal nonsense; for then we would have to conceive of a Son who was never begotten! Then again the term "Father," which is so frequently applied to God in the Sacred Writings, implies priority of existence, precedence, antecedence. As the mists vanish before the clear shining rays of the sun, so the Trinity is chased away like a vision of the night at the first approach of these scriptural terms and expressions. Christ is not "the second person" of an eternal Trinity of gods, neither is he the manifestation of a pre-existeent and "eternal Son"; but he is the manifestation of the pre-existent and eternal God (1 Tim. 3:16) who is from everlasting to everlasting (Psa. 90:2), who is "above all and through all" (Eph. 4:6), and "out of whom are all things" (Rom. 11:36). God is the only underived and self-sustaining being in the universe, "the fountain of life" which feeds all steamlets (Psa. 36:9; 1 Tim. 6:15, 16; Acts 17:18; 1 Cor. 8:6). Now the Son of God is "out" of the Father (Rom. 11:36) in a literal and important sense. He was begotten of the Father by the Spirit (Matt. 1:20), and was "therefore" his Son (Luke 1:3g); by the same Spirit he was later filled "without measure" (John 3:14). "The image of the Son" (Rom. 8:29) therefore became "the express image of his (Father's) person" (Heb. 1:3); the two being so similar that to see the one is the same as seeing the other (John 14:7-11). Still the Father is "above all," and is expressly declared to be "the head of Christ" (1 Cor. 11:3). The reader now must see in the repetitious phrases "the Father" and "The Son" an implication that God is one, and that the Son had his origin "out" of the Father, to whom he was subordinate in a sense which contravenes Trinitarian equality. "This day have I begotten thee" (Heb. 1:5) are words which point unmistakably to a commencement of days. John 5:26 affirms that the "life" of the Father, called "the life of God" in Eph. 4:18, was "given to the Son." His existence and life were both derived from God. All the works, doctrine and even the words of Christ, were from God, as the Savior himself frankly acknowledged. Let the following Scriptures suffice to show the derived, subordinate, and dependent relation of Christ to God:

> "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles, and wonders, and signs, which God did by him . . . ." (Acts 2:22; 10:38; Luke 1:18).
> "I can of mine own self do nothing . . . ." (John 5:30).
> "My Father is greater than I" (John 14:28).
> "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me" (John 7:16).
> "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me; he doeth the works" (John 14:10).
> "I can do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things" (John 8:28).

The Test Must Come

BY S. ROXANA WINCE

"If when ye do well and suffer for it ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow in his steps, who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who when he was reviled, reviled not again: when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously" (1 Pet. 2:20-24)

To every one
The test must come,
The furnace and the fiery heat,
That make us for the kingdom meet,
The howling mob go jeering by,
It matters not of when or why.

To every one
The test must come,
Reproach be borne for Christ's dear name,
Be borne, the calumny and shame,
For pathway to the golden street
Must e'er be climbed by bleeding feet.

To every one
The test must come,
Of angry words that rasp and fret,
That we, unanswered, must forget;
The cruel blame that grieves us much,
The bribes that we must never touch,

To every one
The test must come,
Of wealth, of glory, or of power,
Or pleasure, tasting but an hour,
Satan will tempt with all of these
God's saints to bow to him their knees.

To every one
The test must come,
All things to bear for Jesus' sake,
To suffer wrong, nor vengeance take,
To answer not reviling word,
Though anger be in bosom stirred.

To every one
The test will come,
To patient foe like Christ our Lord
Though suffering ill for doing good,
The bearing of the daily cross,
The persecution, hate and loss.

To every one
The test will come,
To love, to give, to forward go,
In every place the seed to sow;
Meekly instructing even those
Who do themselves and us oppose.

To every one
The test will come,
Of keeping garments white and clean,
And faith that e'er on God will lean,
Unvexed by overcharging toil,
With lamps well trimmed and filled with oil

To every one
The test will come,
Of making God our sure defence,
So holding fast our confidence,
That we may ne'er with evil heart
In unbelief from God depart.

To every one
The test must come,
Of still rejoicing in the hope,
As we with Satan's minions cope,
That we to men may pattern give,
Of what to be, and how to live.
To every one

The test must come,
O are we strong enough for this!
To battle on, though we may miss
All that the worldling counteth bless?
We are! we are! with God our shield,
We never will give up the field.

Discussion on Universalism

Debate on the Perfections and Attributes of Deity

Between Alpha and Omega

The following is a fair representation of the facts and arguments adduced in the discussion, which were taken down and reported, exactly as they were delivered, by the disputants.

Gentlemen, Moderators, Fellow-citizens:

A QUESTION of deep and thrilling interest is about to ellicit the attention of this large and intelligent audience:"Can a Universal Salvation of Adam's race be proved from the attributes of God?" This is the question; and, as you perceive, your present speaker takes the affirmative. I profess to be an advocate for the final holiness and happiness of all mankind, irrespective of any condition to be performed in this life. I feel strong, and perfectly fortified in the question now pending, knowing the tenableness of the ground I occupy. I take the attributes and perfections of Deity as my exclusive source of positive evidence in this controversy; not, however, giving up the direct teaching of the Scriptures, in favor of universal salvation; yet I am bound to confess, that we Universalist preachers, by making everything figurative, which appears to militate against us, have sumewhat crippled and nullified our arguments from that source. For it is evident that our opponents, by adopting the same logic, can make all our proofs figurative, as we do theirs; and thus, from our own example, they may successfully defy us to prove our doctrine had we the most positive testimony in the world.

But leaving that ground in the possession of my opponent, if he desire it, I expect to labor under no such embarrassments in the present question. I start upon the admitted position, that God is unchangeable, the same yesterday, today and forever, without any variableness, or shadow of turning. This is the chief corner stone of the edifice I am about to erect; and as this is not only an axiomatic position, but one which my opponent will not dare to call in question; I feel as though I had dug deep and laid my foundation upon a rock. I have no faith in this thing of "limitarianism"; for I believe that God is infinite in power, wisdom and goodness. The Scriptures are plain and positive upon this point, and as my friend will no doubt admit it, there is no necessity for quoting much Scripture. One of the principle sins of the children of Israel in the wilderness, was, that they "limited the Holy One of Israel" (Psa. 78:41). Our opponents are daily guilty of committing the same sin; but we are no limitarians. We believe with the Savior that "with God all things are possible" (Matt. 19:26). Hence it is possible for God to save all men; and we shall endeavor to prove from several consideration, before we close the present investigation, that such will be the glorious result. Before taking my seat (as I wish at present merely to introduce the discussion), I will present one direct, and I think unanswerable argument, in favor of my position. God must have known before he created man what would be his destiny: and if he created him, knowing at the same time that he would be eternally lost, he must have willed his destruction, and as God's will is that all should be saved, he must have created none therefore, only such as he knew would be saved; and if he had forseen that any one of his intelligent creatures would be finally lost, his omnipotence could, and his benevolence therefore would, have withheld his existence! Here is my first positive argument, and I cannot see how it can be possibly met! In the mean time, I shall hear what can be said in reply.

OMEGA'S FIRST REPLY

Gentlemen, Moderators, and Respected Audience:

I FEEL truly the importance of the day's labor before us; and concur heartily with my friend, that this is a question of momentous importance; that is, providing I am on the right side of the question; but if my friend should succeed in proving his side to the true ground, it is of but little consequence whether the question be debated or not; for it can be the means of saving no one, as all are as certain of salvation without this discussion, as they can be with it. But if it be demonstrated, that I occupy the correct ground, it may be the means of some persons fleeing for refuge, and laying hold of the hope set before them, who would otherwise have rested supinely in the false security of a delusive error; thinking that all is safe and certain, with respect to the future; and as regards the present short life, it is but little difference. Hence the importance of this day's occasion is wholly suspended upon the fact of my side of the question being correct.

I agree with my opponent with regard to the un-changeableness of God; but he will find this, I opine, a poor prop for Universalism, and may possibly be glad to take it back, before this discussion comes to a close. He is quite liberal in dealing out the name "limitarian," and charging us very charitably with the sin of limiting the Almighty; and yet in almost the same breath, he commences telling what God must do, and what he must not do! We shall see, doubtless, before long, who have best claims to the title "limitarian," they or us. My friend has been so long in the habit of garbling the word of God, that he cannot debate the present question, I perceive, without garbling his attributes. He takes power, wisdom, and goodness; and says nothing about justice and vengeance. These five attributes should not be separated, but taken together, as they are all necessary to the harmonius operations of the moral government of God. They each have a list of names in the Scriptures signifying nearly the same thing; and are frequently used by inspired writers interchangeably. When classified they stand thus:

1. POWER: To this belong "omnipotence," "might,' "strength," and "ability."
2. WISDOM:—"knowledge," "understanding," "perception," and "discernment."
3. GOODNESS:—"loving-kindness," "mercy," "longsuffering," compassion," "pity," and "benevolence."
4. JUSTICE:—"righteosuness," "equity," "judgmen," "truth," and "faithfulness."
5. VENGEANCE:—"wrath," "indignation,' "hatred," anger," "severity," "jealousy," and "fury."

This fifth list, is an entire stranger to my opponent's creed. I doubt exceedingly whether he has any faith in it, notwithstanding vengeance is more exclusively God's attribute than either of the other four; for whilst power, wisdom, goodness, and justice, are attributes of God, they are, at the same time, attributes of man; and essentially necessary for him to possess in order to comply with the demands of God's law. The relation which he sustains towards God, and his fellow men, requires that he should possess to some extent the attributes of power, wisdom, goodness, and justice; but "vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord" (Rom. 12:19). The great apostle to the Gentiles has also in the same connection forbidden us to exercise this attribute in any case whatever; because God is the rightful and exclusive owner of it. I am perfectly willing that my friend should proceed with his arguments; and I have no doubt, but that I can prove a universal damnation, by the same logic he makes use of to prove the position he now assumes.

Having thus premised, I shall now take notice of the argument adduced, at the close of my friend's address. The gist of the argument is this: that God must have known before he made man, what would be his destiny; and hence, if he be finally lost, God wills his destruction; or, in other words, God must will or decree whatever he foreknows will take place! This being the real ground of my opponent, let us look at a few logical conclusions. Thus: all manner of theft, debauchery, witchcraft, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies; all kinds of frolicking, carousing, gambling, drunkenness, profanity, and even blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, are in exact accordance with the will of God; for, according to the premises assumed by my opponent, God must have known that all these abominations would be practiced, and hence he must have willed that such conduct should exist; if not, why did he create those individuals, knowing that they would be guilty of such abominations? Yes, my audience, the only legitimate conclusion deducible from these premises, is: that all the covetous, proud, boasters, implacable and unmerciful; that all blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, ungodly, profane; truce breakers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, manstealers, liars, drunkards, sorcerers, and those that are abominable, disobedient, and unto evey good work reprobate; the conclusion, I say, is unavoidable, that all such abhorrable and detestable characters are daily engaged in doing the good, acceptable, and perfect will of God: for, according to Alpha's argument, God must have known what would be their characters, and if he had not designed, and willed such to be their conduct his omnipotence could, and his benevolence therefore would, have prevented their existence! Christ says on one occasion: "Whosoever will do the will of my Father in heaven, the same is my mother, and sister and brother." The argument of my friend being correct, what a lovely and excellent brotherhood Christ must have possessed!

I shall again hear my opponent either mend up his old argument, or present a new one. But before I take my seat, I wish to inform the audience that it is not my business, neither do I intend to take any definite position upon this mysterious and unfathomable subject. I simply wish to show my friend, that no important theory can be built, and no certain couclusion can be drawn from such an incomprehensible source as the attributes of God. It is unsafe and presuumptious to risk so much upon such hypothetical assumptions.

Extremists

THE MOST traublesome and dangerous people in every walk of life are those who go to extremes in thought, word, or action. The government of the United States, and in fact every government on earth, spends vast sums of money keeping extremists or radicals in check. The extremist is found in every department of human activity; political, social and religious.

When in the minority the extremist is not so dangerous and, in fact, may be a healthy influence in society; but when in the majority and in control of affairs, wreck and ruin are almost sure to follow. The safety of a nation, especially a self-governing nation, depends to a large degree upon the normalcy of its citizens and representation in the government. The same is true in the realm of religion and particularly in "the truth." The Bible always points us to the middle ground. Thus, we have wine bibbers and gluttons, on the one hand; and the prohibitionists on the other: the course dictated by the truth is found between these two extremes in the admonition of God's word to be temperate in all things. In nearly all Bible doctrines we find the truth standing in the middle ground between two extremes.

Thus concerning God we have the doctrine of the Trinity, on the one hand, and the Unitarian idea on the other. The one makes Christ very God, co-equal with the Father; while the other makes him a mere man without divine origin. The truth stands in the middle ground, teaching that there is one God and one Lord Jesus Christ who is Son of God by begettal of the Holy Spirit and Son of Man by birth of the Virgin Mary. And so with regard to the nature of man: we have the immortal soul idea on one hand, and the annihilationist doctrine on the other. The one teaches that man can never die; the other that he dies forever, and that death ends all. The truth again stands between teaching that man is mortal and can die forever, but also that he can live forever by rendering obedience to God and accepting the conditions laid down by the Creator.

And so we might go through the whole category of Bible doctrines and find each doctrine equidistant from two or more humanly conceived extremes. How many churches have been wrecked by extremists who, not content to regale their own minds with their crotchets, have striven to impose their views upon the others. How many peaceful and happy communities have been torn and rent into factions by men, the pendulum of whose thoughts have swung clear off the equilibrum of truth.

One of the favorite topics for extremists is that of our relation to the world. Here again we have the two extremes: first, we have the class of individuals who are satisfied with nothing short of monastic asceticism. They would break off as far as possible all contact with humanity and carry the truth off into a quiet little corner where they can have it all to themselves, and there they wait in passive goodness, with folded hands, for the coming of the Lord. These people do not seem to realize that the glorious light of the truth, instead of being set upon a hill where all can see it; as far as they are concerned is hidden under a bushel of seclusion and exclusiveness. We once heard a brother exhorting on Sunday morning preface his remarks with these words: "Dear brethen and sisters, how good it is to be here this morning, away from the Gentiles with whom, during the week, we are compelled to associate." My God! what an attitude towards perishing men and women! And yet how common it is for us to despise rather than pity blinded and dying humanity. This is the result of an extreme and erroneous view of the meaning of separateness from the world.

Then we have the other extreme represented by those who go headlong into the world and its affairs and give the truth only secondary consideration. Little need be said about this; it is a sad spectacle; it has but one end—spiritual destruction. What the world needs and what the truth calls for is men and women who will live a normal life, partake of all legitimate pleasures, temperate in all things, keeping in contact with the world of mankind in the varied activities of life, and carry the truth with them wherever they go; not as a beautiful theory expressed only in doctrine; but as a practical thing expressed in action. Let us tread lightly among human hearts, all the while radiating the light of the truth and that spirit of burning love for weary struggling men and women everywhere, until they shall be drawn to us by the very warmth and sincerity of our love. Brethren and sisters, the truth was given to us, not only for our own development, and to be locked away within the cloisters of our own hearts. Its glorious light was placed in our hands so that others as well as we might see. Let us hold it aloft and carry its banner into the midst of a perishing world. But let us beware of extremes.

The Restoration of Israel

Zionism a Fulfilment of Prophecy

YES, WE believe that many of the Jews will be and are even now being restored, before the ushering in of the next age, and at the closing out of the present Gentile age.

Twenty-five years ago, in the spring of 1895, in a Paris hotel, a young Austrian Jew sat feverishly writing a pamphlet wherein he offered what he thought was a new solution of the Jewish problem. "The Jewish state" he named this pamphlet, and his call to the Jews was based on this promise: "We are a people—one people." It was Theodor Herzl writing his "Judanstaat," the publication of which in 1896 may be considered the stating point of the modern Zionist movement. Up to that time Herzl had experienced but little of the great Jewish tragedy, and felt but litle kinship with a Jewish people. He was a Doctor of Laws, a clever journalist, a successful playwright, on the way to a brilliant literary career. He was in Paris as a correspondent of the Vienna "New Free Press" and witnessed the famous Dreyfus trial. He saw in the innocent victim of persecution a symbol of Israel among the nations. Being a man of unusually fine sensibilities and intellectural courage, Herzl thought the problem out to its inevitable conclusion. A Jewish state was his answer to the Jewish question.

It was only later that Herzl learned that others before him had had this same hope; for the truth is that the masses of the Jewish people, all through the centuries of their dispersion and martyrdom, saw the vision of their return to Zion as the ultimate goal and vindication of their suffering. The Messianic hope, the hope that Israel restored to his own land would again take his place among the nations, has been the leading and unifying motive in the history of the scattered people. Self-preservation as a people was the all-absorbing task; restoration to nationhood, the supreme reward.

It was only in the latter part of the last century, however, that the mystic hope of divine restoration became a national program of self-activity and self-restoration. Jew and Gentile alike called upon the Jew to restore their national life, and upon the rest of the world to aid them; Joseph Salvador, a French Jew, early in the nineteenth century; Hollingsworth, an Englishman in 1852; Moses Hess, a German Jewish socialist and philosopher, in 1862; and George Eliot in her great novel "Daniel Deronda," in 1876. Worthy of special note in his work of Hirsch Kalischer, an orthodox rabbi who in 1860 advocated the colonizing of Palestine, declaring that the Messianic ideal is not incompatible wih human labor and sacrifice. The movement to colonize Palestine took root. To organize and foster the movement, the society, "Lovers of Zion" was formed in Odessa, and branches later established in various parts of the world. The outbreak against the Jews in Russia in 1881 gave the movement a great impetus and led to the establishment, shortly afterwards, of the first successful colony in Palestine, called "Rishon le Zion." The full story of the founding of these colonies, of the young pioneers who abandoned their university career for a life of privation and danger in the service of the national ideal, is one of the heroic chapters in history. Many of them succumbed in the struggle before their own efforts and the assistance they received from the "Lovers of Zion" and Baron Edmund de Rothschild of Paris placed them on a sound footing. These pioneers are well called the Jewish Pilgrim Fathers, and those who followed them have succeeded in establishing these two fundamental propositions.

First, that Palestine is fit for the modern Jew;

Second, that the modern Jew is fit for Palestine. About sixty self-governing and self-supporting agricultural colonies bear witness to this remarkable achievement.

Unaware of the deep national stirrings of the Jewish communities in Eastern Europe Herzl was brought face to face with the grim ugliness of anti-Semitism in Western Europe, and he applied to the solution of the Jewish problem the simple formulas of the modern world he understood so well. The Jews are a distinctive people, unable and also unwilling to assimilate with the nations,. As individuals they compete successfully with their non-Jewish neighbors, and thus arouse anti-Semitism. Why should they continue to do this? Being a distinctive people why should they not possess the basis of national life and self-expression which every other people possess? Why should they not have a state of their own? Why should they continue to invite the hatred and contempt which is the lot of all the peculiar and helpless? With the active good-will of the nations, themselves as much interested as the Jews in solving the Jewish problem, a Jewish state is quite possible. Let the Jews first of all organize; let them, with the public guarantees of the powers, acquire recognized sovereignity over some piece of territory; but let them build up the necessary financial means; let them apply to the task their admitted energy and talents; let them but will it and they can have a state of their own. They were once a nation among the nations. "What man has done man may do." Thoughts such as these were the thoughts of Herzl, and he realized later that the land capable of raising the will of the Jewish people was Palestine and no other.

What offerings can we bring the Lord?
Thy ruined temple stand forlorn;
Its stones are levelled with the sward
Or alien altars now adorn.
And bitter desolation stills
The lowing of the stately herds,
The bleatings on the hundred hills,
The shepherds' songs of joyous words,
No fields of corn or luscious vines
Thy people's toiling hands engage,
And from the Ghetto's dark confines
They make no holy pilgrimage
To bring their offerings to thy shrine
With sound of tabret and of lute;
Thy power a draught of bitter wine,
And lay before thee Dead Sea fruit!
Oh, give us back our father's days,
The land they trod in festive glee,
When harvestings were acts of praise,
And best ripe fruits were gifts to thee.

DEAR BEREANS:

WHILE I know a good many of you personally, I know they are few compared to the whole number; and the ones I do know make me long to be acquainted with all of you.

What a pleasant thing it would be if we could all meet in a body and get acquainted with each other! But I suppose that will never be in this age. And the great question is, will it ever be in any age?

Our name implies Bible searchers, and I wonder sometimes if we are true to name. In searching for truth it should be ethical as well as doctrinal, for we should be striving each day to become better in both.

I wonder if there is any way that we could help each other that has not already been employed. The kingdom cannot be far away; let us therefore strive each day to be ready.

Why do not more of you write for The Restitution? We love so much to hear from you and yet so many of you remain silent. Come out of your seclusion and write at least a few lines and they will be welcomed by all.

If this does not find its way into the waste basket you may hear from me again sometime.

Your sister in the one faith,

FRANCES ZELLER.

Death in Adam; Life in Christ

BROTHER EVERIT ALLIN of 347 New St. Newark, N. J., on Friday, February 11th, 1921, fell asleep in Jesus, awaiting the summons of his Lord to "come forth" and enter into life eternal. Funeral services were conducted by Brother Daniel Dietz at 2 P. M. on Monday the 14th.

Brother Allin's father (Brother Thomas Allin) fell on sleep on September 27th, 1920. The death new of her son is a heavy blow to Sister Allin. Pray that she may be comforted by the love and grace of her Creator so she will be able to stand this double affliction.

SARAH ANN SAVAGE was born in Alabama, January 25th, 1839, and died in Texline, Texas, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. H. Caver, on February 1st, 1921. She was married in October 15th, 1857, to James M. Smith. To this union were born thirteen children, seven sons and six daughters. Her husband, one daughter, and one son preceded her to the grave. Thaddius, William, John, Jessie, and Minter Smith live in Oklahoma. Charles lives in Texline, Texas. Sister Smith was an intelligent and firm believer in the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ. Her husband and daughter, Anna, were of the same faith. Adallee Dobson, of Malone, Alabama, was of the same faith, so also were Mrs. J. F. Caver of Texline Texas, and Mrs. N. M. Rice, of Trinidad Alabama. Sister Smith though isolated during her Christian life, was always a firm believer in the gospel of the kingdom of God, and was always ready to give a reason for her faith Interment was made in the Texline Cemetery near the grave of her daughter, Miss Anna Smith, whose death occurred about twelve years ago. When the Lord Jesus Christ comes they will hear the trumpet sound and will be clothed with immortality.

Good Company: A Serial Article: By Bro. S. H. Thomas

Love One Another

LOVE IS the strongest force in nature. It is stronger than hate, for where is the angry scowl that will not melt and vanish before a gentle, trusting smile of love? It is stronger than the fear of death, for is it not love which nerves a timid mother to give her life to rescue her child? Was it not love which prompted our most noble Lord to give his life for his brethren? Love is the source and fountainhead of all that is great, good,, and noble in nature Its presence brings peace, harmony, and happiness. Its absence opens wide the door to hatred, selfishness, strife, murder, and all evil. In this the children of God are manifest: Whosoever doeth not righteosuness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother. For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that ye shall love one another. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth not in death. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer, and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us. My little children let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God. Not that we (first) loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be propitiation for our sins; Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. And this commandment we have from him, that he who loveth God (must) love his brother also.

When two or three of us chance to meet together, it is not love that prompts us to speak evil of some absent one. Love would rather put kind words in our mouth. It is not love which causes us to search the absent one's record for some fault or blemish that we may roll it under our tongue as a sweet morsel. Love would rather seek to cover up a fault and find excuse for it, for "There is one lawgiver who is able to save and to destroy. Who art thou that judgest another?" If we chance to overhear one brother speak carelessly of another, it is not the love of God which prompts us to run to the other brother and repeat the saying to him. "This is an abomination unto the Lord, he that soweth discord among brethren." Therefore "let all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. Wherefore laying aside all malice and all guile, and envies and evil speakings, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." He that walketh uprightly and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, he that doeth these things shall never be moved."

Surely these Scriptures show how great an evil among brethren is a tale bearing and backbiting tongue. It is not only evil and exceeding sinfuls but cowardly in the extreme to speak words of an absent one which we would not speak if he were present. The brother or sister who can derive pleasure from conversation which can injure or in any way cast disparaging reflections upon an absent one, has not the love of God in his heart, and unless they overcome the evil practice, will surely be missing when the Lord comes to make up his jewels. What if a brother or sister have traits which we do not like? Will it help to remove the fault if we display it in sarcastic language before all his friends? Would such a course be prompted by love? What if a brother or sister be actually overtaken in a grave fault and the evidence of guilt be conclusive, is it lovelike to make all speed to spread the news among the brethren, and perhaps the entire neighborhood? Would not true love rather prompt us to remember that we ourselves have been guilty of wrong doing and extend to our fallen brother or sister a helping hand of love and encouragement, and to aid them to make a fresh start in the race for eternal life? This sin of evil speaking, slander, backbiting, talebearing, mischief making, secret whispering, sowing discord among brethren, is an abomination unto the Lord, and is one of the greatest and most common evils of this present life. It is the source of more trouble, misunderstandings, angry words and thoughts, than any other evil. It is a practice born of the enemy. It is a practice infinitely beneath any who profess to be numbered among God's people, and I propose with God's help, to overcome it. Will you join me in this resolution, dear reader, I mean YOU.

GOLDEN TEXT: Isaiah 40:29

SOMETIME WE'LL UNDERSTAND

DEDICATED TO SISTER W. H. EIDEMILLER

Not now, but in the coming years.
It may be in the better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there, sometime we'll understand.

CHORUS

Then trust in God through all thy days,
Fear not, for he doth hold thy hand,
Though dark thy way, still sing and praise;
Sometime, sometime we'll understand.

We'll know why clouds instead of sun
Were over many a charished plan,
Why song has ceased when scarce begun;
'Tis there, sometime, we'll understand.
We'll catch the broken threads again,
And finish what we have begun,
No need then the mysteries to explain,
For then, ah! then, we'll understand.

For what we long for most of all
So oft eludes our cherished plan,
Why hopes are crushed and castles fall,
When we see Christ we'll understand.

God knows the way, he holds the key,
He guides us with unerring hand,
Sometime with tearless eyes we'll see,
Yes, there and then we'll understand.

WANTED—A WEEKDAY RELIGION

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . . and thy neighbor as thyself (Luke 10:27).

TO LIVE true to the spirit of religion amidst the hurrying, active, daily grind is one of the most difficult parts of a Christian's life. It is easy enough to be religious in church, where the atmosphere is quiet and speaks of God; but to be religious in surroundings that are purely mundane and earthly, such as during business hours or recreation hours, that indeed is difficult. It is quite a shift from goodness and holiness to sordidness and worldliness. To be devout or religious is to be in conflict with the world. "Everything in its own time and place" is the saying of men. Prayers and sermons and church are all right for Sunday, but for the weekday we must get down to practical things and face realities. Many persons put on their religion with their Sunday clothes; they go to church, pray, return home and leave their religion behind them in the church. Such might be called weekday sinners and Sunday Christians. They seem not to think that they must love God always, that they must love their neighbor at all times. They seem not to realize that all men of whatsoever walk of life, of gracious or uncouth manners, of acceptable or disagreeable qualities—all are children of the one common Father, God, and have been redeemed by the blood of his Son, Jesus Christ, who therefore should be loved by us, one and all, sincerely, earnestly, at all times, at all places, at church, at home, at work, at the office, in the street, in society—everywhere. Such love of God and of neighbor is indeed practical religious.

"Love you one another," says John, "Bear one another's burdens," says Paul, "and thus you will fulfill the law of Christ." "Love your enemies," says Christ; and furthermore "If you do not forgive men, neither will your Father forgive you your sins." These words are a dead letter to many; and hence the law of love is broken. Hence there are differences between friends; hence enmites, bitterness, quarrels, and practical religion becomes nought. Sometimes such conditions prevail in the home, sometimes in the business office, and very often in social life. Thus charity is wounded, religion suffers, God is offended.

"Father, forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us"—thus most Christians pray every day. We should attend well to these words and let not anger or bitterness or hatred take possession of our hearts. Who of us is perfect? Who without fault of some kind? "I judge not myself," says Paul, "God judges me." Therefore Christian people, love one another. Put God into your love, for God is love. Practice a little kindness through the daily grind; bear the burdens of another's faults; smile whilst sifting life's wheat from its chaff, and thus you shall fulfill the duties of love and of religion.

STRIKING PARAGRAPHS

"IF SCIENCE and discovery can take the Bible from us, the sooner it does it the better. If the Bible comes from God it can no more be hurt by anything man can do than the waves of the ocean can be stopped by blowing against them with a tin whistle; and if it is not from God, the sooner its bogus character is discovered and exposed the better.

"He who undertakes to work in the name of the Lord will not have the devil for a silent partner in his business, and the mother who undertakes to train up her children in the name of the Lord will have more anxiety about their souls than she has about her own position in society.

"The preacher who is always trying to see how easy he can make it for the Lord will never have a big revival. If you want to see great results trust God to give them. Don's be afraid the devil will outwit him or out flank him. God never lost a battle, and why should we be continually afraid that he will?

FOR WE SHALL SEE HIM AS HE IS

Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever (Rev. 5:13).

CHRIST WILL be the burden of every song, throughout the innumerable bands of heaven: to Christ shall the universal chorus of nature, of grace and of glory, perpetually resound. Christ will be the Alpha and Omega, the beginning of all their joys, and the end of all their desires. Not a thought in heaven, but wings its way to Jesus; not an angel there but presses with rapturous devotion to be near him; not one of all the blessed, but esteem the light of his countenance as the emphasis of every joy and as the crown and completion of all his happiness. And is it possible that, as they are, such thou, O frail imperfect creature, shalt one day be?—Yes, blessed be God, it is more than possible.

Gleanings

THOSE WHO rally to the despised Prince, in the day of his rejection, shall have the glory of his court when he comes to his own.

Those who in sadness have shared his humiliation shall in gladness share his throne.

Many a humble disciple content this year to inhabit a cottage for Christ's sake, may perhaps next year dwell in a palace near the throne of the "Blessed Redeemer."

The night is far spent, and he whose right it is will shortly come with the shout: "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you."

Four things that come not back: The spoken word, the sped arrow, the past life and neglected opportunity.

They that will not make the word of God their rest, will find a heavy burden.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 73 CLEVELAND, OHIO, MARCH 15th, 1924. NUMBER 11

Wishing

Do you wish the world were better?
Let me tell you what to do:
Set a watch upon your actions,
Keep them always straight and true;
Rid your mind of selfish motives,
Let your thoughts be clean and high;
You can make a little Eden
Of the sphere you occupy.

Do you wish the world were wiser?
Well, suppose you make a start
By accumulating wisdom
In the scrapbook of your heart.
Do not waste one page on folly,
Live to learn and learn to live;
If you want to give men knowledge,
You must get it ere you give.

Do you wish the world were happy?
Then remember day by day
Just to scatter seeds of kindness
As you pass along the way;
For the pleasures of the many,
May ofttimes be traced to one,
As the hand that plants the acorn,
Shelters armies from the sun.

The Restoration of Israel

Zionism a Fulfilment of Prophecy

GHETTO IS the term employed to indicate the Jewish quarters in a city. It was originally the quarter in Rome and other Italian cities to which the Jews were restricted.

What was the immediate effect of Herzl's "Jewish State"? Its originality, boldness, and simplicity had a double effect. It aroused the bitter opposition of many of the so-called emancipated Jews who felt that, having been given the rights of human beings, they were under obligations to cut themselves off from the past and future of their people. To manifest an interest in the creation of another state they argued, might be taken to indicate a lack of interest in the state which had accorded them the rights of citizenship. In other words, they would be unpatriotic, disloyal to their chosen country. But who in the face of the unquestion loyalty and iminent service rendered by Zionists to their respective countries, still maintain that Zionism is incompatible with patriotism? In Herzl's day, however, this opposition on the part of influential and wealthy Jewish circles in Western Europe threw Zionism for its chief support on the resources, weaker, it is true, materially; but spiritually much greater, of the Jews of Eastern Europe. There Herzl's "Judenstaat" was hailed as the word of deliverance. From various quarters there came to him appeals for immediate action. Against his interests and wishes Herzl was compelled to assume the leadership. And a leader he was, such as the Jewish people has not had since its exile. Those who knew him best unanimously describe him as a "wonderfully powerful and beautiful personality, transfigured by the inspiration of a great ideal.'

The Jewish people were now to be put to the test. First, to accomplish so great a task as self-restoration, they must organize. Do they possess the capacity for organization? To answer this question and proceed at once to the task, Herzl determined on the calling of a Zionist Congress. It was held in the Swiss city of Basle on August 27, 1897, and its 206 delegates, representing all the [illegible] and conditions of Jewish life, offered the first concrete evidence of the collective will of the Jewish people to secure a free, national life of their own. The following basic declaration was made by this Congress:

"Zionism aims to create a publicly secured, legally assured home for the Jewish people in Palestine. And in order to obtain this object, the Congress adopts the following means: The promotion of the settlement in Palestine of Jewish agriculturists, handicraftsmen, industrialists and men following professions. The federation and association of entire Jewry by means of local and general institutions in conformity with the local laws. The strengthening of Jewish sentiment and national consciousness. The procuring of such government sanctions as are necessary for achieving the objects of Zionism."

It is a noticibly important and significant fact that this program has never had to be altered, and has even stood the test of the revolutionary changes brought about by the great World War. Yes, it has received its ultimate vindication by these very changes. For the endorsements of the allied powers are clearly in unison with the political clauses of this platform. On the basis of the Basle program and the payment of shekel (25c) made any Jewish man or woman a member of the organization, with the right to vote for delegates or to be a candidate as delegate to the Zionist Congress, the supreme body of the Zionist organization. Zionist societies sprang up wherever Jews lived, that is to say, in every nook and corner of the world. In these societies, and especially in the Zionist Congresses, the Jewish people after so many centuries, were trained to democratic national action. The Hatikoa, the national anthem of the Jews, is often sung by the delegates at these conventions. The Zionist Congresses, by their representative character and the lofty plans of their utterances and deliberation, attracted the attention of the world to the problem of the Jewish people. In addition each Congress was a milestone in the progress of Zionism and demonstrated the fitness of the Jewish people to work out its own salvation through organized self-activity. In the intervals between the sessions of the Congress executive authority is exercised by a "Greater Actions Committee," consisting of 25 members, and also by a smaller body of 5 to 7 members known as the "Inner Actions Committee," both bodies elected by the Congress. Up to the outbreak of the war, which suspended the functioning of the International Organization, eleven Zionist Congresses had been held, for the most part in the city of Basle, the last one in Vienna in 1913. And now this august body of representative Jewish people has assembled again as stated in the following short narratives from one of our daily newspapers:

LONDON, JULY 7, 1920.—Louis D. Brandies, associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, was elected president of the International Zionist Conference which convened today, the first Zionist gathering in seven years, to formulate a political program that will be urged for Palestine. Dr. Max Nordan of London was chosen honorary president.

LONDON, JULY 21.—The Zionist Conference here has decided that the next Zionist world Congress should meet in Palestine, not later than the summer of 1921. A large executive body, known as the Greater Actions Committee, will have forty members and will meet semi-annually. One of the main objects of this committee will be to determine the budget for the development of the Zionist state.

LONDON, JULY 22. Decision to inaugurate a foundation fund of $25,000,000 for the establishment of Palestine as the Jewish national home was taken by the Zionist Conference at its concluding session tonight. Pledges of self-taxation on the tithe principle were made by representatives of various countries.

Among the financial institutions created by the Zionist Congress, the Jewish Colonial Trust, registered as an English Joint Stock Company in 1899, and the Jewish National Fund are the most important. Theodor Herzl had hoped that by means of the Jewish Colonial Trust, sufficient funds would be gathered for the purchase of a charter from the Turkish Sultan, which would afford the necessary political guarantees for a large colonization activity in Palestine. But the rich Jews, most of whom belong to the self-styled "emancipated" of the West of Europe, held aloof from the movement under the mistaken belief that they were expected to deny their own people in return for the rights of human beings. As a result, the present capital of the Jewish Colonial Trust which amounts to about $1,500,000, has been derived from more than 100,000 shareholders, distributed all over the world. Of enormous benefit to the development of Palestine, none the less has been the Jewish Calonial Trust through its subsidiary, the Anglo-Palestine Company, which has branches in Jerusalem, Jaffa, Haifa, Hebron, Beirout, Safed, Tiberias, Gaza, Constantinople, Salonica, Bagdad, Smyrna and Adrianople and agencies in all the principal Jewish colonies. The Jewish National Fund is perhaps the most popular of all Zionist institutions. It has for its object the acquisition of land in Palestine as the unalienable property of the whole Jewish people. It has grown through voluntary donations, which for the most part were very small, until its present possession in land, securities and liquid assets amounts to about 8,000,000 fracs. In its operations it has contributed considerably to the development of Palestine, by supporting public institutions, improving housing accommodations, affording employment to Jewish workmen, and by undertakings in afforestation.

The English government, which has always shown its friendship for the outcasts of Israel, has showed its active good-will on two occasions in the brief history of the Zionist movement, previous to its recent declaration, which opened the door for the fulfilment of political Zionism. I shall touch upon the declaration of the British Government later. Theodore Herzl, in the course of his extensive diplomatic activity, had received expressions of good-will in plenty. He received on several occasions, between 1899 and 1903, from the Sultan, Abdul Hamdi, from the king of Italy, from the Pope, and from William the Second of Germany, and from Von Pleve, the Czar of Russia's chief minister. From the British Government, however, came two distinct offers of land: one in October, 1902, of a section in the Sinai Peninsular, bordering on Palestine; the other in 1903, of a large tract in East Africa with guarantees of local autonomy. The first offer was found impractical owing to dearth of water in the territory in question; the second created a crisis in the history of the movement. It brought to grips those who held that Palestine alone must be the Zonist objective on the one side, and those who were willing to see established a Jewish national centre in any part of the globe, on the other. The outcome was that the latter despite the unfavorable report of the commission which had been appointed to investigate the territory in East Africa, in 1905 seceded from the Zionist organization. The various attempts of the latter to find some other territory for a Jewish autonomous settlement have been futile, and now that Palestine has been universally recognized as the future national Jewish homeland; the principle territorialist leaders have renewed their allegiance to Zionism. Thus there is certain to come the fulfilment of the vow of an extemporary song, sung in Hebrew at a camp meeting of the Jewish Legion which, rendered into English by Louis Fischer in the "American Jewish Chronicle," reads:

Tell me brother dear,
Oh, tell me brother dear!
What will you eat in Palestine?
What will you eat in Palestine?
There I'll eat the fig and date,
And forget the Gentile's hate,
Ah, but only in Palestine!
Yes, but only in Palestine!

Tell me, brother dear,
Oh, tell me brother dear!
What will you bring to Palestine?
What will you bring to Palesine?
There I'll bring the blue and white
And raise it in Zion bright,
Ah, but only in Palestine!
Yes, but only in Palestine!

The "blue and white" in the second stanza refers to the flag of Zion, the Jewish flag, which has a white ground, with four stripes of blue on it, paralleling the edges, and in the centre a sixpointed star called the "Shield of David."

STERLING P. GROVES.

The Redemption Price

BY NATURE corrupt, stiffnecked and disobedient, possessed of sinful flesh and a carnal mind, the first man Adam quickly demonstrated his unfitness for an endless life, and accordingly, God pronounced his sentence: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Thou, and thy posterity who shall, in harmony with nature's laws, partake of thy sinful and disobedient nature.

Merciful God, is there indeed then no hope for earth's teeming millions? Is this decree final? God looked in pity upon the children of men and replied: Yes; there is yet hope. The voluntary sacrifice of a sinless representative, may redeem obedient ones of the race. But Lord, there is none such; no, not one. Thou knowest full well that corruption cannot beget incorruption. A stream cannot rise above its fountain head; sinful flesh and a carnal mind never have and never can, beget a perfect and sinless being. Lord, it is impossible; we are yet without hope.

But God replied: With man it is indeed impossible, but with God all things are possible; for "Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel." "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee. Therefore also that holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." In this way only may the seed of a fallen, sinful, carnal race produce a perfect and sinless representative, such as is necessary in order to pay the full price of redemption by God.

The ovum, or seed of a woman, has no life; of itself it is dead; the fountainhead is in the father of the future being, formed, nourished, and built up in the womb by the blood of the mother, the life principle from the father becomes bone of her bone, and flesh of her flesh. In this way by the wisdom and power of God, was a representative of the race produced from the seed of the woman, but having her life principle or fountainhead, not in disobedient Adam, but in God himself, thus rendering him capable of doing that which Adam could not do, endure trial, and temptation without transgression, and in this way made it possible for him to pay the redemption price required by God for the ransom of a race under sentence of death. Nevertheless, let it be clearly understood, that while the redemption price was and is ample to cover every member of the race, there was certain conditions of faith and obedience attached thereto, which must be complied with by men if they would stand with the ransomed ones. Redemption is for all, if all will have it; but multitudes turn from and reject it, and cast it aside as a worthless thing. They refuse to profit by the precious blood of Jesus which was poured out for all.

In these last days there is a general and increasing disposition to discredit the Bible, and deny its truth and authenticity. Millions of so-called Christians, reject it entirely, as a collection of time worn fables, stories, and legends, which nobody of these enlightened times can afford to credit. Others reject certain books, of both Old and New Testaments. And yet others, certain chapters and verses which plainly state the miraculous conception of Jesus. It is to these last that I would address this appeal. You who dare to brand as false the record that God has given concerning his Son in the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke, and with reckless and impious hands, cut out and cast away these precious Scriptures as spurious, and persistently and zealously, teach others over whom you have influence to do likewise

My dear friend, surely you do not realize the enormity of your sin. I tremble for you, and would gladly save you from the doom that surely awaits you, and those unfortunates who so blindly follow you. If you are a scholar you should know that all ancient manuscripts now extant (except one) contain those chapters which you refuse, thus forming an unbroken chain of evidence, reaching from the present to apostolic days. The one exception noted above, being a vague copy of Matthew, said to have been made by an obscure sect known as Ebonites, who are admitted even by the very writers who claim the support of this authority, to have mutilated the copy which they possess by removing the genealogy. With such a perfect chain of evidence before you how can you presume to pronounce the record that God has given of his Son a lie; and by your example and influence teach others less strong to do likewise?

The infidel and atheist reject the whole Bible. They counted that there is not sufficient grounds to justify a belief in the authenticity of the book. You, my friend, reject a most essential and important portion of the Bible upon exactly the same ground that the infidel does. Are you not proud of your allies? Can you not see that your teaching destroys faith in God's word and thus helps to swell the ranks of infidelity? When you succeed in persuading a Bible student that several chapters of the book which he loves and reveres as the word of the living God are spurious, just that moment your misled pupil begins to doubt other portions also. The enemy points out to him that the Bible story of the creation is not nearly so reasonable or possible as these chapters which you reject. Also the story about Jonah and the big fish, Balaam and his ass, and a multitude of others come to his mind; and he reasons that if God has permitted his holy book to lie about the miraculous conception of Jesus, why not about these other stories also? And very soon this young man, who before he fell under the blight of your evil teaching was a devout and consistent believer in the Bible as the word of God, has now become a confirmed skeptic. You, Mr. Josephite, inserted the opening wedge of doubt. The enemy quickly found the opening and entered in, and the ruin is complete. I ask, in God's name, Are you proud of your work? Oh, turn, I beg of you. Hasten; it may not yet be too late! Go backward over the trail you have followed, and publicly renounce the error you have taught, and thus as far as possible repair the damage you have wrought, and the prayers of God's people will go with you.

And now I turn to you, dear friends, who have yielded to the influences of a blind leader. No doubt he was gentle, good and kind, earnest and sincere, and you loved him, and had confidence in his wisdom and judgment. His arguments seemed to you conclusive and sufficient, and so you followed him into this error. Oh, return, I beg of you, to the childlike faith and confidence in God, and the entire Bible as his word, which was once yours. Consider for one moment, dear ones, and you must see that the dear old book must stand or fall together. It must be true entirely or wholly false Discredit one portion, and you discredit all. If you prove the first two chapters of Matthew and Luke are false you destroy the whole book, for God himself hands it to you containing these chapters, and declaring it to be his word, and pronounces a curse upon him who dares to take from or add to. I beg of you, dear ones, retreat while time is still yours. Abandon such a perilous position. Oh, why should you occupy it? The risk is terrible; the advantages none. God offers you eternal life in the kingdom of that Son whose begettal, birth and divine nature is so clearly described by Matthew and Luke. Surely a son of Joseph can offer no more. Leave the poor old stranded wreck and pull for the shore.

And now, in conclusion, I turn to you, my dear brother and sister in Christ, with words of earnest and heartfelt warning. The enemy is abroad among God's people. This Josephite error is seductive and fatal. He who holds it denies the Lord who bought him, and for such there is no hope. Its emissaries are industrious, zealous and persistent in presenting their hobby. Some of you, dear ones, may be just beginning to study the subject; some are perhaps attracted by it, and quite interested, while others are almost persuaded that there is something in it. Oh, I beg of you, beware! Do not, I beseech you, be tempted to exchange your precious birthright for such a mess of pottage. Do not, I beg of you, ever consent to charge the living God, who can not lie, with giving to his people and the world a book stamped and sealed as his holy word, and yet containing several chapters of infamous lies concerning himself and the nature of his Son. O, God in heaven, how can they who do this deed hope to escape the judgments written therein?

Dear ones, a penny saved is a penny gained. Likewise, one of God's little ones saved from this fatal error is a saint gained for the ages to come. I pray God that this simple, earnest warning may go straight from the writer's heart to many who are tempted, possibly almost persuaded, to believe this false doctrine, and draw them back to the safe and solid rock of faith in God and the integrity of his holy word, which he hands us, believing that it comes to us exactly as he in his wisdom intended it should. Any other conclusion, dear ones, is unthinkable. I launch this message of warning upon its errand of mercy, and may God add his blessing.

S. H. THOMAS.

God's Gifts

GIFT, A thing given. God has, as a gift promised "eternal life" through Jesus Christ our Lord (Rom. 6:23). God's word teaches man the plan of redemption from sin, is in becoming related to Christ. We get the gift through faith in his promise, and conforming to his plan, which is belief in the gospel, and being baptized into Christ. Every one who obeys this command and endures to the end, receives the gift of eternal life through Christ at the first resurrection, which is the resurrection of those that sleep in Christ (1 Thess. 4:16) Minor gifts, are that man should eat and drink and enjoy the good of all his labor, are the gifts of God (Eccl. 3:13; 5:19). The gift of the Holy Spirit to the apostles on the day of Pentecost was a special gift; Peter promised this gift to every one who repented and was baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and it was given to no others (Acts 2:28). The gift of God cannot be purchased (Acts 8:18-20). Through belief and obedience the Holy Spirit was poured out on the Gentiles. Peter learned that God was no respecter of persons (Acts 10:34; Eph. 6:9; Col. 3:25; 1 Pet. 1:17). God gave the Gentiles the like gift as the Jews when they believed on the Lord Jesus Christ (Acts 11:17) The free gift is by the grace of God. We are saved by faith, and that is the gift of God (Eph. 2:8). Paul was made a minister by the gift of the grace of God (Eph. 3:7)

Another gift of God interests us very much. He promised to Abraham and his seed all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates (Gen. 13:15-17; 15:18; 17:8). The ones to whom God promised this gift have not received it yet. God has given us the gift of faith, and as he sware by his oath that he would give this land to Abraham and his seed we believe it (Heb. 6·13, 18). The Scriptures teach that Christ is the seed: they also teach that if we become Christ's we become heirs (Gal. 3:29). How can we become Christ's? Through faith in the promises and being baptized into Christ makes us the seed of Abraham. No one else can be adopted into the Abrahamic family.

The greatest gift is the gift of his "only begotten Son"; whosoever believeth in him will not perish but have "everlasting life" (John 3:16, 36).

The gift of eternal life comes through the Son of God, and not through the son of Joseph. There is no promise made to the son of Joseph of life in the future. Will close by quoting from James 1:17, as we fully agree with him that no perfect gift can come from an earthly parent.. "Every good gift and perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." The time for the return to earth of the only begotten Son of God is very near. Be ye ready.

E. W. KNAPP.

Trying to appear to be what you are not is hypocrisy, and will not stand the test. Be real.

Those who trust and confide in God fully and unreservedly, are never disappointed. Their expectations are fully met, and even more.

"All is vanity," said the Preacher concerning the life under the sun. Truly it is foolishness to set the affection on things of this life which will sooner or later pass away.

Sister Charles Moore, of Garrettsville, Ohio, met with us at the Lord's table February 27th.

o

After the morning exhortation, February 27th Mr. Ivan Nicholoff was separated from the world by baptism into the Lord's name. Our brother has escaped the darkness of the Russian Orthodox (Greek) Church, and rejoices in the knowledge of God's coming kingdom and glory. He has been blessed in learning the truth in the morning of his manhood, and now we pray that he may in righteousness and holiness serve the Lord "all the days of his life" (Luke 1:75).

o

The regular meeting of the Fellow Helpers' Society was held on the evening of February 18th, at the home of Sister Tubbs. The meeting was opened with a song, and prayer by Brother Sterling Groves. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. Very good reports were received from the visitors of the sick. The meeting was then turned over to the leader. Sister Zephene Brown, who gave a very interesting and instructive lesson on "Christ Coming as a thief." The meeting was closed with a song, and prayer by Sister Frances Russell.

EUGENE MILLER.

o

Sister Hazel Blyth, Secretary, gives the following report of the Sister's Society:

The Sister's Meeting for February 24th, was held at the home of Sister Addie Gibbs, with Sister Mattie Fankbonner leader.

According to our motto for the year, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." the sisters are still earnestly endeavoring to carry on the work which for so many years has seemed to be the peculiar task of the women of the church. Calls are made and flowers sent to the sick, and financial help given wherever the necessity is seen. Aside from this the members receive a hearty inspiration in the Christian life from the lessons prepared by our leaders, and in the same manner friendship and acquaintance is welded firmer in the social hour.

In closing, may we add that any sister who would like to join us would be cordially welcome.

Thoughts on Obedience

"To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of lambs" (1 Sam. 15:22).

The countless millions of planets created by Him and cast out into endless space swing around in their orbit in sublime obedience to his laws, in perfect order and without the variation of a single moment in a hundred years.

"Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people" (Jer. 7:23).

If during this life, his time of trial, a man proves that he can be relied upon to unquestioningly obey God in all things, in the age to come God will add to his obedience immortality, comeliness of form, glory, the brightness of which will dazzle the eyes of the beholder, and all the powers of an endless life. But without obedience God will add nothing.

"Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse—a blessing if we obey the commandments of the Lord your God, and a curse if ye will not obey" (Deut. 11:26-28).

We may rest assured that the infinite wisdom of God could never permit him to create an immortal rebel. Therefore we may be quite certain that he will not confer the unspeakable gift of eternal life upon any mortal man, unless that man has first proven under actual trial that he may be relied upon to render prompt and unquestioning obedience under any and all circumstances.

"Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered. And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto them that obey him" (Heb. 4:8. 9).

The entire universe obeys God exactly, promptly and unquestioningly. So far as we know, man is the only rebel. He is a stubborn animal. A law is an abomination to him. When one interferes with his pleasure it is his pleasure to break it. In the cradle his first conscious act is to rebel against and resist maternal authority. As a youth his greater ambition is to reach his majority and become his own boss. This goal reached, he still finds both civil and divine laws demanding obedience. He who cannot consent to obey forfeits the right to live in the glorious age to come. But "these as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not. and shall utterly perish in their own corruption." "They shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord."

o

Bible Truths

Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to DESTRUCTION, and many there be which go in thereat, because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto LIFE, and few there be that find it (Matt. 7:13, 14).

"THEY CAST HIM OUT"

The writer of these lines was publicly prohibited from Communion at the Mount Street Evangelistic Mission, Nottingham, on account of his views expressed below, and in "Friendly Words."

To the Law and to the Testimony

DEAR SIR:

BY INVITATION I attended the Sunday Morning Meeting at the Mount Street Evangelistic Mission, and much enjoyed the address. During the singing of the hymn, previous to breaking of bread, the speaker approached me saying, "I believe you deny Eternity, at least so I understand from your little tract 'Friendly Words.'" My reply was that I did no such thing, and that if the tract was carefully read it would be seen that I there stated that I believed in eternal punishment. He then said, "We cannot allow you to break bread because you deny God's word."

Such a strong statement, and no Christian with any love or reverence for God's Word would allow such a statement, or such an act as the refusal of the Lord's table to go unchallenged.

I hold most emphatically, that it is you who deny God's Word, and you take a very heavy responsibility in keeping any Christian away from the Lord's table without giving good proof of your position. Let me kindly point out too, that eternal punishment is not of necessity eternal punishing, any more than eternal judgment in Heb. 6 is eternal judging. In Matthew 25 the reward of the righteous is said to be everlasting life, what contrast can there be unless everlasting death, or "everlasting destruction" is the reward of the wicked. The word punishment is a general term and does not state the nature of the punishment.

Mr. R—— endeavored to create the impression that I did not believe in the judgment by reading Revelation 22:12-14. I most emphatically do believe in the judgment, even more strongly perhaps than you do yourself, but the very verse (v.5) quoted by Mr. R—— goes strongly against the view for which he contends. It reads, "Death and hell (A. V.) were cast into the lake of fire." If you will compare Scripture elsewhere you will find words as follows: "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Here then we get the explanation why death and hell (A. V.) were cast into the lake of fire. The clear reason is that they might be destroyed. The uniform testimony of Scripture (not only in isolated passages but in scores of passages) is that "The wicked shall perish," "be destroyed," "be burned up," "be blotted out," "be consumed," "utterly perish," "utterly perish in their own corruption," "they shall consume, they shall consume away," "the wicked shall not be," "they shall be as though they had not been." Surely such language multiplied throughout Scripture is not consistent with the teaching of everlasting life in misery, and as business men you would not so interpret English language in any other book. God's Word tells us that sinners will be punished, some with few stripes, some with many, and that "All the wicked will he destroy." Death and hell (A. V.) were cast into the lake of fire, this is the second death. It will be everlasting, there will be no return from it, no second resurrection, everlasting punishment, everlasting loss, but not everlasting torment. I am amazed and astounded that you can see your way to deny these plain statements of God's Word: "All the wicked will he destroy." "The wicked shall not be, they shall be as though they had not been," — are not my words but God's, and I dare not gainsay them. It will be a fearful thing for the wicked to fall into the hands of the living God.

Now, dear friend, I bear no personal ill feeling, I am quite willing to meet you either personally, collectively, or in any public meeting of Christians, and by the ordinary Bible use of the English language, and the primary meanings of English words see who it is that is really denying God's Word.

We read plainly that sin, sorrow and death shall be done away with. How can this be so if as you say satan and those with him are sinning without end in an endless hell?

I prefer to stand on God's Word though the whole world is against me. "The wages of sin is DEATH, but the gift of God is ETERNAL LIFE," praise be to his name. How much, or how many stripes will be due to each, I cannot say, but God's Word says, "Whose END is destruction." It will repay you to make a special study of God's Word, and his use of the words, "for ever," "destroy," "consume," "perish," "destruction." To warn people against the doctrine I hold to be scriptural, you and others call it annihiliation—we do not, the word is not in the Bible, but something very like the meaning is there: nor can you find "immortal soul," "never dying soul" for it is not there, but we read a great deal about "mortal man," and we get the statement that God "only hath immortality," and we are told to "seek for glory, honor and immortality." We are also told that Christ "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Now in the face of these statements someone must be wrong. Let us be like the Bereans and search the Scriptures.

Mr. R——— quoted Revelation 22:19 as applicable to me, but to my ordinary understanding of the English language it is he who would take away from the Bible such passages as I have quoted.

Yours sincerely,

R. H. JUDD.

Communication

"They Spake Often One to Another"

DEAR BROTHER BROWN:

With a fearful heart and trembling hand I wish to express my gratitude to God for you brethren of The Restitution. The issue of February 1st is brimfull of good things, the spirit that shines in its pages pleases me, especially on page 59. The spirit to please God and his people must be in us in this life ("thy life time," (Luke 16:25-30), before we may see God's kingdom (Rom. 8:11).

I heartily join Brother Brown in his letter to Brother Donaldson, January 12th, 1921; and as Brother Huggins encouraged and relieved another weary brother, A. R. Underwood, so with God's help may you, Brother Brown, relieve him.

O may God continue his goodness toward us! With dear Sister Wince we rejoice to know that in the trials that beset us, it is the hand of a Father that smites. So let us count it all joy (James 1:2), and continue to pray and sing praises as others have done (Acts 16:25). The Restitution we think has grown better both in sound and sense as we all should do.

When you have the King's ear, pray for us.

Obituary

Death in Adam; Life in Christ

SARAH JANE Thompson, daughter of William E. and Martha McDonald-Thompson, was born October 21, 1841. in Union township, Marshall County, Indiana. She began teaching at the age of nineteen, and two years later was married to James L. Mosher on August 17, 1862. Her husband enlisted and joined the Union forces in the Civil War, while she continued teaching. Upon the return to her husband from the army, they went to housekeeping just east of their late home, and never made but one removal, living her life in the immediate vicinity of her birth. She was the mother of five children, Ada B., Miriam A., Esther M. James A., and Perry T. Esther died at the age of sixteen months. They also reared a foster son, Eldridge Thompson.

She met with a serious accident three years ago in boarding a train in Plymouth in which one of her limbs was broken, leaving her a cripple.

Last Tuesday evening while in her usual health she was stricken with apoplexy and barely had time to reach her couch when she became unconscious. She remained in this condition till she passed under the power of the enemy death Sunday evening, February 13, 1921. She had lived 79 years, 3 months, and 23 days.

She leaves her husband, James L. Mosher, three children, Mrs. Ada B. Butler, Mrs. Miriam A. Walker, both of Culver Ind., and Perry T. Mosher, of Erie, British Columbia, one foster son, Eldridge Thompson, nephew to each of them, of St. Paul. Minn., eleven grand-children and four great-grandchildren, also two brothers, Thomas Thompson, of Walkerton, Ind., and Fayette Thompson, of Moorcroft, Wyoming, and two sisters, Mrs. Clara Switzer, of Plymouth, Ind., and Mrs. Elizabeth Garver, of Portland, Oregon. These are left to remember her life of kindness, love and service, and lament their loss in her death. Besides these she had enjoyed the love and esteem of a large circle of other relatives, friends, and neighbors who will miss her association and friendship. She was a member of the Logan-McDonald-Thompson relationship, which families were among the earliest pioneers of Marshall County. She had taken great interest in the annual reunions of the descendants of these families and had been the president of their association for several years.

Sister Mosher heard the gospel message and was baptized at Old Antioch in July, 1887, by Elder S. A. Chaplin. She has lived a life consistent with her profession, and fell asleep in Jesus full of faith and confidence of the soon coming of the Christ. She had drunk deeply at the fountain of the water of life, and fully expected a deliverance of the groaning creation from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God at his coming and kingdom.

Funeral services were held at the Evangelical Church building at Hibbard, February 15, conducted by the writer. The church was filled to overflowing with her many friends and relatives, and her husband's old comrades who attended in a body from Plymouth. Many flowers were given in tribute to her memory. We spoke from 1 John 4:13 applying the thought to her life that she possessed the spirit of God as it is in Christ Jesus by her love and service toward those to whom she ministered. After the service we laid her to rest in a country cemetery near where she was born, to await the coming of Jesus.

GOLDEN TEXT: Ephesians 5:20.

THE LITTLE CHILD

A simple hearted child was he,
And he was nothing more:
In summer days like you and me,
He played about the door
Or gathered where the father toiled,
The shavings from the floor.

Sometimes he lay upon the grass
The same as you and I,
And saw the hawks above him pass
Like specks against the sky;
Or, clinging to the gate, he watched
The stranger passing by.

A simple child, and yet, I think,
The bird-folk must have known,
The sparrow and the bobolink,
And claimed him for their own—
They gathered round him fearlessly
When he was all alone.

The lark the linnet and the dove,
The chaffinch and the wren,
They must have known his watchful love
And given their worship then;
They must have known and glorified
The child who died for men.
And when the sun at break of day
Crept in upon his hair,

I think it must have left a ray
Of unseen glory there,
A kiss of love on that little brow,
For the thorns that it must wear.

A LETTER ANSWERED

FROM THE west we have received the following letter:

DEAR BROTHER DONALDSON:

In reading the report of the wedding of Miss Douglas you say the origin and significance of the ring were given. Would like to know what it is.

In the light of 1 Timothy 2:9 and 1 Peter 3:3, do you think that those professing to have come out of the world can do those things which are so much sought after and pleasing to the world?

I am asking these questions for information. I see so many of the sisters doing these things that I wonder if I am wrong, or if they never have thought on these things. Have been a reader of your page from the first and think you can give a scriptural answer.

If you think an answer through the paper would be profitable, please omit my name.

Your sister in Christ.

Regarding the ring: Pastor Donaldson said in part "that its origin was from Egyptian mythology and came from the hoople snake which, when travelling from place to place, would place its tail in its mouth and then roll like a hoople. This design—an endless circle—was used by the Egyptians to signify everlasting or eternal. In time the people of Egypt made rings—which were give by one to another as tokens of friendship, signifying everlasting friendship. Gold being the only metal that would not corrode, always signified purity. Gold made in the form of a circle—a ring—denoted pure, eternal friendship or love; and as a natural consequence was in time adopted as an emblem of the marriage tie.

So much for the ring. Now for the more important part. The verses mentioned read; "In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works" (1 Tim. 2:9, 10).

"Whose (wives) adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price" (1 Pet. 3:3, 4).

It is an old saying—and as true as old—that you always can tell what is in inside of a woman's head by what is on the outside. Of course this refers simply to intelligence. The above quoted passages refer to the spiritual side of woman.

To our mind the quoted passages tell, but in different words, the same story that is spread throughout the entire New Testament, and that is, that in our worship we must have a heart and mind single to God alone. We read, "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, and all they that dwell therein." It was God who created us, and not we ourselves; and God's purpose in creating us was to have us serve him, praising and honoring his name. We are not to allow anything to come between us and our God, no matter what it is, whether it be father, or mother, or wife, or husband,, or sister, or brother, or houses, or lands, or the plaiting of the hair, or silver, or pearls, or apparel, or money, or any other thing. We cannot serve two masters; we can not be a child of God and at the same time allow the pleasures of this world to interest us. This is the lesson taught in the story of the rich young man: he was morally good; he had kept the commandments, but he also had "great possession;" and these possessions stood betweeen him and his God. His wealth was his idol; his wealth was his god. To be a child of God he needs must give up this idol. This he could not do, so "he went away sorrowful."

Do we care more for personal adornment than we do for our God and his Christ? Does the fixing of our hair, the wearing of jewelry, or the selection of our clothing take our mind away from our Creator? Is there anything we care more for than we do for God? Do we love anything to such an extent that it lessens our love for Jehovah? Is there anything that we say or do, or know, that makes us careless in our worship of him who loved us and sent his Son as our Redeemer? If there is, then get rid of it at once, for no matter what our present pleasure may be, it will last but a short time, while the promise is "if we suffer with Christ we aso shall reign with him;" also "Thou wilt show me the path of life: in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for ever more."

We being the temple of God can not have any agreement with idols, wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.

INGRATITUDE

"But where are the nine" (Luke 17:17).

THIS QUESTION asked by the Savior, was called forth by an experience near the end of his earthly ministry. He was on his way to Jerusalem for the last time. As he approached a village, ten unfortunate sufferers of that loathsome disease leprosy, called unto him, "Jesus, Master, have mercy upon us." At once the Savior responded, "Go and show yourselves to the priests;" which was another way of saying, "If you have enough faith in me to obey me you shall be cured." And this is just what happened. And as they went "they were healed." Then followed that which gives the story its moral significance. One of the ten realizing the change affected, sought Jesus again. Filled with deep gratitude he fell at his feet and expressed his thankfulness. The sight of this man showing appreciation caused the Master to ask the question, "But where are the nine?" Although he asked this question he did not forget the one, and he said to him, "Arise, and go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole."

That ingratitude exists there can be no doubt. It not only is a fact; it is a disagreeable fact. More than this, it is a bitter fact, about as bitter as is to be met with in life; and consider its extent. In the story ten were benefited, yet by their failure to return and show thankfulness, nine of the ten revealed the basest ingratitude to him who showered upon them his love, his goodness, his power. One showed gratitude; nine showed ingratitude. The ratio is high—nine to one. Does this rate hold in life today? Who can say?

One thing, however, is certain: all know that ingratitude is widespread. Where there is one who expresses gratitude there are many more who never so express themselves. Many accept life's blessings merely as a matter of course and thus suggest the question, "But where are the nine?"

Let us ask ourselves the question, "Am I grateful?" We not only know the blessings that have been showered upon us, but we also know that every one has been given by God through his grace. Do we appreciate the gift of his Son, Jesus the Christ? Are we thankful for life, and food, and raiment, and shelter? Do we belong to the one, or do we belong to the nine? "Where are the nine?"

Paul gives us this advice, let us follow it: "Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." And then when the question, "but where are the nine?" is asked; it will not refer to us.

FEAR

FEAR IS the expectation of defeat, injury, or loss. We constantly stand before the wall of the future, and our imaginations picture the other side of it as filled with disasters and catastrophes: but should we boldly peer through the ever-opening doors, knowing that God is there—because the only place he can not be found is in our fears—we shall find abundance, peace, love, joy, a land flowing with milk and honey.

BEAUTY IN PERFECTION

A POET speaking of the beautiful things in nature, and referring to the flowers, said, "They are God's thoughts in bloom." Now if the natural things are so wonderfully beautiful, what will this world be like when the kingdom of God is established, Christ be in full control, and peace and righteousness shall reign eternally?

MARTHA

Dear Lord, so many times I long to walk
 Apart with thee, and hold communion sweet;
So often I would gladly rest awhile,
 Like Mary, at thy feet.
But there is always work for me to do—
 The busy round of care that has no end:
I have so many, Lord, who lean on me—
 So many I must tend.
So in my busy passing to and fro,
 I pray thee help me keep within my heart
A quiet place that toiling, I still may Commune with thee apart.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

RESURRECTION OF the dead means that when Christ comes the dead in Christ shall come out of their graves. Those who are faithful unto death, will be raised to everlasting life, and those who are not faithful unto death, will be cast into the lake of fire. Christ will come like a thief in the night for the children of God. So all those who are living and looking for him to come, should always be on the watch. How terrible it would be if Christ should come and not find God's children looking for him. Christ was the first to be raised to immortailty, therefore was the first fruits of them that slept (1 Cor. 15:20).

After we have learned the word of God, and believed it, we must be baptized into Christ to be raised on the wonderful day of the resurrection. Some people think we all go to heaven when we die, but if that were so, there would be no need of a resurrection.

The faithful ones are to be kings and priests in God's kingdom, and Christ will be king over all.

A Paper Representing The Church of God

Devoted to the Exposition and Defence of "the Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ"--Acts 8:12

VOLUME 73 CLEVELAND, OHIO, MARCH 22nd, 1921. NUMBER 12

It's You

If you want to work in the kind of a church
Like the kind of a church you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike.

You'll only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing that's really new;
It's a knock at youself when you knock your church;
It isn't the church: it's YOU.

Real churches aren't made by men afraid
Lest somebody else goes ahead;
When every one works and no one shirks,
You can raise a church from the dead.

And if while you make your personal stake
Your neighbor can make one, too,
Your church will be what you want to see
It isn't your church: it's YOU. Bible Standard, New Zealand.

BROTHER JUDD'S LETTER

To Rev. H. W. Frost. Director China Inland Mission, Princeton, N. J.

DEAR FRIEND:

WITH REFERENCE to your post card of 7th I note you now say that it will be "many a day" before you can reply to my letter.

Perhaps under the circumstances it may be as well for me not to press for a reply. I cannot help saying, however, that I though my last letter put the issue so clearly that it would obviate the necessity of occupying much of your time.

I should have thought, too, that any one who had read the tract "The Claims of Conditional Immortality" (which I sent you), and could definitely say that you had "long been familiar with the arguments," but considered them to be "fallacious" and "contrary to the true meaning of the word of God," would have no difficulty in pointing out the error or errors in a concise and telling manner. It is unfortunate that stress of work is so often the cause of preventing these expected replies coming to fruition, for a clear statement might help many who may be perplexed with regard to these matters, which you admit to be important by the public attitude you adopt.

We are exceedingly sorry to read in the press of the terrible distress in China, and special contributions are being solicited in the churches here. If at any time you feel inclined to reply to my letter I shall be pleased, but I do not wish to draw you into a discussion you do not care to enter; but when public statements are made and published in the press any member of the audience has a claim on the speaker to verify his assertions.

Yours faithfully,

R. H. JUDD.

MR. FROST'S LETTER

DEAR MR. JUDD:

IN LOOKING over, last evening, the pamphlet you sent me entitled "The Claims of Conditional Immortality." I came across at the end of the pamphlet, the note which you had put there, and addressed to me. At the earliest moment I sent you a reply.

The enclosed card will give you the "Doctrinal Basis" of the China Inland Mission. This is the equivalent of article of the "Principles and Practice" which all members of the Mission are required to endorse, and hold to. The interpretation of the "Basis" as defined by Mr. Taylor are of the entirely evangelical kind. This includes the lost condition of all men. Their need of a new birth and the conscious and unending separation from God on the part of the lost. "China's Millions" being the organ of the mission represents the views of the "Doctrinal Basis."

I have read the pamphlet above referred to and the various leaflets you added to it. Allow me to thank you for sending me these; at the same time allow me to say that I have long been familiar with the arguments set forth, and that these no more impress me now than they have done in the past. To my mind the whole process of argument is fallacious, hence contrary to the true meaning of the word of God. I cannot but express my regret that you have come under the influence of this doctrine which has wrought so much harm to many souls.

With best wishes to yourself and Mrs. Judd, believe me your sincere friend,

H. W. FROST.

BROTHER JUDD'S REPLY

DEAR MR. FROST:

PLEASE READ carefully, and if there is any unscriptural statement please point it out to me in a direct manner.

I have seen statements of yours in public regarding "Conditional Immortality" that are, to say the least, uncharitable and serious from one in your position. Many men of equal piety and knowledge of God's word to yourself, believe the teaching as thoroughly in accord with Scripture language and even some who write against it admit this. I would say, be careful that you do not take sides against God in this important matter.

Is it true, or not true, that China's Millions" even in its editorials does not in any way represent China Inland Mission teaching. Is a person, generally speaking, correct in assuming that the members of the Mission are on the whole in accordance with its doctrines set forth in the pages of "China's Millions?" An answer to these questions either by letter or through "China's Millions" will much oblige.

Yours very sincerely,

R. H. JUDD.

BROTHER JUDD'S FINAL RESPONSE

DEAR MR. FROST:

YOURS OF the 21st duly received. I thank you for your kindness in replying to my communication, but I must say I am disappointed that you fail to state "in a direct manner" as asked, where you consider "The Claims of Conditional Immortality to be unscriptural.

It is not enough, to tell an enquirer who earnestly desires to obtain and maintain the truth, that certain lines of thought or reasoning are fallacious. He should be shown how, where, and why they deserve to be so classed, and in a sufficiently clear and forceful way, to be convincing. I first met Conditional Immortality teaching in Moody's Institute in Chicago, about 27 years ago. I am well aware that it is not the teaching of that institution, and owing to my early training I was naturally much opposed to it at first, and for some years endeavored to oppose it. The doctrine, however, gradually took firm hold upon my heart and my intellect, by its close adherance to the interpretation of Scripture, in its natural and ordinary sense.

Now I am sure that you and I are fully agreed that the wonderful verse, John 3:16, is as clear a statement as can be found anywhere in the Scripture: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting (or eternal) life." What is the plain grammatical import of such language? If it does not express the meaning of the original, then surely the translators should have chosen other terms to convey the meaning intended. But the translation of this wonderful verse has never, to my knowledge, been called in question. Then what is the true teaching of the passage? What else can it be than that those who believe on the Son of God should have everlasting life and those who do not, should perish. One can quote many such passages such as: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life: "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." In each of these, eternal life is based upon conditions. Take another (we might indefinitely add to the list): "To men who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and incorruption (God will render) eternal life." Who can dispute that here immortality, or incorruption, is granted upon conditions? If I am wrong in taking these passages in their plain grammatical sense in which they are translated, will you kindly tell me why I am wrong, and on whose authority! I have honestly sought for definite information on these important themes from such men as Rev. Dr. R. A. Torrey, Dr. Anderson, Dr. Anderson Berry, Lea Wilson and others including my own father; and have failed to get replies which when placed alongside the word of God, harmonize with it. The fact that neither they nor yourself are able to express your belief in simple Bible language, is to my mind the strongest proof against you. The Bible distinctly says the wicked "shall perish," "be destroyed," "be consumed," "be blotted out," etc., etc., and that those only who do the will of God shall "abide" or "have everlasting life." Your statement that the final condition of the lost "is conscious and unending separation from God" cannot be found inside the Bible, and is an apt illustration of the inability of "orthodoxy" so called to express its belief in Bible language.

Surely you must see, what is plainly seen by others, that unending consciousness necessarily involves unending or "everlasting life." It is impossible therefore to harmonize such a belief as yours with the Scripture above quoted. In all humbleness of mind I beg you to reconsider your position. My adoption of Conditional Immortality has cost me heavily in many ways, but I am glad to bear it. It has made my Bible a new book, given me a higher conception of God himself and a deeper reverence and love for his word, and I would not go back to my old beliefs for $250,000. I feel I have a Christianity that is fully in accord with reason and fact, a gospel that appeals to both my head and my heart, and places my feet upon a rock that all the assaults of infidelity, theosophy, spiritualism, Roman Catholicism, and the hundred and one creeds of today who so magnify man and belittle the great and mighty God, cannot shake.

It is news to me that the doctrine of the Trinity is a basis of membership in the China Inland Mission. I was well aware many, indeed most of the members were trinitarians; but was not aware they were required to endorse it.

If one doctrine is more clear than another in the word of God, it is that "The Lord thy God is one God, beside him there is no God"; for "I am God and there is none else." Here again to express your belief you are forced to deny the most unambiguous statements that were ever penned by mortal man and inspired by the spirit of God.

At the great Baptist Convention held in Toronto in the month of July, 1920, Rev. T. T. Shields of Jarvis Street Baptist Church said that "Jesus Christ is the only wise God." I wrote to him pointing out that "Christ" means anointed, and therefore the statement carries its own refutation. By making Jesus Christ "the only wise God," he practically de-thrones God, at whose right hand the Scriptures assert Christ to be.

My letter is already too long. I beg of you to take no offence at my letter, but to earnestly seek God's guidance in prayer. Your position is a responsible one. Many will accept your statements without question, hence you need more care than others in what you teach.

Please excuse such a letter from one who is your junior in years and who respects you very highly for the sacrifice and love you have sought to exhibit in your long career of your missionary endeavor. God's word is to me as my daily food. Shut up as I am owing to my deafness, my Bible and my Concordance are my chief delights, and it is only for the advancement of truth that I put these matters before you.

I am sending under separate cover "Human Destiny" by my valued personal friend, J. R. Norrie. Although I know you are a busy man I feel I am justified in asking you as a friend, to read it carefully.

With regards, I remain, yours sincerely,

R. H. JUDD.

Hobbies

A HOBBY is an idea or conviction which takes possession of an individual's mind to the exclusion, largely of all other objects. The man or woman who rides a hobby, sees certain things through colored and distorted glasses, and which are not as they appear to him. We all ride hobbies more or less, some of us being much more addicted to the exercise than others, but all engage in it chiefly for their own pleasure and amusement, of from a conviction that it is a duty which they must perform.

THE JOSEPHITE HOBBY

Some hobbies are quite harmless, and do not injure or endanger the rider in any way; and again others are quite dangerous, and bar their rider from hope of life in the ages to come. Those who ride the Josephite hobby are in this class: they have rejected the only begotten Son of God, and have accepted in his stead a son of Joseph. They are "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world." The story of Jesus as related in Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, reveal a degree of love for his Father and pride in the fact that he was really and truly begotten by God, never before nor since equalled in the history of the world. These gospels abound in expressions of tender love for and confidence in, God; and the proud and comforting thought that the great God himself was really and truly his Father, seemed to encourage and sustain him in all his trials and sufferings. Then what shall we say of the man who in our Lord's absence, seeks to tear down and destroy that truth of which he was so proud? Not for this world, and all that therein is, would I be found riding the Josephite hobby. All such must surely answer for their sin in the great day of reckoning.

THE ANGLO-ISRAELITE HOBBY

But let us leave the Josephite to a just and merciful God, and examine for a few moments the Anglo-Israel hobby. This one is, I am happy to say, much less harmful than the last. The riders are mostly nice people, who see and understand the truth fairly well, but in some unaccountable way have gotten the idea that the Jews, common to all countries, belong to the two tribes of Judah, and that the ten tribes have been lost since their dispersion; and millions of dollars have been spent and tons of literature printed in the effort to prove that Great Britain and her colonies are the lost ten tribes. Is it not strange, almost beyond belief, that men may be normal upon all other questions, and yet fall down and worship such an empty idol as this? It is utterly contrary to reason and Scripture. He who believes that many of the precious promises made to Israel (the fulfilment of which is yet future) have already been fulfilled in the history of Great Britain, surely fails to correctly understand the purpose of God, as revealed in the promise to Israel.

As for the whereabouts of the ten tribes, the word declares that the whole house of Israel, the twelve tribes, would be scattered among all people, sifted as corn among the nations; and it was done. Furthermore the word says that "among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the soul of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee a trembling heart . . . and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee: and thou shalt fear day and night, and thou shalt have none assurance of thy life" (Deut. 28:65, 67). This message was sent by God to the whole house of Israel, not the ten tribes only; and it was done. This is their exact condition today, and has ever been their condition since they were scattered. The ten tribes lost? Why, my dear brother, they stand today in the presence of the whole world a living an unanswerable evidence of the truth of the Bible. In every town and city, in every nation and country on earth, we find him. Israel is not lost, and never has been. We have him right here among us; but not one Hebrew in a thousand can trace his genealogy, or tell from which tribe he sprang, but God knows, and when the scattered ones have been gathered he will separate them and assign to each tribe its portion.

Therefore all, except, perhaps those who are blinded by their hobby, must see that the ten tribes are in all countries where they went when scattered; but the time to gather them is at hand, and even now may be heard "the noise of a great shaking, as the dry bones of the house of Israel come together, bone to his bone," and very soon now they will stand upon their feet "an exceeding great army."

The assumption that Israel has been gathered, and that God's promises to make them a great nation, and a company of nations, that shall possess the gates of their enemies, have reached their fulfilment in the history of Great Britain and her provinces, and that the people of Great Britain are actually the ten tribes of Israel, seems to me too childish to merit or command for one moment the serious consideration of full grown men and women, and especially those who are familiar with the purpose of God as revealed in the gospel message.

But why waste precious time, talents and money in the fruitless endeavor to prove that Great Britain is Israel? God knows where the ten tribes are. Would it not be better, and more pleasing in his sight, to spend our energies and money in the effort to spread the glad tidings of the kingdom, and trust him to find the ten tribes when the set time to favor them, and use them, arrives?

The Next War

IN THE next war, if we have one, the safest place will be at the front. There will be no necessity for compulsory military service. The difficult thing will be to keep people at home and keep the home fires burning.

Since the armistice as vouched for by the French General Maitrot, France has perfected a projectile so powerful that a dozen will wipe out a city the size of Berlin.

Nor will this militarist admit the Germans have been idle. They have invented an airplane which will fly from the Rhine to Paris in three hours and annihilate the French capital, no resistance being possible. At a height of three miles in the air a bomber can attain "remarkable accuracy." Furthermore, it is now possible with air projectiles containing poison gas to asphyziate entire districts. The Krupps have perfected a great soundless gun. "It will be a revolution in the art of war," says General Maitrot, "if the position of the enemy's batterys can be no longer gauged by sound." The new French bombs are of a power to destroy surface vessels on the sea, no matter how formidable. One of these bombs exploded within 100 feet of a cruiser would infallibly sink it. To make sure of it this French bomb weighs a ton and is twice as large as is needed to sink a warship.

"The next war," General Maitrot predicts cheerfully, "will hold as many surprises on land as on sea, and whoever masters the air will rule the earth." The next big war will blot out nations instead of armies as heretofore. Early in the struggle the Germans, for instance, would obliterate Paris, and the French wipe out Berlin. While the armies were digging in, finding safety for themselves in underground caves, the defenceless noncombatants, the men, women, and children behind the lines, would be massacred at will. Soon the armies would have no support. The safest place would be at the front.

We only know, and that darkly, of a few of the new agents of destruction the military nations now possess. We can easily believe they have more terrible inventions locked and guarded in secret places than the world dreams of. The perfection of war means suicide by the wholesale. Civilization will either have to banish war or be destroyed by it.—Selected by Mrs. G. B. SPRINKLE.

Death in Adam; Life in Christ

WILLIAM H. RIGEWAY

Funeral services for the late William H. Rigeway, who died Friday morning at his home, 306 East Fifth Street, were held from the family home at 10 o'clock this morning. A large number of sorrowing friends attended the services. The death of Mr. Rigeway removes from the community a highly respected and dearly loved citizen. Death was due to a complication of diseases from which he had been suffering the past year. Mr. Rigeway although practically blind for a good many years, was always congenial and pleasant. Although impaired of sight he frequently came to town alone and was able more or less to transact business for himself. He made frequent trips to the Republican office and would recognize members of the force by voices and was able to call them by their first name. He was born in Knox County, Indiana, and lived to be 67 years of age. He was married August 8, 1880, to Miss Mattie Richards, at Parsons, Kansas. Surviving is his wife, two sons, A. W. of Tulsa, and W. F. of Denver, and one daughter, Miss Dora Rigeway, of Tulsa. Five sisters all residing in Indiana and four grandchildren also survive. Burial was in Fairview Cemetery.—Newspaper Report.

SONG BOOKS OUT OF PRINT

DEAR BROTHER BROWN:

Will you please say to the brethren through The Restitution, not to send any more orders for song books, for the supply has some time ago been exhausted. We have sold in all 2500 books, and still the orders keep coming.

Your brother in patient waiting,

ALMUS ADAMS.

Help the Helping Fund

Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble—in the day of evil, margin (Psa. 41:1).

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

THE TERMS OF FORGIVENESS

"IF WE confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousneess." What a blessed thing it is that we have one who is our Redeemer, even the Son of God. But to have our sins forgiven we must "confess our sins" which also implies a faithful attempt to walk in perfectness. "Shall we sin that grace may abound? God forbid." We are to walk in the spirit.

Tribulation

SOME TIME ago, in conversation with a skeptic in the city of Toledo, Ohio, the question was asked: "Why is it that when people become religious they immediately begin to feel sorry for themselves?" The question was relevant, for it is an undeniable fact that many Christians and believers of the truth, assume that sad and sorrowful and self-pitying attitude of mind. We have recently left a religious community in which this doleful attitude was the rule rather than the exception, even when they sang:

> Why should thy people now be sad?
> None have such reason to be glad,
> As reconciled to God.

they sang it with tears in their voices and sorrow stamped on their features. One involuntarily thought of the Arabs who never smile and whose songs and music are always in the melancholy strain, which is a fulfilment of Isaiah 24:8: "The mirth of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth, the joy of the harp ceaseth."

There comes to mind at the moment the recollection of a good sister who was so extreme in this respect that it was never safe to visit her without a good supply of handkerchiefs to staunch the flow of tears. This sister would have been very angry if she had been told that she really enjoyed this weeping; nevertheless such was actually the case: and paradoxical as it may seem, she was never happy unless she was miserable, and nothing would have made her more unhappy than to rob her of her complaint. What a disappointment it will be for such an one when "sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

We have found by careful analysis that this state of mind is caused by a false interpretation of the passages of Scripture referring to tribulation, such as Acts 14:22 and similar passages. The apostle in this passage states that it is through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom of God. Some, on account of this passage, make a virtue out of tribulation and are always looking for it, and you may be sure are seldom disappointed. A favorite expression is, "The heavier the cross the more glorious the crown." And so these extremists weep and wail their way through probation, bathing themselves in tears with the firm conviction that "they that sow in tears shall reap in joy."

There is no denying the fact stated by the apostle that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God. But the question arises, What kind of tribulation? Let us see.

There are three kinds of tribulation to which the believer of the truth of God is subject: First, those that are the common heritage of humanity; pain, sickness, and death. God's children are not exempt from these, but let us not think that every time we get a headache that it is an act of God to bring us nearer the kingdom. More likely it is an act of our own in violating some of nature's laws, and is probably more of a hindrance to us in our journey to the kingdom than a help.
